HEIRESS ELOPES WITH HER HANDSOME CHAUFFEUR

Iris van Suydam Gives Up Fortune and Position to Be Wife of Poor Man.

Giving up fortune and position to become the wife of a poor man, Iris van Suydam today announced that she has married her chauffeur, Tom McGuire. It will be remembered that only a few days ago Miss van Suydam's fiance, Richard Prentiss, eloped with the daughter of his washerwoman.

"I love Tom, that explains everything," said the former queen of the four hundred today. "He is a real man, and that is what any girl wants, whether she be rich or poor. I will try and make a good wife to him."

When interviewed, Mrs. McGuire was engaged in cooking her first dinner in a tiny little apartment in Harlem. The couple will be forced to live on the husband's earnings, as the van Suydam fortune is in control of the bride's uncle, who has completely disinherited her for what he considers her rash marriage.

YOUNG MILLIONAIRE WEDS WASHERWOMAN'S DAUGHTER

Nothing in years has so astounded New York society as the marriage this morning of Richard Prentiss, heir to the Prentiss millions, to the daughter of a washerwoman—Shamrock O'Day. The sudden wedding is all the more surprising in view of the fact that only a few days ago Mr. Prentiss's engagement to Iris van Suydam was formally announced.

"It is simply a case of real love breaking class barriers," said Mr Prentiss when questioned this morning. "Shamrock is the girl of my dreams. What matter if she lacks superficial culture? That is not half so important as genuine womanly worth. I am sure we will be very happy."

Mr. Prentiss's mother and sister could not be seen this morning, and it is reported they are greatly broken up over the affair.

The marriage, it is said, is the culmination of a secret romance which began some months ago, when the former Miss O'Day met the young millionaire as she was delivering a basket at his home. Since that time engaged to Miss

To Exhibitors Who

A Sensational Offer Which Is Backed Up With the Resources of the Strongest Company in the Business

Cards on the table, face up!

Prove to me that you are actually operating at a loss and I will authorize Universal's nearest representative to cut film rentals enough to enable you to at least break even!

This offer does not apply to any exhibitor who is breaking even or making a profit.

It is intended only to prevent theatre failures.

Every producer in the business knows that some of you are losing money. For a long time your complaints were taken with a grain of salt, because some of you complain all the time, even when you are cleaning up, just to hammer rental prices down.

But there is no denying now that your complaints, in many cases, are justified and true.

Therefore, regardless of whether you are now using Universal pictures or whether you have never used them, you can get them at a price which will stop your losses the instant you prove to our representative that there is a loss.

The best houses in the country have discovered the amazing improvement in Universal pictures. They know we have improved our stories, they know we use the best settings in the world. They finally realize that we have the best photography and the cleverest lighting. And what's more—

We've cut the waste from thousands to hundreds, from hundreds to dollars and from dollars to pennies. We can make better pictures than anybody else for less money than anybody else—and we're doing it every day!

Never in the history of the industry did any company produce such a STEADY SUPPLY OF EXCELLENT PICTURES. Never were such fine pictures sold on such a close margin of profit.

CARL LAEMMLE, President

Are Losing Money

Prove to Me That You Are Really Losing Money and Universal Will Cut Its Prices to Save Your Life

You never needed Universal more than you need it today. And today it makes the bonafide offer outlined above. If other companies follow suit, so much the better. But if they don't, Universal stands back of the proposition with every bit of its resources.

The only exception I make is our million dollar picture "Foolish Wives". I'm going to get every dollar I can for that production because I've GOT to. You need no diagram to show you why.

I don't believe any exhibitor will begrudge paying record prices for the first real million dollar picture in history. Some of the biggest showmen have offered me their theatres on my own terms as an appreciation of what "Foolish Wives" will mean to the whole moving picture art.

But outside of that one picture, I say again:— Show the nearest Universal representative your books. Prove to him that you are in bad shape during these present times, and I will authorize him to make a deal that will pull you out of your hole and at least let you live.

Understand clearly, the Universal Company, although the strongest in the business today, is feeling the terrific pressure of the present times. We are in exactly the same boat as many of you are in. Times are tough. But we are probably better able to finance ourselves through troublous times than you are. That is why I take upon myself the burden of this offer.

I mean this from the bottom of my heart, and there is not one single string to my offer!

My cards are on the table.

Shoot!

UNIVERSAL FILM M'f'g Company

WHAT DO YOU BID FOR

But Universal's MILLION DOLLAR PICTURE is so totally beyond the class of any production ever before attempted that it must be handled in a revolutionary manner.

Universal can NEVER GET ITS MONEY BACK on this stupendous super-production. It has already cost so much that by the time we have exploited it and have made the prints WE WILL HAVE TO TAKE IN TWO AND ONE HALF MILLIONS TO BREAK EVEN!

I could take in MORE MONEY THAN THIS by road-showing "Foolish Wives". But there are two powerful arguments against such a method. First, road-showing is a slow process. Second, I consider it unfair to you exhibitors, and therefore poor policy, to make regular moving picture theatres wait for months and months, and maybe years, after release date before showing the screen's greatest effort.

I say I want this. But I can't afford to sacrifice a million dollar picture—the only one ever made—to accomplish it.

Therefore, I can't go through with it unless you meet me more than half way.

Some of the greatest exhibitors in the world have made handsome offers for first run of "Foolish Wives". But, as handsome as those offers have been, THEY DO NOT COVER THAT PART OF THE NEGATIVE AND POSITIVE COST CHARGEABLE AGAINST THEIR CITIES.

Better still, such men as Tom Moore of Washington, Felt Brothers of Philadelphia, Ruben & Finkelstein of St. Paul and Minneapolis, and others, have offered me their theatres ON ANY TERMS I SEE FIT TO MAKE, because they say the industry owes this tribute to Universal! It is a great spirit, a new spirit, a spirit which will inspire Universal to reach greater heights in the future than it ever hoped for before.

"FOOLISH WIVES"?

Other exhibitors have said that I will be justified in asking terms that have never been dreamed of before. One man said, "Your company has done a thing no other concern ever dared to do. You are entitled to recognition for this. You are entitled to the very highest limit every exhibitor can give you."

It was this exhibitor who suggested that I ask you to make your very highest bid for "Foolish Wives".

Will you do it? Will you smash all precedent and tell me the very limit you can stand in order to have the honor of being the first to present the first million dollar production in your city?

Will you demonstrate that my policy of giving moving picture theatres first chance is the right policy?

With so much at stake I naturally reserve the right to accept or reject your bid; in either event, I am going to receive it in the best of faith, just as I ask you to accept this announcement.

White Hands

Will Set New Box-Office Records

A nest of vice on the edge of Sahara, a beautiful girl surrounded by leering men who rule friend and foe by the power of an iron hand, and a pretty little desert waif the saviour of all.

This—in a nutshell—is the telegraphic story of "White Hands," the next big Wid Gunning special that will break many box-office records in the New Year.

"White Hands" is "exhibitor's meat"—a clean-up picture that combines every big element that makes for box-office success. To neglect booking it now is to pass up one of the biggest money-makers ever produced. Seven good reasons why "White Hands" will be a sensational success are listed right here. Read 'em carefully:

Story by C. Gardner Sullivan.
Directed by Lambert Hillyer.

Wid Gunning's Next Big Money Maker

A Drama of White Heat Passion

Exhibitors right now are combing the market for big pictures that enable them to clean up a nest-egg and wipe off losses from others that didn't "go over."

"White Hands" will do it. It is the story of a woman alone in a nest of crime on the edge of Sahara. Romance, mystery, melodrama, thrills and red-blooded action in every reel—the very elements that draw dollars at the box-office and bring wild bursts of applause from every class of patron.

Art and refinement meet in R-C Pictures

"PLEASE TELL ME A STORY," is a craving as old as the human race. From the days of the ancient minstrel to the modern writer of fiction, the successful teller of tales has had the ear of the King and the applause of the people.

Centuries of authors, actors and painters of pictures have carried a fascinated world away on the wings of fancy to scenes of adventure, of love, intrigue and daring. And then came moving pictures, the greatest achievement of the story teller's art.

Today, the age-old craving, "Tell me a story," is greater than ever. To supply this need with sparkling, absorbing, wholesome entertainment is the sole aim and ambition of R-C Pictures.

We have set for ourselves a standard of quality that demands all the best there is in stories, in acting, in directing and artistic motion picture photography.

To help us in realizing these ideals we have employed the talents of such famous artists as Pauline Frederick, Sessue Hayakawa and Doris May, and the versatile experience of such able directors as Louis J. Gasnier, Wm. Christy Cabanne and Colin Campbell.

Already such successes as "The Stealers," "The First Born," "The Foolish Age," "Kismet," "Turn in the Road," and "Possession" bear the distinguishing mark of

This is the youthful story of a girl who from childhood constantly "gives up" to her younger sister. Then comes the tragedy of learning her lover prefers "the baby." "TWO KINDS OF WOMEN"

Coming home, at her father's untimely death, to take charge of his enormous rattle interests, Judith Sanford (Pauline Frederick) finds herself surrounded by treacherous and avaricious interests who plan to despoil her. A few staunch adherents, loyal to their old employer, unflinchingly stand by. Fraud, brute force and flagrant villainy run the gamut of their evil powers, culminating into superb action all the audacious courage, all the sweetness and culture of perfect womanhood which this talented star so well knows how to delineate.

R-C Week —February 5th to 12th

This is a special occasion arranged to acquaint all lovers of the silent drama with the wholesome, magnetic entertainment afforded by R-C Pictures.

Make it a point to see one or more of these new, cleverly written, skillfully acted and beautifully photographed R-C Pictures during R-C Week.

"FIVE DAYS TO LIVE"
Starring Sessue Hayakawa

Recognized critics state there is no more finished dramatic actor for the screen today than Sessue Hayakawa. In his latest picture, "Five Days to Live," he draws the veil from that deep, spiritual, fatalistic love that Eastern stoicism completely shadows from Occidental eyes. This picture is a peep into the soul of the ancient East.

a Mercanton production

"SILENT YEARS"
directed by Louis J. Gasnier

One of the most delightful books of recent years is Harriet T. Comstock's "Mam'selle Jo." It is a story in which mother love, touching the supreme heights of sacrifice and devotion, stands as a rock against which the evil forces of malice and slander hurl themselves to their own destruction. "Silent Years" is a thrilling dramatization of "Mam'selle Jo."

"EDEN AND RETURN"
starring Doris May

Dainty Doris May, who delivered a landslide of mirth in "The Foolish Age," repeats with a vengeance in "Eden and Return." For sheer fun, marvelously ingenious situations, the snappiest kind of collicking, riotous action, this comedy offers an evening of uproarious hilarity that you willingly will go far to see.

UNFOLDMENT

A GEORGE KERN PRODUCTION

A fine audience feature of genuine entertainment value, "The Unfoldment" is one of the out-standing pictures of the year for the biggest and smallest theatres.

Good acting, little touches of wistfulness and flashes of fine humor intensify the emotional appeal of its dramatic story, wherein a beautiful girl makes this old world a better place in which to live.

"The Unfoldment" is superb in its inspirational climax and has that quality which creates its own advertising by word of mouth.

Your second day will be even bigger than the first. A truly big picture in every respect.

All right, Mr. Quigley!

We hasten to accept, for our part, your suggestion to lay before the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers our audited circulation in New York State and your recently published report for the State (compiled, we assume, from a recent circulation round-up by your field solicitors).

But why talk only of New York State or any one State or City? The A. M. P. A. members are interested in NATIONAL circulation, are they not? All of our advertisers are: we assume that yours must be. So we suggest that an ENTIRE audit of the circulations of the Exhibitors Herald and Motion Picture News be made.

But our audit, Mr. Quigley, has already been made. It is in the hands of every member of the A. M. P. A.

It was made by the Audit Bureau of Circulations, formed and maintained by the leading advertisers of the country for the very purpose you now suggest. Included in this large association are such advertisers in the motion picture field as Westinghouse, General Electric, Dupont, American Radiator, National Terra Cotta, etc. (all of whom advertise in Motion Picture News and not in Exhibitors Herald).

The prominent national advertisers got together seven years ago and formed this Audit Bureau of Circulations so that they could get the exact truth about circulations and not have to rely upon publishers' statements like the one you have just made for New York State. They employ expert investigators and have all the requisite machinery. Their reports are made for all reputable magazines and accepted by all advertisers and advertising agencies. They are standard.

Why, may we ask, do you not submit your circulation to the Audit Bureau of Circulations? Why haven't you done so before?

These are frank questions that deserve a frank reply. We only ask them because you have led yourself into the position of forcing them from us, and, it seems to us, forcing yourself to answer them.

SPECIAL CAST IN

HAIL THE WOMAN

(FIRST NATIONAL)

A great combination of talent in a great screen play. The story was written by C. Gardner Sullivan and was directed by John Griffith Wray, under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, with an all-star cast. A gripping drama of American life that will prove a big draw. Length 7,460 feet.

"Hail the Woman."

Hail Thomas H. Ince! Hail C. Gardner Sullivan! Hail director Wray! Hail Theodore Roberts and Florence Vidor, Tully Marshall, Madge Bellamy, Lloyd Hughes, Charles Meredith, Edward Martindel and that wonderful mother, Gertrude Claire.

This is undoubtedly Ince's greatest play. It shows painstaking care in production all along the line. The actors and actresses were chosen with extreme care and there isn't an over-acted nor overdrawn scene in the eight reels. There isn't an exaggerated character in the picture either. Theodore Roberts has never done a finer piece of work than his Oliver Beresford, a grim, hard, uncharitable, old bigot, who terrified his family with his over-piousness and narrow-minded ideas.

Florence Vidor wins one's sympathy at the start as Judith Beresford, the girl who wonders "what God has against women," who finally leaves her tyrannical father's roof and makes her way in the world alone.

Gertrude Claire gives a splendid interpretation of Mrs. Beresford, the self-effacing wife, and Lloyd Hughes as the other member of the Beresford family. David plays the role of the son with a keen understanding.

Tully Marshall also scores as an uncouth, greedy, "Odd jobs man," and the step-father of little Nan, secretly married to David, but who is forced to keep the knowledge to herself. This role was very well played by Madge Bellamy. Her Nan Higgins will long be remembered because of the exquisite shading of a difficult emotional role.

The balance of the cast, even down to little four-year-old Muriel Dana, was exceptionally good and each contributed no small part toward the success of "Hail the Woman," as exquisite screen entertainment.

The picture has unlimited possibilities for exploitation. It is timely, in that it has a Christmas Eve celebration at a Settlement House, where children gather and sing and are given little gifts. The song "Still Night, Holy Night" plays an important part of this scene. Many suggestions for inexpensive prologues are presented in the picture's unreeling.

The story deals with Oliver Beresford, a wealthy, bigoted New England farmer, whose creed is "Men and their sons first."

David Beresford, the son, is studying for the ministry, much against his will. He is secretly married to Nan Higgins, stepdaughter of a villainous and worthless character about town. Nan is about to become a mother when David returns home for a short vacation. The elder Beresford learns of her condition and of his son's responsibility. She, however, in fear of David's father, does not announce that they are married and Beresford buys off Nan's stepfather with a check for $1,000. She runs away and the child is born in a poorly-furnished room in New York City. David remains silent while she suffers through want and poverty trying to support her baby. Judith, following a visit to a nearby cottage one evening, is likewise driven from home. While distributing Christmas gifts from a Settlement House she accidentally comes to Nan's room, finds out the truth and cares for her baby after Nan dies. Judith returns to her father's house and demands that David clear Nan's name and recognize his child. It is on the day that David is to be ordained a missionary to foreign lands. The baby toddles up to the pulpit and David, before the assembled congregation, confesses his sin and recognizes his child. There is a dramatic scene in the home just prior to this when Mrs. Beresford defies her iron-willed husband —when he again attempts to turn Judith out of the house—and declares "If she goes, I go with her."

Throughout the latter part of the story there is a very pleasing little love romance between Judith and Richard Stuart, a clean-cut New York youth.

JACKIE Takes all New

ARTISTRY AT ITS HEIGHT

"Every spectator in the Strand cheered and laughed. Jackie is quite in a class by himself in the film world. The simple realism of Jackie's art is everything. The consummate facility with which this child submerged himself, his fidelity to life and the everlasting naturalness of him annoyed me. His artistry is at its height in this picture."—Joseph Mulvaney in the New York American.

NEVER SO DAZZLING

"Jackie is a pleasing performer and the director has been careful to use him for the most part in stunts which are perfectly familiar to the boy. But Jackie has never seemed so dazzling since he appeared without the leadership of Charlie Chaplin. In "The Kid" the boy was a little new moon."—New York World.

HIS BEST PICTURE

"Jackie proves himself the only genuine child star, going through the important game called acting with the earnestness it calls for. He plays with unspoiled naturalness and a variety of moods. 'My Boy' has far greater pretentions than his preceding vehicle and actually gets somewhere."—New York Herald.

JACKIE IS REMARKABLE

HIS VERY BEST

"Jackie Coogan holds forth at the Strand this week in a big way. He returns the same lovable little chap because he has not yet learned any acting tricks. But he is more entertaining than in the past, because he has a better chance.

"This picture, 'My Boy,' has a more sentimental appeal than did his other pictures, for in it he is not only the mischievous, prankish youngster acting with disarming naturalness, but, as the saying goes, 'He loves and is loved.'

"Indeed, the picture is a triumph not only for the 'leading man,' but as well for the ones who created the story and the one who directed the efforts of this irresistible little genius.

"Jackie himself is truly at the Strand—there except for the power to speak. He lives his part and in it finds expression for his personality. Other children appear on the screen, but they are just children and perform without showing particular individuality. But Jackie is gifted of the gods physically and intellectually and the best that can be wished for him this new year is that he will not be taught 'acting' by us mortals."—New York Globe.

BIGGEST PLAY IN CITY

"The Strand has the outstanding film feature of the week in 'My Boy.' Jackie Coogan's second starring vehicle."—New York Evening World.

A JOYOUS PHOTODRAMA

"Christmas week at the Strand is a joyous affair, because little Jackie Coogan appears there on the screen in his third photoplay and his second starring vehicle. Jackie is a touching little figure as the little immigrant who lands in New York an orphan, his father having died in France, and his mother succumbing to the disease which was raging aboard the ship that brought them to the land of promise. Homeless and hungry Jackie follows a crusty old sea captain. By his lovable personality and his willingness to help in the household duties he wins his way into the stony old heart of the old salt. Adventures aplenty make Jackie's life one of excitement and devoid of monotony. The old sea captain is admirably played by Claude Gillingwater. The production was directed by Victor Heerman and Albert Austin."—New York Evening Telegram.

"'My Boy' is a pleasing, sentimental comedy. It is worth seeing, partly because anything that Jackie Coogan does on the screen is worth seeing, and partly because the boy has more to do personally here than in previous films.

A Round Table Year

We are, as has been stated, warmly in sympathy with the new body, particularly if it accomplishes an affiliation with exhibitor organizations, so that the industry may act with one mind, one voice and united strength in all its outside relations.

That, we are told, is a prime object of the new association.

A letter from Sydney S. Cohen, President of the M. P. T. O. A., published in this issue, indicates that the exhibitor organization welcomes and awaits this affiliation.

Mr. Cohen says he is ready.

And, all in all, the industry seems about to have the unity it so sadly lacks and so urgently needs.

We would hesitate to suggest any further move that would in any way jeopardize this one accomplishment. If the organized branches of the industry can act together in all outside and non-commercial matters—that is a great advance. Perhaps it is all the progress that can be made at present.

But we can't help pointing out what we believe to be a feasible thing, a very urgent thing.

We are told by a prominent up-state exhibitor, a man whose reliability we don't question—that many houses in that section will close if something is not done to help them.

He speaks with no authority for the state organization of exhibitors; but he asks if it is not possible for the exhibitor organization to meet and confer with the new association of producers and distributors.

Assuredly, he says, the latter do not want these theatres to close; a conference might result in reasonable concessions being made which will enable these houses to continue, or at least, to improve temporarily these conditions. And a little figuring might indicate that the producer and distributor might gain from such concessions on the only practical basis that half a loaf is better than none at all. At any rate, such a conference could do no harm, and even if nothing definite at all were done, it might clear the air of distrust and misunderstandings. It might even drive home the obvious but rarely realized fact that producers, distributors and exhibitors are really business partners.

If any progress were made at all in such an initial conference, other states might see fit to follow the lead of New York State. And thus, for the first time, it might be possible for producers, distributors and exhibitors—pardners, any way you regard it—to get together and learn about each other's business needs and limitations.

Never in the entire history of this business has the need been so urgent, the practicability so apparent of a get-together between the three business branches, a cool, courageous honest talk across the table between business men whose fortunes are inevitably and closely interlinked. The world powers have done it—with astonishing results; so have many business associations. It's the crying need of the after-war period.

Why can't this business do it?

So far as the coming year is concerned we can only see sunlight ahead. But the present is a trying one. There's no use disguising the fact. The exhibitor is up against it good and hard. He needs help; and the producer—distributor needs to help him.

A conference is the short cut to all around relief.

William A. Brady

AT this time, when it is undecided just what will be done with the National Association, we take pleasure in expressing our opinion of Wm. A. Brady. He was elected President of the Association at its inception, a difficult and uncertain one by the way. His election was simply due to the fact that he was on outstanding figure at the meeting which, largely because of Mr. Brady's ringing speech, sent the new organization on its way. He didn't want the job; and he hasn't wanted it at every succeeding election. No one else wanted to step into his shoes; that's all. And we repeat what we have said before, that the failures of the Association have been due to the lukewarm activities of the majority of its members; its favorable activities have been largely those of Mr. Brady and a few others. He is warm-hearted and impulsive and he has said things that called for criticism rightly or wrongly. But his round experience in human affairs, his wide acquaintanceship with public men, his likable personality and his hard, sincere work—all these have registered all in all for the good of this industry. Everybody must admit this, and that the National Association after all has sat pretty steadily and sanely upon the deck of this wobbling industrial ship.

Safeguarding Title Rights

D. W. GRIFFITH has seen fit to change, at the last moment, the title of his picture from "The Two Orphans" to "Orphans of the Storm." The story was uncopyrighted. Mr. Griffith has no protection. After spending a large amount of money in production, and after all the advertising his production has had plus the advertising value of the title itself, he felt compelled to make a heavy sacrifice because, with his announcement, other "Two Orphans" pictures were immediately launched upon the market.

"The Three Musketeers" encountered recently the same unfair situation. And there have been numerous such cases before.

The calmest thing that can be said about this practice is that it isn't clean business. It isn't fair play. Mr. Griffith and Mr. Fairbanks will have the sympathy and support of every right thinking man in the business.

There's also a large and ominous side to this matter, as the New York Globe, in an able editorial, points out. Producers will hesitate to make "the greater classics," uncopyrighted as they are. "The fact for public consideration," says the Globe, "is that the present absence of security may be defrauding us of rich, exciting and noble pictures while we are being bored and disgusted with trash."

The Globe proposes this solution: "Exclusive title rights for a limited period on the filing of a satisfactory application should probably be the basis of the safeguard."

Surely something like this can be and must be done in the interests of the industry at large.

Right now the situation is up to the exhibitor.

The trade paper, which is legally construed as a sort of common carrier, cannot refuse the advertisements of the parasitical pictures unless the copy is obviously written to deceive.

We take the occasion, however, to express our editorial opinions.

The exhibitor wants big pictures. Each of the pictures referred to involved a very large, and as always, a speculative risk, upon the part of the producers. If the exhibitor wants others to raise and hazard large sums of money and to invest their abilities and names in this business, he must give them fair play in return.

There is also this warning to give. The Advertising Clubs of the World is a powerful institution, using its machinery everywhere to safeguard honest advertising. Its influence has been used in behalf of "The Three Musketeers" to the end that no misleading advertising be issued to the public. The same influence will undoubtedly be used in behalf of Mr. Griffith's picture.

A Right-About-Face

December 22, 1921.

Mr. Wm. A. Johnston, Editor
Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Johnston:

Permit me to apologize for a frightfully narrow idea I have, until now, always held concerning the NEWS. It was that it was primarily for the use of the big city exhibitor. In today's first mail I received six letters of inquiry, asking for more detailed information anent my "Seeing It Through" article, which you were good enough to use in your December 24th issue. Every one was from a small town. I have changed my mind.

Very truly,

FREDERICK C. HINDS,
Cresco Theatre,
Cresco, Iowa.

We are pleased to print the above letter not merely because it speaks of the small town exhibitor's interest in Motion Picture News, but also because of its reference to the widespread interets among exhibitors in our "Seeing It Through" contest.

A lot of valuable and practical advice is contained in these articles, which come from all types of theatres. Many remain to be published. They are being eagerly read, that we know; and the contest has more than fulfilled the hope we had that it would prove a most constructive step in these times.

The judges and awards will be shortly announced.

Cohen Calls for Concerted Action in Solving Problems of Screen

Would Have All Branches of Industry Unite in 1922 to Remedy Evils

IN a letter addressed to William A. Johnston, editor of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, this week, Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, points out the need of co-operation on the part of all divisions of the motion-picture industry in solving the problems of the screen, calls for some helpful stock taking on the eve of the New Year with a view to effect reduced picture costs, voices a plea for the elimination of profitless advertising, emphasizes once more the influential position of the exhibitor in relation to the screen's public, and concludes with a denunciation of any and all efforts to create a monopoly in any of the branches of the industry. Mr. Cohen's letter to Mr. Johnston follows:

"Dear Sir:

"On the eve of the New Year, permit me to congratulate you on the constructive policy evidenced in recent editorials in your paper. I am satisfied such work, if followed up, will advantage the industry as a whole.

"The work of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America has always been to give the fullest possible measure of protection to the exhibitor and safeguard in every practical way the interests of the entire industry.

"The suggestions you make of lines of co-operation between the different elements of the motion picture business, should be received with favor by all concerned. Looking into the future as the year 1922 approaches, there are many matters of concern to our industry which will require us to present a united front. We must stand against the agencies and the processes formed and designed for the purpose of driving the motion picture theatre out of business.

"Take one of the principal events set down for 1922: the Censorship Referendum in Massachusetts. That affects the entire nation. The people of Massachusetts will vote upon the question of a censor board to handle motion pictures. Already a strong organization has been formed in Massachusetts by those who are opposed to our industry. We must meet that situation there, beat censorship, and in that way strengthen our situation all over the nation. If censorship meets with the favor of the people of Massachusetts, it will give a great impetus to this un-American embargo on motion pictures in the nation.

"Then there are certain interests in New Jersey, Ohio and other states who are advocating all manner of restrictions on the motion picture theatres and have accumulated millions of dollars with which to carry on their propagandas.

"I hope the need for effective defensive organization will appeal to the men of vision among the producers and distributors of motion pictures. We are opposed to all efforts tending to trustify the industry, but we are prepared at all times to co-operate fully with any and all other branches of the industry in defending our common interests against foes from without, as well as in the effort to adjust amicably any differences of opinion which may exist on the inside. We stand always for helpful co-operation. Because of the exhibitors close association with the public and constituting the only outlet for the producers' product, an organization of exhibitors is always essential, first, as a positive measure of protection to the exhibitor and, then to stabilize the industry by checking all menacing tendencies, and securing the necessary measure of public confidence.

"It is of the utmost importance that something definite be done to help all exhibitors during these trying times of depression. Many theatres are closed now and more will close unless the prices of pictures are reduced. Reasonable men in the business must realize that exhibition values must be reduced if the industry is to survive. There may be a few people in the producing division who see a chance to make big money on some forced break in our business, if they can be the wreckers and control the salvage processes, but that kind of criminal folly does not appeal to sensible people who appreciate the ever growing importance of the motion picture and the danger to the American public of anything like a centralized control.

"Every person connected with this industry must recognize that, no matter how personal some elements of advantage may appear to them, there are certain fundamental features which must be safeguarded or the industry as a whole will suffer. We must get together on these phases and act as a unit. This can be done. You and others similarly situated can aid this line of necessary co-operation very much. Ours is a great business, with a future so tremendous as to challenge the attention and admiration of thinking men and women all over the world. Those in present charge of the different divisions of the motion picture industry must measure up to the high public and business obligations their positions impose upon them. Unless they do this the industry must certainly cut loose from them or they will drag it down. This we cannot and will not permit. All producers are impersonal to us. We aim only to protect the exhibitor and the industry.

"Beginning a new year affords proper occasion for some helpful stock taking. There are many conditions associated with the motion picture business which must be changed. Our business admits of the application of the Golden Rule, the same as any other line of endeavor. We are all fullgrown, with adult minds, and manifest injustices and rapacious practices of all kinds upon our business must be forced into the discard. When we apply the Golden Rule, it must be so fixed that it will carry advantages to all concerned and not be "golden" for a few and just a mere "rule" for the many.

"Extravagance and waste can be set aside and much of the antiquated machinery of production and distribution, now ruinously costly, must be scrapped. An honest, open policy with fair contract provisions all down the line, must supplant the present secret, deceptive and unsatisfactory process forced upon the industry by certain producing and distributing elements. Their plans are easily discerned, even though laid in seeming secrecy, and they are fooling no one, though injuring all and threatening the very life of the industry. Plain talk may help them see the error of their way in time.

"Hundreds of thousands of dollars are expended annually in advertising processes which yield no returns and constitute a needless charge upon the Industry. Correspondence received from exhibitors at the National Office of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and the personal observations made by myself and others on organizing and convention trips, prove conclusively that advertising placed in some National trade papers is absolutely worthless. One trade paper especially, the editor of which is foolishly assuming a proprietary control of the publicity field, is practically useless to the producer as an advertising medium. I am interested in this matter, as President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, because the exhibitor is paying this bill as all costs are tacked on to the price of the picture. Hence, I feel this needless waste of money should be stopped. Producers profit only on advertising in trade papers read by exhibitors where such perusal leads to the acceptance of pictures they would not otherwise take. Unless this occurs, the money spent on any particular advertisement is wasted. It is of no value for the producer to read his own advertisement or that of some other manufacturer, or for the editor of the paper to read it. That sells no picture and brings no results. The exhibitor (the purchasing power) must read it and consider it favorably, and that alone makes the situation profitable.

"It is not claimed that the public gen-

Hoy Service Is Extended Throughout Country

Complaints and Claims Between Exchanges and Exhibitors to Be Handled Under Hoy Plan

AS a result of a series of conferences between the New York home office executives of most of the film distributing companies which have a national system of exchanges, the Hoy Reporting Service, that has worked out so successfully in New York, Boston and several other exchange centers, has been adopted throughout the country, declares a report from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

F.I.L.M Boards of Trade will be organized at once in all exchange centers east of Denver and north of Atlanta, according to the report, and the Hoy system put into immediate effect for the handling of all complaints and claims which arise between exchanges and theatres.

To carry out the provisions of the plan, the country has been divided into four zones, it is explained. Zone 1 includes the following territories: New York City, Albany, Buffalo, New Haven, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburg and Washington, D. C. The headquarters of the Hoy Reporting Service in this zone are 719 Seventh Avenue, New York City. All complaints between exhibitors and exchanges in the exchange centers of this zone will be handled through the New York headquarters of the Hoy Service.

Zone 2 includes the following territories: Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Detroit, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Des Moines. The headquarters of the Hoy Service in this zone will be opened immediately in Chicago and all complaints which arise between theatres and exchanges in the exchange centers of Zone 2 will be handled through the Chicago headquarters.

This will mean an immediate reorganization of exchange managers' associations in all the exchange centers of these two zones that are not at present using the Hoy Service, it is declared.

In addition to New York City and Boston, the Hoy Service is already being used in Buffalo, Albany and New Haven. In all other exchange centers of Zones 1 and 2 F.I.L.M. Boards of Trade will be organized at once with a uniform set of rules and regulations. In these regulations an arbitration board is provided for to hear and determine disputes between exchange members and theatres. Theatre owners will be invited to serve on these arbitration boards. The joint boards will consist of three exhibitors, three members of the F.I.L.M. Board of Trade and the President of the F.I.L.M. Board of Trade, who will serve on the arbitration board in an ex-officio capacity and will be entitled to vote only the case of a deadlock. No member of the arbitration board, however, can sit in judgment on a case in which he is either plaintiff or defendant. In such instances any such member of the arbitration board will be relieved from duty and the group he represents will choose another representative to serve in his stead. Theatres have the same privilege as exchanges in filing claims with the Hoy Reporting Service.

On or before March 1, 1922, the Hoy Service will be adopted in the territory west of Omaha and the territory south of Washington, D. C., it is announced.

The West will be known as Zone 3. This zone will include San Francisco, Los Angeles, Denver, Spokane, Butte, Seatttle and Salt Lake City. The headquarters of this zone will be in San Francisco.

The South will be known as Zone 4 and will include the following exchange centers: Dallas, Oklahoma, Atlanta, New Orleans, Charlotte and Memphis. The headquarters of this zone will be in Atlanta.

The distributing companies whose representatives have attended the series of conferences which resulted in the nationalizing of the Hoy Service are: Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Pathe Exchange, Inc., Fox Film Corporation, Wid Gunning, Inc., R-C Pictures Corporation, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., Metro Pictures Corporation, the Selznick Corporation, Vitagraph, Inc., Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Pioneer Film Corporation and W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

"Why Is a Prologue?" Asks Pat Dowling; Says Specialty Is Out of Place in Film Houses

PAT DOWLING, publicity director of the Christie Film Company, in a letter to William A. Johnston, editor of Motion Picture News, brings up for discussion the question, "Why Is a Prologue?" Mr. Dowling frankly presents his views as a sponsor of the comedy and other subjects on a diversified program. But he also proposes the question from the angle of the feature film exploiter. He writes in part as follows:

"My point is this: Is it not foolish for distributing companies to urge exhibitors—assisted by the trade press—to spend large sums of money for prologue accompaniment to their pictures when it is not proven that the prologue helps the picture itself? In other words, what argument has the feature man for a price for his feature film rental when he is encouraging the exhibitor to spend more and more of his money for something in his show which is outside of the realm of pictures?

"Or can you say that a prologue will give in twenty minutes as much real entertainment and satisfaction to a large percentage of the audience that certain short subjects—secured cheaper—will give? This is the comedy angle.

"The big fellow in the big city puts on a prologue. Perhaps it is good; perhaps it is not. The public accepts it passively. Immediately it is heralded as 'great' through the trade. The smaller fellow thinks he has to follow suit. The rival house manager thinks he has to do it also, just because someone else has done it; not because his clientele has requested it or even shown particular interest in it.

"Perhaps some of the public is kicking at admission prices. What would they think if they knew that a large share of their fifty cents or their dollar is going for vaudeville—inferior vaudeville at that, and a small per cent of the money going for the payment for the pictures which they came to see. The public would have a real kick if they knew what some of these prologues cost to stage.

"It has been pretty thoroughly proven that vaudeville, put on by picture exhibitors—can not rank with the best vaudeville of the circuits. Does not the prologue come under the vaudeville class? It is not pictures. And pictures are what the public pays its money to see.

"These are only a few random thoughts. It seems to me that this subject should be looked at squarely by the trade press, if the trade press is to stand for honest advice to the exhibitors of America."

Wisconsin Exhibitors Vote Thanks to Nat'l Officers

The Wisconsin Exhibitors' Association extended a vote of thanks to the national officers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at the mid-winter convention of the organization, held in Milwaukee, December 15 and 16, at the Hotel Wisconsin. The resolution of thanks adopted reads as follows:

"Be it resolved that we the Wisconsin Exhibitors' Association in convention assembled extend a vote of thanks to our National Officers for the efforts set forth in our behalf and which they have so ably handled, especially the repeal of the 5 per cent film rental tax.

"Be it further resolved that copy of this resolution be sent to our National Officers."

Rome, N.Y., Wins Fight for Sunday Picture Shows

Rome, N. Y., now has Sunday motion picture shows. Mayor G. Arthur Mickle has just signed an ordinance which will permit Sunday shows between 2 and 11 p. m. On December 5, the common council adopted by a vote of 4 to 2 a resolution favoring Sunday shows.

First National Franchise Holders of Eastern Canada Convene

Policies, Officers and Executive Committee of First National Endorsed by Delegates

FULLEST endorsement of the policies, officers and executive committee of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., was voted by the delegates to the regional get-together for Eastern Canada, comprising the Ontario, Quebec and Maritime provinces, which was held in the Windsor Hotel, Montreal, December 12 to 14.

Twenty-nine delegates were in attendance, representing 60 franchise holders. William J. Drummond was chairman of the sessions. The advisory boards elected were as follows:

Ontario: Frederick Guest, Hamilton, chairman; Jule Allen, Toronto, W. D. Ferguson, Toronto; Hy Meehan, Lindsay; H. Brouse, Ottawa.

The final business of the meeting consisted of passing motions endorsing all the policies which have guided and are guiding First National and voting confidence in the officers and the executive committee.

George Rotsky, of Montreal, representing the Allen theatres, paid a tribute to the home office advertising department and its manager, C. L. Yearsley. After praising the benefit and assistance it has been to the exhibitors, he said:

"In my opinion it is the best advertising and publicity department in the business. All other companies could take lessons from the First National publicity department, and make it extremely profitable for themselves."

On Tuesday the delegates were guests of Mr. La Brecque at luncheon in Le Club Canadian, and at his insistence the afternoon sessions were held in the club parlors. Monday evening they were the dinner guests of Mr. Rotsky at the Press Club. The get-together wound up Wednesday night with a banquet.

During his formal address, Chairman Drummond paid a high tribute to President Robert Lieber, D. D. Williams, H. O. Schwalbe, William J. Morgan, Mr. Yearsley and others of the home office executive staff.

The delegates were:

George Rotsky, Montreal, representing 23 Allen franchises; George Nicholas, Montreal, representing seven United theatres; Harry Brouse, Imperial, Ottawa; B. F. Stapleton, Center, Ottawa; Frederick Guest, Queens and Empire theatres, Hamilton. Ont.; I. Goldwater, Empress, Lachine, Que.; George Gladianos, Midway, Montreal; J. E. La Brecque, Passe Temps, Montreal; N. A. Lazanis, Alhambra, Napoleon and Lord Nelson theatres, Montreal; J. Sperdakos, Fairyland, Montreal; I. Singerman, Premier, Sheerbrooke, Que.; A. J. B. Albany Managers Preparing for Convention

New York State Exhibitors' Gathering to Open; to be Held February 14, at Hotel Ten Eyck

DETAILS in connection with the annual convention of the New York State Motion Picture Theatre Owners in Albany, on February 14, 15 and 16, are fast being worked out by members of the Albany Managers' Association. At the last meeting announcement was made that the business sessions of the convention will be held on the grand ball room floor of the Hotel Ten Eyck, capable of seating at least 1,000 persons. A large room immediately off the main lobby of the hotel was rented last week for the use of the exchanges and their booths. This room is of sufficient size to accommodate every exchange in the state.

Within the next few days 100,000 stickers, ordered by President George Roberts of the Albany Managers' Association and calling attention in no uncertain way to the coming convention, will be sent to every exchange which will in turn be expected to use these on all outgoing mail matter.

In connection with the grand movie ball at the State Armory on the night of February 15, special invitations will be sent to all New York state officials. A reception committee will be on hand to present these officials and others to the stars who have promised to attend. Clara Kimball Young, the Gish sisters, Mae Murray, Eugene O'Brien and others will be on hand. Due to the closeness of Albany to the metropolis and likewise to the fact that the ball is to be held in the city housing state executives and the legislature, producers are anxious to be represented at the ball through their stars.

A special reception committee will be named from the Albany Chamber of Commerce and from the Managers' Association to meet these stars at the station on their arrival. The Chamber of Commerce has also named several special committees to work with Mr. Roberts and his associates in perfecting plans for the gathering.

Outside interest has already been aroused in the ball. Mr. Roberts has received letters of inquiry from Glens Falls, Schenectady and other cities, asking the price of admission. It is expected that there will be at least 4,000 couples attending this ball. Tickets have been placed at two dollars each.

It has been decided to hold the banquet at 8 o'clock on the concluding night of the convention. The program of speakers is already under way.

Arrangements are to be made with some film company to film the activities of the first two days. The film will then be rushed to the General Electric Company's laboratories in Schenectady, developed and printed and shown as one of the features at the banquet. This picture will show among other things, Mayor Hackett greeting the stars as they arrive in the Capital City.

The Albany Chamber of Commerce will shortly issue a booklet especially prepared in connection with the Convention, and which will be mailed to every exhibiter, producer and exchange in the state.

All persons intending to be present at the state convention should get in touch at once with Samuel Suckno, Albany theatre, Albany, N. Y., in making hotel reservations. Mr. Suckno will make these reservations and reply to all letters on the day of receipt.

U. S. Commissioner Reports on Educational Films

The educational field of the movies has been practically unexplored, according to John J. Tigert, United States Commissioner of Education. In his annual report, an advance copy of which has been received by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Commissioner Tigert says:

"Although there are now more motion-picture machines in schools, churches, and clubs than in commercial theatres, conditions are such that the industry is organized almost exclusively to serve the interests of the commercial theatre.

"The demand from educational institutions may never equal in bulk or in steady continuity the commercial demand, and yet its potential strength is sufficient to attract attention if only it can be organized and given expression. Representatives of the larger producers have declared their willingness to produce the films, provided they can be assisted in determining what is needed and can be used in the schools, and they have appealed to the bureau repeatedly to take the initiative in organizing some plan of investigation. No producer or organization of producers can afford to make the necessary analysis of school needs and educational possibilities, and they all lack the motive, the personnel, and the school contacts which are essential to the success of such a study."

English Producer Explains Handicaps Met Abroad

America, with its censorship problem, by no means has a corner on difficulties in the production of moving pictures. This was the gist of highly interesting information furnished stars and officials at the R-C Studios in Hollywood recently by Walter Tennyson d'Encourt, representative of the International Artists Film Co., Ltd., of London, who was visiting Southern California to get some first hand information on the production of films in America.

Mr. d'Encourt gave one illustration of what producers have to contend with in England. His organization recently sent a company to Spain to get some genuine Spanish atmosphere for scenes in a picture. They took with them from England their raw film and other supplies, but on returning they had to pay the regular customs charges on this film, whether it had been exposed or not. It is in matters of this kind that British producers are still seeking co-operation from their government.

A lamentable dearth of technical experts in England and on the Continent and the necessity of filming most scenes indoors owing to the uncertainty of favorable weather conditions were also cited by Mr. d'Encourt as handicaps with which the European producer has often to contend with.

A Reader Suggests Central Exchanges

THE following letter has been received from B. F. Heustis, manager of the Community theatre, Harbor Beach, Mich.:

"Gentlemen:

"If it would not be amiss for a small town exhibitor to make suggestions to the big guns and lesser lights of the moving picture industry, I have reasons for believing a plan may be put in operation which would save the producers, the exhibitors, and the public a considerable amount of money.

"If, instead of from 20 to 50 different exchanges in a state, with their corresponding quota of exchange managers, salesmen and office help, there could be one exchange in each state, which would handle all the worthwhile pictures for producers, the savings in salary account, traveling expenses and office equipment would be enormous, to say nothing of the relief from petty detail in the selling of pictures, which exists to day. The savings effected would result in better pictures and in reduction of price to the public, besides affording greater returns on the investment of producers. It would also result in better, cleaner pictures, and removal of the censorship ban in nearly all localities.

"Perhaps this may sound like idle chatter, but it is the proper way for conducting any business—elimination of expense and avoidance of duplication of effort.

"In Michigan we have some 30 exchanges, selling films in the same territory; offices for each exchange must be kept up, and salesmen at great expense, kept following in each other's footsteps.

"Every picture released for showing in Michigan, must carry with it the same expense and must be shown a certain number of times in order to make it a profitable venture for the producer. Many pictures are shown, which would be better left to die without being shown at all. If it has merit it should be accorded a fighting chance, without being smothered in expense.

"Supposing that the 30 exchanges in Michigan have 100 new pictures for exploitation—possibly more, perhaps less—and one company turns out 40, another 20, another 10, and others, from 6 to 1 per year. 100 pictures are to be sold by the Michigan exchange, in exact proportion, with the expense pro-rated among all the producers. Think of the elimination of expense and of detail. It would be no job at all, to sell every picture in the exchange, new and old, as the proportion of old pictures offered, would be in exact ratio to the new ones.

"Exchange managers could be bonded for faithful performance, financial probity and relieve home-offices of this detail entirely. The saving to all concerned, would be almost beyond computation."

Educational Value of Film Proved by Examinations

Pupils taught by a combination of motion pictures and oral instruction pass examinations which average twenty-two per cent higher than those instructed orally only, an experiment conducted with about 500 New York school children by a graduate-student at Columbia University shows. The results of the experiment have just been made public at the university in an announcement stating that the course in motion picture making would be continued as part of the university curricula.

The experiment was conducted by Joseph J. Weber, of Hague, North Dakota, a graduate-student in education at the university. Over 500 pupils were placed in different groups, it was explained at the university. All at one time were in Group A and received instruction by oral means only. At another time all were in Group B and had 12 minutes of motion pictures, followed by oral instruction. At another time all were in Group C and had oral instruction, followed by twelve minutes of motion pictures.

"The surprising fact developed that the same pupils when in Group B or when instructed by motion pictures followed by oral instruction, passed examinations which averaged twenty-two per cent higher than when they were instructed orally only," Rowland Rogers, instructor of motion picture making at Columbia, said. "When the pupils were in Group C, which had the oral instruction followed by the motion pictures, they were still fifteen per cent higher than when in Group A, or instructed by oral means only."

Congressman to Explain Canal Service by Film

There is nothing like the motion picture as a means of exploitation and explanation. Such is the belief of Congressman Peter G. Ten Eyck, from New York State, who has adopted the motion picture film as a means of better portraying just how important the New York State Barge Canal is, a project which represents an expenditure of $50,000,000.

The picture will be shown at a meeting of government officials during January for the purpose of counteracting propaganda already afoot to have the United States share in the building of a proposed St. Lawrence ship canal.

Houses Closed on Sundays in Springfield by Vote

A DISPATCH from Kansas City, Mo., advises that Springfield, Mo., has decided upon closing all places of amusement on Sundays. This policy was determined upon by popular vote on Tuesday of this week when 6,082 votes were cast in favor of closing all shows on Sunday and 3,166 voted in favor of Sunday openings.

Information Gathered by U. S. Consular Agents Published in Report

A COMPLETE survey of the film industry abroad has just been received by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry through its Washington Bureau. The survey is embodied in a report to the United States Senate by Secretary of Commerce Hoover. It is the result of a resolution introduced by Senator Wadsworth of New York calling upon the Department of Commerce to furnish the Senate with a survey of the motion picture industry in foreign countries and the extent of film importation into the United States. The information was gathered by United States Consular agents abroad and computed by the Department in Washington.

The report shows that film imports by the United States have increased from 11,725,000 feet, valued at $685,000, in 1911, to nearly 150,000,000 feet, valued at more than $4,000,000, in 1921. The greatest period of expansion was between 1911 and 1914. In 1914 our imports were 64,774,000 feet of film valued at $2,302,000. The bulk of these imports, however, have been raw stock. In 1914, for instance, 44,717,000 feet of raw stock was imported and, according to the government report, the 1921 figures, available in September, indicate that the raw stock imports for 1921 will be in excess of 130,000,000 feet or about three times the 1914 figures.

"Our imports of exposed film, however, have shown a decrease," says the report, "and for 1921 they will apparently be about half as large as in 1914. During the war imports fell from 20,057,000 feet in 1914 to the low mark of 2,267,975 feet in 1918. Recovery since 1918 has been rapid, imports increasing in 1920 to 6,233,000 feet, and for 1921 will probably be approximately 10,000,000 feet. The total value of this exposed film is likely to be about the same as in 1914, the price of film, like prices of other commodities, having changed.

"During the war, the development and expansion of the American motion picture industry proceeded with great rapidity. Imports of exposed film declined and the effect of foreign competition in the domestic field became less important. Exports of exposed film increased from 32,192,000 feet in 1913 to over 150,000,000 feet in 1919.

"In 1920 our exports of exposed film were 175,233,000 feet, which is more than five times the highest pre-war figure. For 1921 the total export will probably be somewhat less than in 1920.

"There are no official figures on the domestic production of motion pictures with which import figures can be compared. But as compared with our domestic exports of exposed film imports are of relatively small importance. Even for the current year, in which imports have increased and exports decreased, the import will probably be only 10,000,000 feet, while exports will be at least 140,000,000 feet. Since many of the pictures sent to this country by foreign producers are not saleable and are never shown before American audiences, the figures for the import of exposed film are slightly of less significance than they first appear. Further in gaging the importance of import, the rapid development and expansion of the domestic industry must be taken into account. An import of 1,000,000 feet of film into the United States today means much less to the industry than the importation of a similar amount meant in 1914. The domestic market has so developed that 20,000,000 feet (the import of 1914) would be more easily absorbed today than a much smaller amount in 1914. Except for four German and one Italian film, pictures of foreign make, imported since the war, have not been especially successful.

"More than four-fifths of the raw film and two-thirds of the exposed film imported into the United States come from five European countries: Belgium, France, Germany, Italy, and the United Kingdom."

The report says further that of our 1920 importation of raw stock, 30,833,000 feet came from Belgium and that in 1921 the same country has supplied the United States with approximately 40,000,000 feet. Belgium, however, is not an important exporter of exposed film. American films are holding their own in Belgium in the face of severe European competition.

In 1920 the United States imported more than 62,500,000 feet of raw stock from France and returns for 1921 indicate that such imports from France will reach 75,000,000 feet. Our imports of exposed film from France in 1921 were approximately 2,200,000 feet, a slight increase over 1920.

"The industry (in France) is unable to produce the elaborate feature pictures which require special and expensive equipment," says the report.

In 1921 the United States imported from Germany about 2,000,000 feet of exposed film, or about 26 per cent of our total importation of exposed film. In the first nine months of 1921 we imported over 29,000,000 feet of raw stock from Germany, over 20 per cent of the total unexposed film which entered the United States from foreign countries.

Before the war about one-sixth of our exposed film imports came from Italy. During the war, however, these fell away to practically nothing. In 1921 imports from Italy were about 600,000 feet, which is far below the import level of 1914.

"It is doubtful if the import of exposed film from Italy will regain its pre-war importance," says the report. "American producers have become firmly established and can produce film enough to satisfy the American demand. The gap which Italian film filled in pre-war days no longer seems to exist."

In 1920 there were 82 producing companies in Italy, capitalized at 100,000,000 lire and employing 300,000,000 lire working capital. The total production of new film in Italy that year was 5,250,000 feet.

"The cheapness of European films seems to be a determining factor, and they are used in increasing amounts, although inferior in quality," declares the report.

From the United Kingdom before the war, we imported over 25 per cent of our exposed film, according to the report. For the year 1921, however, imports from the United Kingdom will not exceed 2,000,000 feet, it is declared. No imports of raw stock from there were reported during the first nine months of 1921. The report estimates that 50 per cent of the pictures used in the United Kingdom are American made.

No pictures will be reviewed by the New York State Motion Picture Commission at the Albany bureau, according to an announcement which has been made by Mr. Cobb, chairman of the Commission, following a visit to the Albany bureau. The Albany facilities are limited, and moreover, Chairman Cobb feels that the present arrangement of reviewing all pictures at the New York office is perfectly satisfactory and entails no hardship even though a producer or an exchange may be located in Buffalo.

The annual report of the commission will go into the legislature on January 15. It is now being drafted.

According to Mr. Cobb, about 1,200 pictures have been reviewed by the commission this year. He declared the other day that a majority of the pictures being submitted to the commission are such that no deletions are necessary. He also stated that there are no wilful violations of the law these days by producers, exchanges, or theatres.

erally read motion picture trade papers, hence, no value comes from any but exhibitor readers. Then these must be pleased with the paper, otherwise, the advertisements, do no good but great harm.

"This useless dissipation of the exhibitor's money must be stopped. Producers should cooperate directly with the exhibitor in helping him merchandise his product to the public.

"The exhibitor is closest to the public. Millions attend motion picture theatres daily and the influence the screen can and does exert on the public is incalculable. The screen message is read and absorbed more than any other transmitted to the public. Hence, the exhibitor, because of his screen power and frequently through the personal influence this gives him in his locality, is the safeguarding element of the business. It is through the exhibitor only that a healthy public opinion for the motion picture business can be created and maintained. In this way, sentiment can be moulded and shaped which will protect our business in official circles.

"Every theatre owner should recognize that he or she has this wonderful power at their command, and always use it for the good of the community. No opportunity should be avoided to help progressive public programs and make the motion picture theatre a community center. In this way the right measure of influence will be exerted for good everywhere, and will operate in completely protecting our business against unfair censorship and other injustices.

"Remember, it is the exhibitor who has the touch with the great American public in possession of a publicity medium—the screen—almost without parallel as a means of expression, and the exhibitor alone can influence public opinion favorably for our industry. That is so patent as to admit of no dispute. Hence, we feel the importance of our position and the great duty we owe to the public, and will discharge it with prudence and fidelity.

"The motion picture screen in 1922 will take its place among America's greatest and best publicity mediums, and its influence for good will be felt in lawmaking bodies and elsewhere, always along the most helpful and constructive lines for the public.

"We are against all moves tending to unfairly centralize control in this industry. We recognize helpful organization of all kinds, but will not tolerate trust processes of any kind. The Motion Picture business can live and advance only with initiative uncontrolled and the freest action permitted those whose creative genius supplies new elements of literary and artistic merit. The human brain cannot be trustified, nor art and inventive skill held within mean bounds.

"The independent producer of pictures must be encouraged, as the future of the business is predicated on freedom of honest initiative and constructive genius. These must find daily expression in the motion picture, and the American people will see to it that the hand of the trust does not palsy this wonderful visualizing agency which lays the whole world at their feet daily.

"We made wonderful strides in 1921, but I predict for the motion picture in 1922 an era of unprecedented advancement in point of utility and public appeal.

"Sincerely yours,

"Sydney S. Cohen, President."

How Tax of 1921 Revenue Act Applies to Houses

In reply to an inquiry from the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America concerning the application of the tax to picture theatres under section 800 of the Revenue Act of 1921, A. C. Holden, Acting Deputy Commissioner of the Treasury Department at Washington, D. C., writes as follows:

"Gentlemen:

"Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of December 14, 1921, regarding the application of the tax imposed under section 800 of the Revenue Act of 1921 in the case of 10-cent admission under certain conditions stated by you. You submit the following specific questions, which will be answered in the order given:

"'Does this apply to a theatre where the admission in the evening is 10 cents for children; 17 cents for adults?'

"'Does it apply to a theatre where the minimum admission is 10 cents, the maximum admission 25 cents?

"'Does it apply to a theatre where matinee price is 10 cents; evening prices are 17 and 22 cents?'

"The tax would not apply to admissions sold for 10 cents or less in either of the cases cited.

"'And, again, does it apply to passes as issued by the theatres?'

"Paragraph 2 of section 800 of the Revenue Act of 1918 imposes a tax on passes or free admissions. This provision is repealed by the Revenue Act of 1921 and after January 1, 1922, persons admitted on passes will be required to pay no tax."

Detroit Film Men to Hold Dinner-Dance Jan. 10th

A joint dinner-dance of Detroit and Michigan exhibitors and the Detroit film exchange managers will be held at the Hotel Statler, Detroit, Tuesday evening, January 10. Plans under way will make it the greatest screen event ever held in the state, according to advance reports. On the same day will be held the formal opening of the exhibitors new headquarters in the Hotel Wolverine.

Committees in charge of the affair are: Exhibitors, J. C. Ritter, Phil Gleichman, of Detroit; W. S. McLaren, of Jackson, and H. R. Richey, secretary; Exchanges, J. E. Flynn, Joe Friendman, and W. E. Wilkinson. The publicity committee comprises Harold Heffernan, Gret T. Grenell, Clarence Linder, Otis Morse and Jacob Smith.

Famous-Players exchange in Albany, and Joseph Klein, of the Robertson-Cole company, New York city, were named as chairmen of committees which will cooperate in connection with the publicity incidental to the coming state convention of exhibitors in Albany. These three men serving as chairmen of their own committees, will name additional members from their respective territories.

Charles M. Winchester, former president of the Albany Chamber of Commerce, was today named as chairman of a special committee from the Chamber, which will cooperate with the managers in putting across the convention. Mr. Winchester said today that a luncheon would probably be given to all delegates by the Chamber of Commerce.

Recent Incorporations in State of New York

Twelve companies incorporated in New York State during the past week for the purpose of entering the motion-picture business, the aggregate capitalization amounting to $1,635,000. These companies, with the amount of capitalization and directors are:

Ballance Reports Improved Conditions in Northwest

H. G. BALLANCE, general sales manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has returned to New York from a trip of four weeks during which he held sales conventions at the Paramount exchanges in Denver, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle and Minneapolis.

Mr. Ballance says that he noted a pronounced turn for the better in the picture business, especially in the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coast territories. A more safe and sane policy seems to have been adopted with exhibitors exercising more care than ever before in the selection of their pictures, he declared.

The big success of "The Sheik" at Jensen & Von Herberg's Strand theatre in Seattle, where it has broken all records for attendance and is now playing its third week, Mr. Ballance says, reflects also the marked improvement in the lumber and fisheries industries in the Northwest.

Independent Screen Artists' Guild Endorsed

Number of Theatres Backing New Movement Are Reported to Be in Excess of 4,000

ENDORSEMENTS of the program of the Independent Screen Artists' Guild, organized last week in Los Angeles by forty-five leading independent producers and stars to establish direct relations between the studios and the theatres of the nation, thereby eliminating the middle man to the benefit of the public and the producer, continue to pour into the Guild headquarters, according to advices received from Los Angeles.

The number of theatres backing the new movement is now stated to be in excess of 4,000 each of which has pledged itself to set aside the week of February 18 for the simultaneous presentation throughout the United States of notable productions of the Guild members as a striking endorsement of the plans of the independent stars and producers.

Two big Eastern stars and the producing companies with which they are affiliated have wired their enthusiastic approval to the Guild of the plans adopted by the Western stars and producers, headed by Charles Chaplin and the Talmadges and including many other screen celebrities. Congratulations and expressions of co-operation were telegraphed by Hope Hampton and Richard Barthelmess, who are starring in their own productions in the East, and by C. H. Duell, president of Inspiration Pictures, Inc., of New York.

"Although I am in the East," wired Richard Barthelmess, "I am in hearty sympathy with the movement which has so auspiciously begun and which will have a far-reaching effect on the motion picture industry. You can count upon my support and hearty co-operation."

"The formation of the Independent Screen Artists' Guild," telegraphed Hope Hampton, "marks another gigantic step forward in our industry and I want to add my heartiest congratulations to the originators of the project and the stars and producers enrolled under its banner. Aims and purposes as outlined in proclamation need no further commentary. Independent producers and stars and independent theatre owners and public will all benefit through creation of the Guild, which is positive assurance of its success."

"Count on my organization as being with you, although we are in the East," wired Mr. Duell of Inspiration Pictures.

Among the latest exhibitors to pledge their support to the Guild and to announce their intention of joining the movement to make the week of February 18 the occasion for an American national co-operation exhibition of the Guild members' finest pictures are reported to be the following:

The Kunsky Circuit in Detroit, the Nathan Gordon theatres of Boston, the Ruben & Finkelstein theatres of Minneapolis and St. Paul, the Rowland & Clark theatres of Pittsburgh, the A. H. Blank theatres of Nebraska, Kansas and Iowa, the Harry Crandall theatres of Washington, D. C., Skouras Brothers' chain of theatres in St. Louis, Mo., the Circle theatre and thirteen other houses of Indianapolis, the Brentlinger chain of theatres in Terre Haute, Evansville, Fort Wayne and Richmond, Ind., and Clinton Rembush's chain in Martinsville, Marion, Shelbyville and Columbus, ten Cleveland theatres, 134 theatres in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, North and South Dakota in addition to those mentioned in above circuits; more than 150 theatres of the Pacific Northwest, including the Jensen & Von Herberg chain in Portland, Oregon, the Coliseum, Liberty, Strand and nine other theatres in Seattle, nine Tacoma theatres and five Spokane theatres; Sig Samuel's Metropolitan of Atlanta, Ga.; Mudd & Colley's Trianon of Birmingham, Alabama; Stanley C. Warrick of Palm Beach, Harry Leach of Miami and C. D. Cooley of Tampa, Fla.; five big theatres of New Orleans and a score in other Louisiana communities; eight Colorado theatres; eight Wyoming houses; the Crescent Amusement Co. of Nashville, Tenn., with four theatres; the Walnut and Alamo, Louisville, Ky.; the Alhambra, Richmond; the Garrick, Madisonville, Ky.; the Avenel, Bellevue, Kentucky; the Princess, Hopkinsville, Ky.; Brown's Middlesboro, Ky.; the Southern Enterprises chain, including the Strand at Memphis, the Rivoli at Chattanooga, and the Palace at Maryville, Tenn; eighteen theatres in Cincinnati; seven in Columbus, Ohio; ten Baltimore theatres; the Roland C. Hill theatres of North and South Carolina; 31 theatres of Chicago and more than 100 of Greater New York.

Cut Out Talk of Huge Salaries, Christie Advises

"THE motion picture public resents the tremendous expenditures in motion pictures in the way of salaries and production costs which we know are highly exaggerated," said Charles Christie, the comedy producer, before the members of the Western Motion Picture Advertisers at their last meeting in Hollywood.

"Even if a fortune is actually spent on a certain scene or a star does receive a hundred dollars a minute, I do not think it is good business to make capital of this fact," said Mr. Christie. "This talk about great amounts spent by motion picture people has to a great degree been responsible for a feeling on the part of the public towards the motion pictures that does not work out favorably at the box office."

The producer urged publicity men to eliminate from their copy all references to large sums of money spent in this business and suggested they concentrate their effort on ideas that will create and establish sales points for the product they are boosting and for the industry in general. He also attacked the prologue idea which he said proved detrimental to the importance of the motion picture as a medium of entertainment.

Ernest Lubitsch Guest of Honor at N. Y. Luncheon

A luncheon was given at the Hotel Ambassador, New York, December 28, by the Hamilton Theatrical Corporation of New York to Ernest Lubitsch, Director of "Passion," "Deception," "One Arabian Night," "Gypsy Blood," etc. Mr. Lubitsch arrived in New York the preceding Saturday, bringing with him his latest picture, "Pharoah's Wife." He will be in this country three weeks and will study American methods of production. Following his return to Berlin he will engage upon another spectacular picture.

Ben Blumenthal presided at the luncheon and speeches were made by Mr. Lubitsch and Paul Davidson. Dr. Riesenfeld acted as interpreter. Mr. Davidson, a prominent official of the European Film Alliance is the discoverer both of Mr. Lubitsch and of Pola Negri. In 1913, Mr. Lubitsch who was then only twenty-one years old started making comedies in one reels. At Mr. Davidson's suggestion he took up serious drama and made "Carmen" with Pola Negri. This is the picture which was shown here under the name of "Gypsy Blood." When he later embarked upon the making of historical pictures, Mr. Lubitsch stated that he found the same radical opposition to his historical and costume pictures in general from the renters and exhibitors as has been evidenced in this country. Mr. Lubitsch states that he will continue making these pictures but will not necessarily confine his efforts to this class of production. The luncheon was largely attended by the newspaper and trade press of New York.

New Haven Theatres Win Order Enjoining Police

Three of the large New Haven, Conn., theatres have been granted injunctions by Judge Edwin S. Thomas of the United States Court, preventing state and city police from interfering with their operation. The application of the managements for injunctions followed the recent action of Mayor Fitzgerald, who ordered the New Haven Chief of Police to recall their licenses.

Senate Debates High Film Tariff

ARGUMENTS for and against a high protective tariff on motion picture importations were presented before the Senate Finance Committee at Washington on Tuesday, December 27. The hearing was held in connection with the proposed increased duties in the Fordney tariff bill.

Saul Rogers representing the Fox Film Corporation and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry declared that the American film industry does not stand in need of protection from foreign competition and that a high film import duty in this country would result in retaliatory action by other countries to which American pictures are being sent.

Paul Turner, representing the Actors' Equity Association, and John Emerson, an independent producer, asked that the proposed duty be increased to fifty per cent. They declared that big American producers are planning to transfer many of their studios to Europe to take advantage of lower production costs. Mr. Turner asserted that the cost of production in Germany is ten per cent of that in America.

Responding to an inquiry from the Senators concerning reported excessive salaries of certain picture stars, Mr. Emerson declared these reports exaggerated.

Saul Rogers has issued an explanation of the attitude of the National Association in regard to the proposed tariff on imported film. The present specific duty is leveled in accordance with the act of 1913, paragraph 380, which fixes the duty of two cents per linear foot on all photographic film negative exposed, but not developed; three cents per linear foot on film exposed and developed, and one cent per foot on all positive photographic film.

Mr. Rogers gives the following seven reasons why the tariff should remain unchanged: First—in event of the imposition of the contemplated thirty per cent. ad valorem duty, retaliatory duties will be imposed by foreign countries, which will jeopardize the foreign market, which is now 80 per cent. controlled by American manufacturers.

Second—that if the new tariff is passed the American manufacturer will be compelled to go abroad and produce on a large scale in order to be afforded an entry in the European market on a basis equal to that of European manufacturers and competitors.

Third—that if the new tariff is adopted the American consumer will ultimately be compelled to pay higher prices if the present standard of production is to be maintained.

Fourth—that by reason of the foregoing, if such a tariff be imposed, a number of actors, directors, artisans and laborers will be forced out of employment.

Fifth—that the tariff is unnecessary either for protection of the American industry, or for yielding any appreciable revenue.

Sixth—that the industry requires no protection because it dominates the whole market and practically 80 per cent. of the foreign market.

Seventh—foreign productions have made no inroads in the American market, and have not as yet become a real competitor and the comparative small number of foreign productions that have been imported or will be imported in the near future, yield an insignificant small revenue.

Pre-Release Review of "School Days"

"SCHOOL DAYS," a seven-reel version of Gus Edwards' perennially famous sketch of the same name, was given its premiere showing at the Allen theatre, Cleveland, this week, under the personal direction of S. Barrett McCormick.

"School Days" is a masterpiece. You have to take your hat off to the Warner Brothers and Harry Raph who produced it; to William Nigh who directed it; to Wesley Barry, who, as Specks Brown, outshines all of his preceding characterizations, and to S. Barrett McCormick, who offered it as a Chistmas present to the Allen theatre patrons.

"School Days" can easily be classed among the ten best pictures of the year. It has all the ingredients that make it a big success. There's universal appeal in a school room; there's sympathy for an orphan who isn't getting a square deal; there's plenty of comedy both in and out of school; there's love and loyalty and understanding, and then there's excitement, too, when the country lad is almost, but not quite, fleeced by the city crooks.

The contrast between the city-bred children and the country-bred boy is finely pictured. The outdoor scenes are all beautiful. Everyone of them stir up the universal call of nature. The city scenes are contrastingly elaborate. Wesley Barry and his dog head the cast of "School Days."—Elsie Loeb.

What Is to Be Exhibitors' Policy for 1922?

IN an article published in the December 24th issue of the Reel Journal, Phil L. Ryan writes some interesting comments on the past and future of the business of exhibiting motion-pictures. Some of the more important paragraphs from Mr. Ryan's article in the Reel Journal, which appeared under the caption, "Seeing the Future Through the Past," are submitted in the following, with full credit acknowledged to both the author of these remarks and the publication in which they originally appeared:

"Almost the beginning of this year marked the close of an unprecedented era of unprecedented prosperity of every branch of this industry.

"Beginning with production and ending with the investment of theatres. The men responsible for the investment of money in this business have all built upon the theory that this period of prosperity we have passed through would be an indefinite one.

"The exhibitor is prone to place the burden of blame for extravagances that exist on the producer. It is true that a great number of producers have flagrantly wasted money in the making of motion picture productions. And it's just as true that the policy of present-day entertainment as practiced by hundreds of exhibitors is just as extravagant in its kind. * * *

"The throes of the business depression we are undergoing at the present time as exhibitors, distributors or producers, began with a 'drizzle.' It came upon us slowly, and as members of this industry we apparently thought ourselves immune from the depression that so vitally affected all other lines of commercial activity, and because, like a 'drizzle,' it came slowly, it will be with us a long time and it will take weeks, months, several months before we may again feel that ease and contentment of mind that comes to men only when their affairs are in a position of security.

"To effect the solution of the epidemic that now blankets us, there must be instigated radical changes for conservation of resources and economy in operation of every branch of this industry. If there is an over-production of film product, it is not any greater in proportion than the over-production of seating capacity in the majority of our larger cities. The solution will not be found alone in the reduction of rentals, because any exhibitor who is honest with himself cannot but admit that what he is paying to-day for his average program represents but a small percentage of his total expense or total gross income."

After pointing out the widespread unemployment that affected many industries and sections the country over during the past several months and the resultant denial of luxuries—and therefore amusements—practised by many of those still drawing salaries, Mr. Ryan comes back again to the effects of this situation on the future business policy of the exhibitor. He continues:

"Now you see in looking back over what has happened we can better look into the future. Never again will the theatre owner, producer or distributor be able to make the fabulous profits that they have all enjoyed. Every theatre owner must be prepared to take in a lesser gross than he has enjoyed for the past four years.

"And to do this it is your problem to reduce the operating expense by cutting wages in every department that you operate and by forcing the unfair producer, who has 'extracted' an unfair share of your income, to begin the reduction of the total elimination of wasteful expenditures in not only studios but in the selling of film goods. There are theatres operating in the United States to-day that would lose several thousand a month were films given to them free. So it can't be entirely the fault of the cost of the picture.

"Admission prices must be—they have to be lowered, in every class of motion picture theatre. An appeal must be made to the pocketbook of the motion picture consumer. It is important to also consider that we, in our business, face not only this economic problem, but we have found in the important centers of the United States in this past year a new competition. This was brought about by rivalry between vaudeville circuits who have erected magnificent theatres, with large seating capacities, not caring whether or not the population of the communities they have entered could stand to support their investments. They have not only opened institutions that have directly affected every boxoffice in their community but they are offering a program of entertainment that includes not only vaudeville, but motion picture features and short subjects presented in a beautiful environment and atmosphere at a price in most instances less than that which the picture competitors are charging or asking for pictures alone.

"Most of the theatres are losing almost unbelievable sums of money each week. Most of the owners of these theatres admit that there must come a reduction of admission prices so that the motion picture amusement may be put within the reach of the many thousands of people whose salaries are not to-day, and never will be again, what they have been the last four years, during the war boom in this country.

"The more liberal-minded exhibitors are not primarily interested in driving down the film rental. They realize that the producer has a tremendous investment in his overhead and other expenses. They further appreciate that he must make money on his investment to interest capital to make pictures with. Some of these theatre owners insist that the producer will have to take a share of the loss, but are not charging this condition alone to the high cost of film. The problem cuts deeper than that. It is the high cost of everything in the theatres. An operator drawing $70 a week to-day received $30 four years ago. Such factors as this are important to the equation. In one of these cities mentioned above, the end men in the orchestra of one of the theatres now receiving $65 a week, formerly received $25. There are twenty men in this orchestra—a difference of $800 a week, or $40,000 a year additional expense that will have to be eliminated with other expenses before this exhibitor will be able to offer motion picture entertainment at a price he did before the war. The advertising in this city costs $7.50 per inch. His advertising expenses last year were in excess of $75,000. Four years ago this item cost about $15,000.

"Now is the time for the exhibitor to don the fighter's uniform. Any sweeping changes to be established will depend upon what the exhibitor does, and when he does it. Pictures will be cheaper to the public when the exhibitor makes them cheaper. The public will buy more seats when these seats are sold at a price that does not inconvenience the public. The savings that are to the effected in production and distribution will come as the results of the exhibitors' enforcements. Millions of dollars can be saved on salaries for stars, directors, casts and distributing executives, and they will be when you force them to be. It all has to be done. This saving must be multiplied by enforcement of economy in theatre operation. Don't let orchestrations and prologues overshadow your pictures—too much money is wasted here. Cut—prune—eliminate. Show good pictures, have fair rentals, encourage better production and reduce admissions to a point where you can compete with economic conditions and all other kinds of competition."

"Real Service"!

"I am sure this (Booking Guide) is going to be a great help—as it will mean that I may discontinue my own work of compiling a reference. In other words—you are making a book of just what I have been carrying myself in card form. That is REAL SERVICE.

"Yours very truly,

VALUABLE SUGGESTIONS ON HOW TO "SEE IT THROUGH"

Herewith are presented the experiences of other exhibitors who, finding themselves face to face with decreased patronage, took steps to "weather the storm."

Other articles on hand will be presented in the next two or three issues of Motion Picture News, following which the prize winners of the contest will be announced.

Confidence

The small word confidence plays a great part in our every day life. It plays a part in the life of a producer, a distributor and most of all, the exhibitor because he sells the picture to the public.

The Reese theatre, with a seating capacity of six hundred, is successfully weathering the storm. In fact, the attendance has been increasing instead of decreasing. The only answer to that is because of the single word, "CONFIDENCE."

Any exhibitor can gain the confidence of the public if he will only give them good pictures and prove to them that he is giving them the best that the town or city will afford. Work with the public, you will find that they will work with you. Show the merchants in your city the value of window displays and tie-ups with your theatre. Once you have done this they will have confidence in you. Work with the public, work with the merchants, and you will find you have the two best advertisers in the world.

Just put yourself in the same position as that of the public. You have some business to attend to but it is not so very important. You walk along the street and you come to a theatre. You glance at the display of photographs, one sheets, etc. You have never heard of the star or the title of the picture billed but you know that the theatre has the reputation of using the best pictures and are trying to please you. You go to the box-office, deposit your admission price and go in with the feeling that you are going to have an enjoyable evening. That is confidence, otherwise you would have walked on and attended to that unimportant business and thought no more of the theatre showing the picture with the unknown star or title.

About two years ago I booked a group of pictures and one of these pictures, I knew, was punk. The review in the News said that, also several other reviews in other trade journals. Nevertheless, to get the other pictures I had to use this one. When I played it I advertised it as the rottenest picture ever exhibited in Harrington. I also explained the reason why I had to use it. The consequence was that I had a good house. The public had confidence in me in knowing that I was not trying to pull one across on them and they decided that they could stand just one real bad picture and thus the result. Do not try to fool the public, because you are liable to get fooled yourself.

'Tis true, I have had to economize in these days of exorbitant rentals, but never on the film in such a way that it would decrease its entertainment value. Instead of that I found that I could economize on the advertising end. It pays to advertise. Yes; go to it, but any man with a little business judgment and common sense can economize and obtain the same results. In the summer I ran a Popular Lady Contest which increased my business thirty per cent. The contest lasted exactly ten weeks and it cost me fifteen dollars for voting blanks and advertising.

We have a weekly newspaper in our town, and before I used a space which cost me an average of eight dollars an insertion on back page. Am now using short readers and teasers in the local and personal column which cost me an average of four dollars and fifty cents per insertion and am getting the very same results, if not better. Instead of a weekly program, my program now covers two weeks of pictures, a great saving and answering the same purpose. I also use the program for my mailing list, instead of a special printed herald or card, and by doing this I save about ten dollars and seem to be getting the very same results. I used two thousand, 11 x 14 two-page heralds for each showing, which cost me eight dollars and fifty cents a thousand. Now I am using the mouth to mouth system of advertising with better results. I have about ten kids each day patrolling the streets asking friends and strangers if they are going to see the picture at the Reese theatre on a certain date. They then give them a small card, the exact size of a business card, giving the name of picture, a brief description, name of theatre, and date of exhibition. These cards cost me two dollars and fifty cents per thousand and a complimentary for each one of the kid advertisers. Thus another great saving.

There are various other ways that any exhibitor can economize, but whatever way you economize, do not lessen the quality of your entertainment. If you do the public will soon get wise and lose their confidence in you and your theatre.

The same thing applies to the producer or distributor; if he is asking a film rental that is too high in your estimation, show him where he is wrong, win his confidence and nine times out of ten he will split with you.

Under these principles the Reese theatre is "Seeing it Through." By gaining confidence we are ever gaining dollars at the box-office. Board the good ship "CONFIDENCE" with the public at the wheel and you will weather the storm successfully.

Increase Business, Scates' Only Solution

To the very small-town exhibitor, who, figuratively, is cranking his machine with one hand while he sells tickets with the other, the only solution to the question of cutting down expenses is to increase receipts for usually his expenses are already at a minimum.

This is a town of 1,000, in a new irrigated section of Washington. We have never had any "good times" but have had to scratch hard from the start to make things go so the present so-called hard times are no shock to us.

We seized on Paramount Week as one big opportunity. Any other "week" will do. We have made this week an institution here. Plenty of time in advance we book seven changes of program, although we ordinarly change but four times. We select proven successes, that have made good, not just "big" pictures. Season tickets, covering the entire week and also others good for four shows are issued at a reduced price and sold in advance. We have done this four years with consistent success. We, of course, put on an aggressive advertising campaign. Selling season tickets enabled us last year to starve out a stock company, which in turn had starved out the picture houses in neighboring towns.

In order to stimulate business in the dull season following New Year's we have just completed a campaign which will insure us at least one very profitable matinee a week, during January, February and March. We started a community movement which provides that the merchants of the town pay us a stipulated sum per week. In return we issue each merchant tickets as he desires to be given only to people living outside the town. A farmer looking over the stores of the town for the first time finds that he can attend the show free and does not even have to purchase anything. We had no trouble whatever in getting the merchants to sign up.

During the winter, comfortable firesides are apt to appeal more strongly than the effort necessary to crank up a flivver to come to the show, to say nothing of the possibility of a frozen radiator. To offset this to some extent we have made a deal with the driver of a bus to make trips through town prior to show time, at a reasonable price. The people here already know that when the old Klaxon squawks outside the bus is ready to take them to the show and the call is heard to a very appreciable extent. This has had the effect of keeping box office receipts bolstered up and the patron in the "habit."

We have practically decided to install radio equipment to give patrons "out in the sticks" the novel sensation of hearing concerts, etc., from all over the Pacific Coast in this theatre. The cost of installing such equipment will not be excessive and we feel satisfied that we will be more repaid for the investment.

Fowler Gives His Prescription

RESULTS FOLLOW EFFORT:—Like others, the problem of "Seeing it Thru" confronted us at Elmwood, a neighborhood theatre with sixteen hundred seats, and so with sleeves rolled up and smiling we started.

CREATING ADDITIONAL PATRONAGE:—Churches and schools usually need revenue—for foreign missions or gymnasium improvements. By personal calls and correspondence we invited them to participate in a profit sharing idea. Special tickets were printed by us for any one of our regular performances, as selected by them, they to receive 50 per cent of their sales. We have run several in the last few months, have made money and new patrons. These people opened homes to us we had never entered before. They too showed a profit with little effort. They are more than pleased, returning to arrange additional performances and boosting the idea to their friends.

MORE MEANS MONEY, LESS MEANS LOSS:—Our picture program remains at the same high established standard, clean entertainment purchased and booked with thought. Our orchestra of eleven men has been increased in the last few weeks from nine. Our patrons comment on this, it gives the idea of prosperity and progressiveness, a valuable asset in the problem of "seeing it thru."

OTHERWISE EMPTY SEATS TURNED TO PROFIT:—When our Saturday matinees did not return to last seasons level we purchased a censor proof serial and advertised it where our profit was to come from, in the schools. Our matinees increased one hundred per cent. Very acceptable indeed.

SAVING MONEY FOR OUR PATRONS, MAKING MONEY FOR US:—Now that we have entered the super-critical pre-Christmas period with the usual yearly depression we have made another effort and a successful one. We have on sale throughout the entire year three styles of book form tickets, viz: Ten 30c. orchestra admission for $3.00, ten 20c. balcony admissions at $2.00 and ten 15c. children's Tickets at $1.50, advertising them as a convenience against the usual waiting in line. But for the period from Dec. 1 to 25 we are advertising them on the screen, at the box office, in our program mailing list of over four thousand and by a special announcement stand in the lobby, as most acceptable Christmas gifts and as a special holiday offer a reduction of fifty cents on each book, i.e., orchestra books, $2.50;, balcony, $1.50, and children's $1.00—and they are selling, selling fast enough to overcome our loss by the falling off in daily attendance between now and the holidays. Creating new patrons undoubtedly when given as a gift to some one not accustomed to patronizing our theatre and at the same time proving popular with our patrons for giving them an opportunity to save money on their movies.

We are seeing it through with colors flying.

We are winning.

Vaughn Enumerates His "Big Six"

HERE are my six commandments:

1—Give the public what they want, the way they want it.

2—Honest advertising, the confidence of the public is worth more than your theatre.

3—Plug all the little leaks and make every dollar count.

4—Cut newspaper space and use more novelty exploitation stunts, floats, contests, window tie-ups, etc. It is cheaper and more effective.

5—I am doing capacity business two nights a week with Country Store on Tuesday and Local Talent Thursday.

"Fillum" Salesmen Help Hymovitz

I have hesitated to tell my version of the biggest help I have had during this stormy period for fear some of my brother exhibitors might extend their features into a smile when they read it but after thinking of the name of my theatre and how that famous man took a chance and the results of his taking that chance I have decided to follow suit and take one too.

The biggest thing that has helped me through this crisis, outside of the regular things like newspaper advertising, etc., has been the friendships I have made with film salesmen and exchange men.

When things began to look dark it occurred to me that the men who called on me with their portfolios were my most reliable and sure source of information as to what other exhibitors were doing to meet conditions, so I set about to assiduously cultivate their friendship. Many a time when a salesman has wanted to make another town nearby and there was no train I have jumped into my car and hauled him over. This has taken a little of my time sometimes, but the invaluable assistance and information these boys have brought me has more than made up for it.

No film salesman ever makes this town without hunting me up. He knows that even if I am not in the market for what he has to sell that I am always glad to see him and glad to do whatever I can to make his visit a pleasant one.

In addition to the valuable suggestions I have gotten from these boys I have found that it makes doing business a lot pleasanter too and instead of the suspicion I have seen some exhibitors use towards film salesmen I find it is now a real pleasure to welcome them. Another thing I have found out is that these men are just as human as I am and that they respond to a smile and a real friendly hand shake just as quickly as I do.

Of course these boys are out to sell their product. They wouldn't have a job long if they couldn't. They want to get all the money they can for their film, and when it comes to buying I try to get my shows for as little money as I can. I don't mean that I buy with my eyes closed, or that the boys cheat their firms because we are friends, but I do mean that on account of the real friendships which I have built up among the film boys that they have brought me ideas and suggestions that they have probably picked up from town to town as well as added to themselves, which I have been able to use in various ways in bringing business into my theatre during this period of depression and in addition to this I have made a lot of real friends which I value highly and I have made a lot more real pleasure out of my work.

Sam Hymovitz, Manager,
Columbus Theatre,
New Kensington, Pa.

Analyze Your Job, Advises Gersdorf

It is agreed that present film rentals are abnormally high. But that does not give you sufficient reason to advance your prices on any occasion. Analyze each picture before you present it. Put yourself in your patron's place. Would you be satisfied if you had paid an increased admission to see it? If it doesn't "stackup," pass it by, or if you have to play it, stand the extra rental loss. You will find that gaining the confidence of your patrons is a profitable investment indeed. A pleased patron is a steady patron. A steady patron is the real foundation of most theatre's business. One knocker can counteract three boosters—so knock out the knockers.

Don't think your audiences won't notice a decrease in your orchestra, or the quality of your programs. Never before have theatregoers shopped so for their entertainment. Where before the name of some star served to bring them in, it often now takes a big star, a well-known director, a familiar story, and a good comedy and a novelty or two to convince the public that they want to visit your theatre. And you are cheating yourself if you don't advise the public of every item of your program.

Make a conscientious effort to plug up the leaks. Gather your employes together. Tell them not to talk hard times, but to give everyone the impression that business is good. But impress upon them the necessity of economy. Gain their co-operation.

Perhaps your lights are turned on too soon or allowed to remain burning too long. Perhaps you are over-ordering on accessories. Perhaps some of your paper could be posted to better advantage. Perhaps you could save money by shipping your films by parcel post instead of by express. Perhaps you are not getting the maximum results from a minimum expense of newspaper advertising.

Analyze this last item thoroughly. This does not mean that you should necessarily cut down the amount of space used. Instead, you may find that you can get better results by using more space on certain days or attractions, and less on others. Gain the good will of the newspapers, and get the maximum amount of free publicity from them.

When you have a good picture, exploit it. This, too requires consideration. If you are a representative showman, you will originate ideas which do not necessarily cost a fortune to execute. And you will gain additional ideas from the trade journals.

Try a novelty of some kind as often as possible. Something different in presentation, in lobby displays and decorations, in your advertising. The American public appreciates originality. If you can make a patron talk favorably about your theatre you are getting valuable free publicity. The more popular you can make your theatre, the easier it will be to get the public to spend their money with you.

Phil Gersdorf, Manager,
Arcade Theatre,
Jacksonville, Fla.

Cut Down Expenses

It has been my experience in Troy that the picture with proper music presentation is 90 per cent of the entertainment and the average theatre goer wants this percentage. The exhibitor must furnish his patrons with the best pictures that the market affords and not try to reduce his expenses by booking inferior pictures. They demand a consistently good program and any exhibitor who tries to curtail expenses, by showing inferior pictures, does his theatre an incalculable harm.

But—the overhead can be reduced and I have found that this must be done as follows:

(1) REVISION OF SALARIES—Study the salary account and eliminate the dead wood and unnecessary labor expense. Make every employe feel the necessity of "putting the shoulder to the wheel" and to do away with the "time clock workers." Set a good example by being on the job yourself.

(2) MUSIC EXPENSE—There are many managers who believe that a large orchestra is necessary for advertising purposes, when a much smaller orchestra would give better results as far as featuring the picture and pleasing the public.

(3) PRESENTATION EXPENSE—As stated earlier in this article, the motion picture audience looks to the feature to supply 90 per cent of the entertainment, accompanied by proper music, and elaborate and costly prologues tire the audience and detract from the screen. In many theatres the prologues cannot be eliminated altogether on account of an established policy, but the cost can be cut down, and the prologues can be produced on a more economical and less pretentious scale.

(4) ADVERTISING AND EXPLOITATION—The first thought on this subject is—are you getting the most out of your advertising appropriation? If not—revise it—take up new mediums, new methods and you will reach new patrons. Change your style of advertising, if it needs it. Give the public something new, something different and something interesting and appealing.

(5) WORK—This item is listed last, not because it is least in importance, but because work is most important. You can't expect others to give the best that is in them, if you don't set a good example. Be on the job—be enthusiastic and energetic—stick to the ship and work.

FINALLY—Study your patrons' wants in pictures, and give them the best you can get. Be sure that they are properly projected.

Benjamin Apple, Manager,
American Theatre,
Troy, N. Y.

Specials Make the Grade

This is a town of 1400 in an agricultural community. That means that the prosperity of the town depends on the prosperity of the farmer. Every one knows that with twenty-five cent corn (the main crop) the farmers can not break even. There has not been a time within twenty-five years that farmers have been as hard hit as at present.

Our slump at the theatre started in November, 1920. It came almost unannounced, for business up to that time had been great. We had a dull, sickening feeling for the first month or two, but as soon as we got it into our head that times had been abnormal we commenced to study the best line of procedure. We decided that only the best pictures would get the business and we also stood pat on prices. Our prices were and are 10 cents and 25 cents, including war tax. To any one family we sell ten adult tickets for $2, including tax. While some of our regulars buy this way, the percentage is small but there is a much better feeling created in our favor. Every two weeks we run a special with an advance of ten cents to fifteen cents in admission. Our experience this year has convinced us that the admission price counts less with the average fan than the quality of the entertainment. Complaints as to prices have been negligible. We have done a very nice business on specials. In fact, some people have gone to nothing but specials during the year. We have advertised more intelligently than before. The result has been that we have drawn people from as much as twenty miles away. Many of these people have informed us that our pictures were better than those shown in nearby towns. Travelling men have also praised the quality of our programs. This sort of comment is fine advertising and gives an exhibitor a pleasurable pride in his work. We will never again show poor pictures if we can help it. First, it does not pay. Second, we take too much pride in our theatre to keep it open with poor service.

While good pictures has been our main stock in trade, we have cleaned house in other ways. Our music bill has been reduced with no ill effects. Our advertising has been more effective but has cost us less than in former years. We have cut everything but salaries and at the same time we are showing just as much for the money as we ever did. We believe our biggest saving comes through showing better and fewer pictures. We show every night (except Sunday), but we change just four times a week. We run two one-day and two two-day pictures a week. Small-town exhibitors, listen to this: Very few people go to your show more than three or four times a week. Then why change every night? You can show a picture two days at less cost in proportion than for one day. Your advertising costs one-half as much. Transportation charges are cut in two. Film charges are less. Most companies will give you the second day on a picture for fifty per cent of the first day's cost. If your picture is good the word-of-mouth advertising will help the second day. We have shown a few pictures three days and have done a nice business. On one special we showed to 1,300 people at advanced prices, but this was by far the best record we made this year. On that occasion we advertised in nine different papers around here.

We do not believe in some of this super-optimism as handed out by some of the film executives but at the same time we feel that no other one line of business has held up any better than the film business. Let's forget about the easy times and go over our receipts of three and four years ago and see how much worse off we are now. If we have made a little money this year we can be thankful, for about ninety per cent of the business men are losing money. We are fortunate that we have no high-priced stock on our shelves and that we have a cash business. The writer is not at all concerned as to the future of motion pictures. The outlook is good.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE.

A committee from the Chicago Motion Picture Theatre Owners and one from the Allied Amusements Association have been holding a series of joint conferences with the heads of the Motion Picture Theatre Operators' Union in an endeavor to reach a new wage agreement for 1922, which will take the place of the present agreement, which terminates on January 11th. The operators, under the present agreement, have been getting $1.50 an hour, and have demanded a 15 per cent. increase for 1922. No counter proposition, as yet, has been made by the representatives of the two theatre owners' organization, but it is generally felt that this is no time to grant an increase in pay to any class of theatre employees. The committee acting for the Allied Amusements Association is headed by Peter Schaefer, and includes Messrs. Newell, Teeter, Abrams, Newhafter, Joe Trinz and Sam Katz. The Chicago Motion Picture Theatre Owners' representatives are John Silha, chairman, and Messrs. Frank, Dibelka, Siegel and Joe Hopp.

Baby Virginia Lee Corbin, chaperoned by her mother, Virginia Corbin, left Chicago last week for Spokane, where Virginia Lee will open at Pantages and make a series of personal appearances at the other Pantages' houses on the Pacific Coast. She has been very successful in her personal appearances in the central west and has proved to be a decided box office attraction.

Ben Beadell and William Aschman are busy these days booking the Dempsey-Carpentier official fight pictures throughout the State of Illinois, and report that citizens of twenty-seven key centers will see this very interesting picture during the month of January. Twenty prints are being worked in this territory and splendid business has been done in the cities where it has been shown to date, including Aurora, Peoria, and Joliet. At Joliet, the picture was being shown in L. M. Rubens' Lincoln Theatre when it was destroyed by fire and the print in use there was burned up. Messrs. Beadell and Aschman, however, got on the wire and had a new print rushed on to take its place at once.

H. W. Given, manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's Chicago exchange, has arranged for a de luxe showing of Cecil B. DeMille's latest Paramount production, entitled "Fool's Paradise," at the Ziegfeld Theatre on Thursday, January 5th. This will be Chicago's first opportunity to view this widely advertised feature and a large crowd of exhibitors is expected to attend.

The Milwaukee Theatre Managers' Association are using a three hundred foot trailer entitled, "Why Grandpa Left Home," to boost Milwaukee's "Go to Theatre Week," which starts on January 15th. The picture was especially filmed for the Milwaukee theatre men by Rothacker's Chicago Practical Picture Organization, and was directed by Jawn Freese and photographed by William Ahbe.

J. F. Cubberley of Associated First National exchange, recently appointed Earl Conlon head of the inspection and repair department and sent Mr. Conlon to Chicago, where he will spend ten days at the Rothacker Laboratories studying laboratory practice, as Mr. Cubberley believes that observation of Rothacker methods would be of considerable benefit to him in his work. Douglas D. Rothacker returned in time for the holidays from an extensive trip east in the interests of the Rothacker Practical Picture Division.

Aaron J. Jones is to leave for an extensive foreign trip, starting on January 4th, and while overseas plans a pilgrimage to Cairo, Egypt, and will also visit Rome, Athens and the Holy Land, spending a week at Lake Como in the spring, and returning by way of Berlin, Vienna, and Paris. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Jones.

The Chicago Paramount Pep Club, one hundred strong, composed of executives and employees in the Paramount exchange, was the guest of Commandant Wurtzbaugh and his associates at the Great Lakes Naval Station last week. The party left at 5 o'clock on a special train over the North Shore Electric and were greeted with a wonderful turkey dinner. After the feed dancing was indulged in. The party was then entertained with a number of boxing bouts, between the stars and the navy. Several of the ladies retired from the scene of activities just after the first gore was spilled. Ed. Smith, sporting editor of the Chicago Evening American, refereed the bouts to the entire satisfaction of the big audience. In Mr. Smith's party were Mrs. Ed. Smith, Tom Coates, of the Herald and Examiner and Mrs. Coates. The return trip was made about 11 o'clock. The success of the party was largely due to the efforts of Jack Wolfberg and Herman Bush of the Paramount office and Chief Mate Manion of the Great Lakes.

The better picture committee of the Illinois Council of the Parent-Teachers Association, the Women's City Club and the Illinois League of Women Voters, has stamped as worth while, the following films, which were shown in Chicago during Christmas week. Thomas Meighan in "A Prince There Was;" Jack Holt in "The Call Of The North;" Constance Talmadge in 'Woman's Place;" Tom Moore in "From The Ground Up;" "Over the Hill"; "Bonnie Brier Bush;" "Poverty of Riches;" "Little Lord Fauntleroy;" "The Three Musketeers;" "The Lotus Eater;" "The Idle Class;" 'Duke of Chimney Butte;" Harold Lloyd in "I Do;" and Wanda Hawley in "Her Face Value."

Buck Jones stopped off in Chicago this week long enough to make a few personal appearances at Jones, Linick & Schaefer's Rose and Alcazar theatres, and visit the Marine Hospital, where he helped cheer up the invalid world war veterans, and shake hands with a number of his Chicago friends and admirers. Mr. Jones had been at Indianapolis, his old home, where he spent Christmas with his people, and after his two days spent in Chicago, headed for California where he will resume production.

Jessen's West Coast Notes

Frank Urson is directing Mary Miles Minter in "The Heart Specialist." Allan Forrest and Noah Beery are the principals. It is an original story by Mary Morrison and was adapted by Harvey Thew.

May McAvoy will next play in "Through a Glass Window," by Ogla Printzlau, directed by Maurice Campbell.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FIRST NATIONAL

R. S. V. P.—

Picture good and business fine. Personal appearance of Charles Ray helped a lot. (East.)

Mediocre. Receipts fair. (East.)

Molly O—

Still drawing big at end of third week. (Middle West.)

Pilgrims of the Night—

This one did a good week's business, the names of the stars being played up in newspaper advertising. (Middle West.)

Mother O' Mine—

Shoulder Arms—

Business good in spite of Christmas rush. Good re-issue. (Middle West.)

Nobody—

Good business. Special stunt, figure with face covered placed in show window with sign "I am nobody. See me at the ————." (Middle West.)

The Branded Woman—

Not as well liked as most Talmadge pictures. Title not in its favor. Business not up to average, due in part to fact that it was the week before Christmas. (Middle West.)

Man—Woman—Marriage—

Very fine picture, but it didn't go over so well here for some inexplicable reason. First week was fine. Second was below average. (Middle West.)

Courage—

Good attraction. Everybody liked it. Appeals to all kinds and classes of audiences. (Middle West.)

Love Never Dies—

Her Social Value—

Although Katherine MacDonald is a local girl, audiences don't seem to care much for her nor for this picture. (East.)

This one, which brought satisfactory box office returns for the week, won unanimous approval of most patrons. (Middle West.)

Fairly good entertainment. Average business. (West.)

Scrap Iron—

One Arabian Night—

Audience did not care for this picture, but business was extra good. (East.)

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Ladies Must Live—

Betty Compson is a favorite here. The picture attracted a large attendance for the week. (Middle West.)

Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford—

An entertaining picture which failed to attract business, because of the holiday shopping rush. Well liked by those who saw it. (East.)

Interesting, and made a hit with my people. Good business. (East.)

The Call of the North—

Very good picture. First day was very big with nice outlook for balance of the week. (East.)

Beyond—

Dangerous Lies—

As to quality, not so good. Business was poor but this might be partly laid to the fact that business is always poor just before Christmas. (Middle West.)

Don't Tell Everything—

Cappy Ricks—

White and Unmarried—

An average picture with the usual business. (West.)

Bronze Bell—

A poor production with less than usual business. (West.)

Exit the Vamp—

Star draws well for me, but this picture was considered quite disappointing by my audiences. Hackneyed theme and nothing new in development. (East.)

After the Show—

Fairly good photoplay, though nothing extra. Business, however, was right good and we have no kick. (South.)

The Golem—

An excellent box office attraction. Did a big business the first week and was held over for a second week's run. Still going good. (Middle West.)

The Bride's Play—

Because of stiff competition and the week before Christmas this production did not attract average business. Production praised by press. (East.)

A Prince There Was—

FOX

A Virgin Paradise—

Good picture, draws well. Better liked by men than by women. Special exploitation stunt a subtitle contest open to women in which fur coat and free pass were awarded as prizes. (Middle West.)

The Rough Diamond—

Business was surprisingly good on this attraction. Patrons like Mix and this story one of his best. (East.)

Desert Blossoms—

Fair picture to fair business. (East.)

Shame—

Audience did not care much for this picture and business was also poor. (East.)

The Primal Law—

Good Western to pretty good business. (East.)

REALART

Her Winning Way—

Good picture. Comes up to the Mary Miles Minter standard and was thoroughly enjoyed. Business right good. (South.)

The Speed Girl—

Bebe Daniels is gaining in popularity in this city and business held up exceptionally well considering the fact that it was put on the week before Christmas. (East.)

Everything for Sale—

This picture did not seem to be strong enough to divert the crowds from the other interests of Yuletide. Business was poor. (East.)

The Case of Becky—

Good picture in which interest was created by linking up with newspaper a story of girl in Ohio who had two characters in one body. Business just fair. Probably rush of Christmas. (Middle West.)

Room and Board—

METRO

Home Stuff—

This show was only fair. But due to holiday season, splendid weather and other contributory causes business was right good. (South.)

Camille—

Fightin' Mad—

The Conquering Power—

Lady Fingers—

UNIVERSAL

The Fox—

Unusually fine picture. Big drawing power. We had to rope off the crowds. Held it over a second week and did almost as well on second week as on first. (Middle West.)

No Woman Knows—

Not as good a picture as it was a story. Business fell off, but the week before Christmas is no time to judge the pulling powers of a picture. (Middle West.)

Conflict—

A Parisian Scandal—

Mediocre picture with fair business. (West.)

PATHE

A Sailor-Made Man—

Drew pleasingly in spite of poor run expected to result from Christmas shopping. (East.)

Lobby display on "Playthings of Destiny" arranged by L. T. Lester, manager of the Rivoli theatre, Columbia, S. C.

"Coat Hanger" Stunt Bobs Up Once Again

The famous old, but ever new if not tried too often, "coat hanger" stunt was used too good account recently by J. Long, manager of the Family theatre, Hazelton, Pa., in connection with the showing of "After Your Own Heart."

Because the picture stars Tom Mix, Manager Long advertised in the local dailies that he had received from Mix 1,000 souvenir coat and trouser hangers, and that they would be distributed among the first 1,000 persons paying for admission to the theatre. The advertisement was so worded as not to give the reader great expectations, but merely to arouse curiosity.

In the lobby of the theatre a man was stationed to guard the "expensive" gifts, which were arrayed on a small table and covered with a large sheet on which was printed "Tom Mix's Souvenirs." When the line began forming each patron was presented with a small envelope, less than 5 x 3 inches, containing a double card printed on yellow board. The card was perforated at two points and a large nail stuck through the holes. This nail was the coat and trouser hanger, and the surprise it caused was followed by amusement on the part of the recipients.

On the card was printed directions for the hammering of the nail and the personal assurance of Mix that the hanger was effective.

Cantrell Pulls Many Stunts for "Bob Hampton"

Manager Cantrell of the Knickerbocker theatre, Nashville, Tenn., had a good western lobby on "Bob Hampton of Placer." In addition to a live array of cut-outs, he built an old-time prairie schooner effect over the ticket booth, with hoops and canvas tops, hay sticking out, and a few guns, cooking outfit, etc. A duplicate display was arranged at the back entrance of the Knickerbocker.

"Right Way" Ballyhoo Interests Gotham

CHARLES B. McDONALD, exploitation manager of the Keith-Proctor New York theatres, gave "The Right Way" engagement at the Broadway theatre, New York, some novel exploitation.

Mr. McDonald placed five men in striped prison garb and three others acted as uniformed guards and they were sent out to "bally-hoo" the city.' So much attention was attracted that traffic was blocked on all corners. The lock-step of the prisoners was so realistic that passersby were convinced that it was a real convict parade until they saw the signs pined on the backs of the men which read, "'The Right Way' at the Broadway theatre all this week."

A large sightseeing bus was secured and paraded the streets with a 24-sheet stand of "The Right Way" on either side. Mr. McDonald also built a 5 x 10 stand and covered it with manacles, handcuffs and various kinds of locks and placed it in the theatre lobby. This attracted thousands daily. A special lobby was built depicting interior prison scenes.

Advance Stage Setting Sells "Old Nest"

In the space between the silver sheet and the front of the stage the manager had built a miniature model farm, with house barn, silo, windmill and other buildings Miniature telephone wires were strung along the road.

On the left of the stage was the frame farmhouse, set back in a spacious yard with a woodshed nearby. Across the road was the barn and windmill with several shocks of corn showing in the foreground

In the road was a truck operated by a mechanical contrivance which ran it down the road and up to the door of the farm-house. The blade of an electric fan was used to represent the windmill in motion A small sign board, connecting the display up with a civic boost for Hampton, was placed in the yard.

This display was shown every night for several days before the screening of "The Old Nest." The whole display was tied up with "The Old Nest" by pictorial one-sheets placed on each side of the screen.

Simple Exploitation Puts "Love" Over for Amos

A dreamy-eyed woman standing before a doorway, apparently awaiting the arrival of her lover, was used by Manager C. H. Amos, of the Strand theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., in exploiting "Love." A sable curtain concealed what lay beyond the doorway, affording the display just the proper touch of mystery.

This entire display, with the exception of the black curtain in the doorway, was made of pasteboard. An occasional timely touch of paint added realism to the cut-outs. That simplicity sometimes has more drawing power in lobby displays than the sensational was demonstrated by Manger Amos' display.

Misses No Bets on "Over the Hill"

Des Moines Exploitation Campaign Sells Picture to Every Fan

THE outstanding features of an exploitation campaign for "Over the Hill" staged by Lowell Cash, Fox exploiteer, for the run of this picture at Edward H. Helmts' Strand theatre, Des Moines, were a nine-day newspaper contest, the first three days' running of it placed on the front page of the home edition; a special showing to ministers and society folk; a tie-up with the Des Moines distributors for the Victrola whereby five good window displays were obtained in the business section of the town; a tie-up with the second largest department store, whereby 3,000 small printed heralds were wrapped in the store's packages during the first week's running of "Over the Hill," and the agreement of the police judge of Des Moines to sentence one of the first offenders of the law to see a performance of "Over the Hill."

The contest with the Tribune was a success, a small amount of money being given as first prize daily and a copy of Will Carleton's poems as second prize. There were three other prizes consisting of passes to see "Over the Hill" at the Strand. More than 175 people were present at the special showing. As a result of this preview of the picture the Tribune, being named as the host in addition to the Strand management, carried additional editorial comment on the picture in the form of stories giving some of the comments overheard and volunteered after the showing.

Edward Helmts, manager of the Strand, arranged for and designed a special window display in a vacant store window next to the entrance of the theatre. This was a farm scene representing a hillside with a small log cabin at the foot of the hill. A small stream of water flowed down the center of the set into a pond near the tiny house. At night a moon on a back drop played on the house and to one side on the back drop was a painted house. Through its windows a small light beamed. At the foot of the road which led to the log cabin was a small sign reading "The Road to 'Over the Hill.'"

This window caused much favorable comment and practically every person walking by the theatre stopped to look at it.

Police Judge O. S. Franklin sentenced a youth who had run away from home and who had been arrested for a petty theft, to see "Over the Hill." The Des Moines newspapers having been tipped off to the stunt, carried stories on the unusual punishment given the offender.

Magdaline Phillips, the motion picture editor of the Tribune, is authority for an article carried in her column to the effect that one man, after having seen the picture, went to his hotel and wrote his mother a letter, enclosing a check for $25.

Another voluntary statement by the Tribune told of a man who gave up a lucrative position in Des Moines to return to Centerville, Iowa, to take care of his mother, he being the only unmarried child in the flock.

Showing part of the exploitation for "Where Lights Are Low" during the showing at the Winter Garden theatre, Seattle, Wash.

Carrier Descends on Seattle

"Where Lights Are Low" Given Through Exploitation Campaign

SEATTLE, Wash., has recently witnessed one of the best exploitation campaigns in its history in the event staged by the Winter Garden theatre for "Where Lights Are Low."

The campaign was planned and executed by James Carrier, R-C Pictures exploiteer, and neglected no opportunities for legitimate publicity.

Mr. Carrier tied up with a local celebration in connecton wth the visit of Marshal Foch by having gummed stickers reading "Welcome Marchal Foch—See 'Where Lights Are Low'" printed and then hiring unemployed members of the American Legion in uniform to stick them on automobile windshields and windows, permission first being secured.

Przes were offered by the theatre to the children under fifteen years of age who would appear at the theatre at a given hour, arrayed in the best character make-up. Hundreds of children responded and many of them brought their pets, including donkeys, cats, dogs, rabbits, birds and even a tame bear cub. The children were lined up in front of the theatre to be photographed and were held until traffic was blocked. Then the police interfered and there was more publicity.

The boys and girls were paraded through the streets and back to the theatre to see the show. Large numbers of adults followed them into the house—paying the regular admission fee.

The children were taken to a local football game where 25,000 people were assembled and paraded about the field in costume much to the amusement of the crowd and with a great amount of advertising for the picture forthcoming.

The American Legion boys were hired to hang cards advertising the engagement on the door knobs of the business places on the Saturday night previous to the opening. The cards in most cases were allowed to remain until business time Monday.

In addition to these exploitation stunts, the picture was backed by a big newspaper display campaign and a big billboard campaign. The lobby was beautifully decorated in an Oriental theme, and Japanese lanterns were suspended over the sidewalk for a block in both directions from the theatre. The expense of the campaign was small though virtually every resident of Seattle was reached, and it proved to be a splendid investment, based on the box-office returns.

Mitchell and the Gazette offered as prizes a suit of clothes, donated by a clothier; $5 in gold given by the theatre; a Jackie Coogan doll contributed by a toy shop; a regulation football given by a sporting goods store and twenty free tickets to a special matinee.

The contest was in charge of a star feature writer on the Gazette and so much space was accorded it and so much punch put into the copy that the number of replies received far exceeded any contest ever put on in the state.

School Children Help Put Over "Connecticut Yankee"

The Johnstown, Pa., public schools have their own publication, which circulates among 5,000 students. It has always been the policy of the Board of Education to exclude advertisements from the pages of the paper, which actually reaches about 85 per cent of the homes in the city.

When the management of the Parkview theatre booked "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" permission was sought for advertising space in the school journal. By consenting to give special school children's matinees at a slightly reduced price of admission, permission to use the paper's pages free of charge was granted. The matinee gained the theatre considerably publicity in the daily newspapers and interested the entire city in the production.

The Johnstown Ledger conducted a Mark Twain essay contest in which the prizes awarded to the winners were free tickets to the show.

The largest department store in town distributed several thousand book-marks advertising the "Connecticut Yankee" with every purchase made for a period of three days. Stills and window displays were used by the store tying up with various bits of merchandise the name of the picture.

By arrangement with a local automobile and motorcycle agency, two motorcycles and a machine were obtained for use in a street parade. The car was decorated with large canvas signs telling of the engagement of the picture, and the men riding the cycles were attired in armor. By using a siren in the body of the machine general attention was attracted to the procession, which paraded along the city's streets regularly until the run of the feature was concluded.

Several of the window displays placed about the city were characterized by such armor as was used by the warriors of King Arthur's time.

Libson Plays Up Home Talent

A new idea in lobby displays is the "Gallery of Cincinnati Stars" which has been inaugurated in the lobby of the Walnut theatre, I. Libson's house in Cincinnati. The idea was conceived and carried out by Al Hyams, house manager.

Already there appear, framed in the lobby of the Walnut, the photographs of eleven screen stars claimed as native sons and daughters of the Queen City.

The pictures of screen favorites now hanging in Cincinnati's largest motion picture theatre include Marguerite Clark, Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett, Hobert Bosworth, Ben Turpin, Edythe Chapman, Theda Bara, Anna May, Herschel Mayall, Ray C. Smallwood and Carl Gantvoort. All of these actors, directors or producers are well known to the Cincinnati public as favored sons and daughters who have arisen to fame.

Hyams' big motive in creating this display, he said, was to help the public of Cincinnati to appreciate home talent. The "Gallery of Cincinnati Stars" achieved instant popularity and called forth favorable comment from press and public.

"Over the Hill" Ballyhoo Works Well

An old man attired like the father in "Over the Hill" was employed by Manager George Cohen of the Cohen theatre, Newburgh, N. Y., during the run of the picture to parade about the city carrying a suitcase on which was appropriate advertising matter.

The lobby of the theatre was decorated with two large oil cloth signs and a Victrola played the song "Over the Hill" throughout the evening performance.

"Molly O" Hits Cincinnatti

Big Exploitation Campaign Staged for Gift's Theatre Engagement

"MOLLY O" is playing an indefinite engagement at Gift's theatre, Cincinnati, following an exploitation campaign that has set new standards for the city.

All sorts of tie-ups and stunts were used with good effect. The song "Molly O" was sung at the Lyric theatre, the McMahon & Jackson vaudeville house and by song pluggers in various other public amusement places of the city. A special trailer on the picture was used well in advance of the opening date. A young woman made up as is Mabel Normand in the picture and carrying a dinner pail as shown by the accompanying cut paraded the streets as a ballyhoo. The song pluggers and the girl put on an original sketch from in front of a song shop advantageously located.

Private screenings were arranged for the press, city officials, clergy, club and society leaders and others whose recommendation was desirable. Window displays were arranged in drug stores and soda fountains were induced to tie up with various "Molly O" drinks.

A chain of bakeries got out a "Molly O" breakfast roll. A toy shop created a "lady" doll. This doll was, after being exhibited in the shop window, auctioned off as a design by Mabel Normand with the proceeds to go to the local Children's Hospital.

Mabel Normand playing cards were distributed among a half dozen clubs in the city, and sold at the theatre as souvenirs.

The chef of the Chamber of Commerce diningroom prepared a special "Molly O" salad, which was duplicated in a number of other clubs and restaurants.

The shoe repair shops were induced to tie up with the general publicity by inserting in their windows cards advertising "Molly O" Sullivan heels.

A half-dozen girls were employed for several days following the opening of the picture to telephone to a selected list of private residences of the city. Very little was said in the telephone conversation and there was no solicitation, but the impression was left that a friend had rung them up to recommend the picture and mention where it was playing.

All in all, it was one of the most comprehensive campaigns ever put over in Cincinnati. The First National exchange and the McMahon & Jackson publicity force cooperated in the campaign.

Carpenter Uses Ballyhoo for "The Sheik"

A big white Arabian horse mounted by a rider appropriately garbed and carrying a banner advertising the show was one of the exploitation stunts used by George E. Carpenter, managing director of the Paramount Express theatre, Salt Lake City, to aid in putting over his engagement of "The Sheik."

Buggy Bally-Hoo Effective for "Over the Hill"

The management of the Crystal theatre, Braddock, Pa., rigged up an old decrepit buggy and an ancient mare for a street ballyhoo during the recent showing of "Over the Hill."

A man and woman, dressed to resemble the father and mother in the picture, were seated in the buggy and drove the dilapidated outfit about the streets of Braddock and out into the rural districts from which much of the Crystal's patronage is drawn.

On the sides of the buggy were two canvas signs reading: "'Over the Hill' to the Crystal theatre. A great motion picture." Over the rear of the buggy was attached a large brass frame containing a number of stills of "Over the Hill."

Albany Exhibitor Dresses Up for "The Sheik"

Still cut-outs made a neat puppet show out of Skinner's Book Store window, Albany, when "The Sheik" played at the Leland theatre.

A few scraps of striped cloth made a miniature tent. The floor was covered with sand and cut-outs from the stills gave animation to a little desert scene. Insert cards, poster cut-outs and copies of the novel featured in the display.

Jackson Devises Ingenious "The Fox" Display

For a showing of "The Fox," at the Tudor theatre, Atlanta, Manager James Jackson had a large box placed in the lobby, with a glass, painted white to render it non-transparent, across the top.

Tiny-cut-outs of mounted men, in a posse, chasing one lone man, also mounted, were arranged so that a light placed in the box, flung shadows of these cut-outs against the glass. The effect of a chase was well-managed through the shadow-method of the display, simple and inexpensive as it was, proved very beneficial to the box-office receipts.

Free Ticket Scheme Packs a Punch

George R. Moore, owner and manager of the Lion theatre, Bellevue, Ohio, got several times as much free advertising for eighteen free tickets, not long since, as most managers get for eighteen—and sometimes several times eighteen—dollars.

Bellevue, a little city of six thousand population, has for some time had a telephone operator—Miss Charlotta Strohm by name—who is recognized as "a prize" and was written up as such in a magazine devoted to the interests of telephone companies and their employees.

When Miss Strohm resigned to marry A. F. Loth, a merchant living in Sandusky, not far from Bellevue, the friends of the bride-elect began entertainng in her honor.

Moore, fully appreciating the excellent service he as well as Bellevue generally had enjoyed during the reign of the "prize" operator over the switchboard, concluded that he was indebted in a business way if not socially, and that he ought to "do something for her" as the girls of Miss Strohm's acquaintance were saying.

Moore arranged a theatre party in Miss Strohm's honor and Miss Strohm with her fiance and sixteen guests responded to an invitation to "come and bring your friends" to see "The Devil's Garden."

The Bellevue paper carried a story concerning the party. The townspeople wanted to be "in on" the party, and were. In consequence, the box office profited.

Noble Hearne Builds Two "Noble" Lobby Displays

The display for "Sure Fire" cost less than $100 and was effective enough to increase business in face of a pre-holiday slump.

The "rocks" were made of crumpled paper felt with old scenery dampened in glue water stretched over the paper while wet. Sand was sprinkled over the wet cloth and then a little tinting with the paint brush made the whole very realistic. Real sage brush was used and the sky cloth was painted in blue and properly lighted in the same colors.

"The Millionaire" display is largely explained by the illustration. The safe is of course a "prop," but it was made especially for the occasion, incidentally at the expense of the Cary Safe Co., who liked the idea of the advertising. The hinges, handles and combination mechanism were furnished by the Cary people.

Eleven hundred money bags were borrowed from local banks, stuffed with paper and arranged as shown in the cut. The bars inside were of wood, painted to represent iron. Stage money was strung across the ceiling. The lighting for this lobby display was amber and the most expensive thing about it was a $50 cost for lumber.

Has Horse Parade to Exploit "Experience"

In these days of automobiles, the equine quadruped is as much out of a job as any of the unemployed you hear so much about.

Manager F. H. Fairchild, of the Curran Opera House, Boulder, Col., hired eleven horses to parade them for "Experience." Each had a blanket, on which was printed one letter of the title. Since the procession stretched over a whole block the people had to watch it go by before they could make out the message. This greatly increased the effectiveness of the stunt.

The head of the procession was the blanket containing the theatre's name.

Mechanical Picture Big Attraction on Chicago's Loop

The mechanism of the display was so arranged that logs were shown tumbling over the dam and water pouring down in a most realistic manner.

Two Hundred Bellingham Belles Try for Prizes

Two hundred women in Bellingham, Wash., thought they looked like Gloria Swanson, Agnes Ayres, Bebe Daniels and Wanda Hawley.

With such interest it is safe to proclaim the resemblance contest conducted by the American theatre, Bellingham, Washington, a first rate publicity stunt for "The Affairs of Anatol."

It ran for two weeks in a tieup with one of the town's newspapers. The prizes were small purses and free tickets

Big Ben Theatre Stages Big Exploitation Campaign

William Erk & Sons, managers of the Big Ben theatre, Ilion, N. Y., neglected no exploitation possibilities during their recent engagement of "The Old Nest."

Four 24s in prominent locations in the town;

Ones in nearly every available spot in the town;

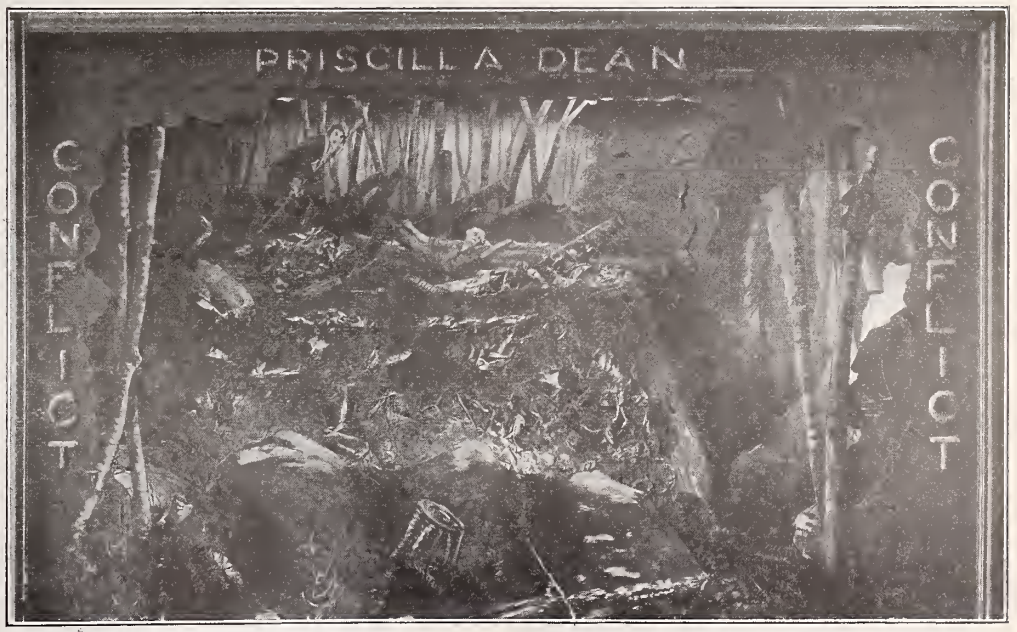
Banners on eighty-six per cent of the commercial trucks of the town;

Banners in front of the theatre;

Window cards and one-sheets in neighboring towns;



Hand-bills and throwaways in every house in town; also in two other towns;

Having an advance screening for the newspaper men and a few others;

Liberal space in the two Utica dailies that have a large circulation in Ilion;

Canton, O., Merchants Aid "Courage" Engagement

John Kessler, who controls the destinies of the New Alhambra theatre, Canton, Ohio, arranged some most advantageous tie-ups and constructed some novelty advertising copy for his recent engagement of "Courage."

A double truck of co-operative advertising in the Canton News was one result of his efforts. Four columns on each page, fifteen inches in depth, contained the theatre's selling talk for the picture. The rest of the space was given over to advertising for local merchants.

Mercantile establishments worded their copy so that it tied up very well with the phrase "Courage." One ad for a local shoe store urged the people to "Take Courage" as shoe prices were coming down rapidly. A dentist stated that it "Doesn't Take Courage" when you come to his office to have your dental work done. A fur store states that it "Takes Courage" to cut fur prices at this time of the year.

At any rate, any reader of that issue of the Daily News was sure to have the word "Courage" impressed on his memory in indelible syllables.

Four days after the ad was run Mr. Kessler stated that each and every one of the advertisers agreed that the ad was well worth while as it had increased the business of each concern that had had the "Courage" to go in on the double-page spread.

Dog Show Furnishes Cutts with Exploitation Idea

The Seattle Star has been running a "mutt" dog show, only canines who were not thoroughbreds being eligible for entry, as a means of swelling the funds of the Community Chest.

There were various prizes and a lot of publicity and interest for the event. William Cutts, manager of the Clemmer theatre, was running a Century comedy, "Around Corners," in which "Brownie" is the star performer. Consequently he saw an opportunity to horn in on the dog show, and this is the way he did it:

He offered, through the Star's columns, prizes to the two dogs most closely resembling "Brownie," and entered a painted "Brownie" in the show itself properly labelled to attract attention to the theatre and the showing of the picture. Local movies of the dog show were taken to be shown at the Clemmer. The idea was a hit from every angle.

Special Lobby for "Life's Darned Funny"

Manager W. T. Murray celebrated his return to the post of manager of the Alamo No. 2 theatre, Atlanta, by a special lobby for a second-showing of "Life's Darned Funny." The picture has to do with life in Greenwich Village, and so the lobby represented a studio in that much-talked of section. A big easel, with a canvas on which a picture had been just sketched, occupied the center of the lobby. In front of it, a sort of stool held a palette with colors squeezed on it from various tubes of paint scattered around, and a paint-stained, much be-spattered smock was flung across one corner of the easel.

At one side, stood a table on which is a bottle of "red ink" (an uncorked bottle of grape-juice), a half of a loaf of French bread from which bits have been torn instead of cut—food from a delicatessen in a little wooden tray. A glass half-full of grape-juice—all in a state of great confusion.

And at the other side of the "studio," is a dress-maker's dummy, with a strip of cloth flung around it, as if a dress was about to be draped on the figure.

For all its interest-awaking atmosphere it was a most inexpensive lobby.

Schwalm and His Local Editor Work Together

The Hamilton Journal helped John Schwalm, manager of the Rialto theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, put over "The Old Swimmin' Hole" by arranging and advertising a children's matinee. The whole campaign was outlined so it would appear that Mr. Schwalm had nothing to do with the party except that he loaned the theatre and the picture.

For several days the Journal carried big stories about the party and in every issue was a coupon to be clipped and presented by any child as partial admittance to the theatre.

The party was a great success.

Unique Post Card Exploitation for "Shame"

The management of the New Dawe's theatre, Bridgeport, Conn., devised a unique mailing card for exploitation used during the opening week of the house in connection with the run of "Shame."

The card, when folded once and sealed with a postage stamp, assumed the proportions of a post card. The first or cover page was printed in a pink-screen effect, and bore only two words, "Pocket Dictionary." A white panel remained on one side to permit addressing.

On the inside in large type was reproduced a section of a dictionary defining the word "shame." Then followed: "What was the shame that drove David Fielding from his young wife and child into the trackless wastes of the Great North? See 'SHAME' (in red ink), selected as the opening attraction of Bridgeport's newest and finest temple of the screen art—Dawe's theatre."

Ten thousand of these cards were sent out.

Landau's "Queen of Sheba" Prologue

The prologue which Managing Director Leo A. Landau, of the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, originated for his engagement of "The Queen of Sheba" ranks as one of the most artistic and pleasing numbers ever presented in the city.

A very elaborate throne scene, as shown in the accompanying cut, was erected on the stage with a tenor and soprano made up to represent King Solomon and the Queen of the picture rendering appropriate musical selections and enacting a carefully worked out pantomime program.

"Disraeli" Period Costumes Make Effective Window Display

COSTUMES and gowns of the period of Disraeli, when he was prime minister of England, and Queen Victoria was in the zenith of her power as Great Britain's ruler were used with telling effect recently when "Disraeli" was being shown at Wilmer & Vincent's Colonial theatre, Harrisburg, Pa. The gowns were shown at one of the most prominent business houses in Harrisburg, and in such a way that the display won a good deal of newspaper publicity. As a result there was always a group of women before the window, and the showing aided greatly in a general exploitation campaign that brought highly successful business.

Prescott Gives Winnipeg People Artistic Prologue

"The Four Horsemen" in Winnipeg, Manitoba, refer not to a famous novel and a well-known picture (advt.) but to Manager Jack Prescott's exploitation for "The Sheik" when it played at the Capitol theatre.

Prescott was reading the trade papers and decided to get out an Arabian rider as a ballyhoo. However, horses being plentiful in his part of the country, he quadrupled the stunt, sending a squadron down the streets in line formation.

Mr. Prescott dressed his horsemen in white and in the red and white cloth made famous by real Arabs.

A prologue of excellent artistry was a part of the presentation for the picture. The stage setting showed an Arab camp with four "Arabs" marching slowly to and fro in front of it when the curtains parted. "A Son of the Desert Am I" and "Till the Sands of the Desert Grow Cold," with the lightings changed to the action of the music, were rendered by the male quartette.

New State Theatre, Canton, Pa., Sold on Exploitation

Opening day of the new State theatre at Scranton, Pa., was November 7. Then, to maintain the high pitch of interest created by the formal opening, the management decided to name November 10 "Grandmothers' Day," as an exploitation feature for "Over the Hill," which was offered as the attraction of the first week's presentation.

To begin with, announcements were made in all the daily papers that Mary Carr and her daughter Louella would make a personal appearance, and that all grandmothers attending the "Grandmothers' Matinee" would be photographed with them and permitted to buy prints at cost price.

Free admission was offered to all women over sixty, provided they made application for passes at the box office at some time prior to the matinee. This prevented confusion which might have arisen had no passes been demanded of the grandmothers. Each woman requesting a pass was also allotted a free ticket for a grandchild under sixteen.

A private showing for the clergymen and teachers of Scranton, and an extensive newspaper advertising campaign based upon the favorable opinions expressed and written by these, rounded out the exploitation of the State's opening program.

Toledo Merchants Help Pantheon Theatre Put Over Picture

The first page was devoted exclusively to the picture and its engagement at the Pantheon. Following this there was a two-page spread, tying up the picture with a lot of assorted Christmas advertising. "What Do Men Want?" in large display type, made a streamer head across the two pages. Then came the ads, each one hooking up to the title of the play. Across the bottom was the line, "Find the Answer to 'What Do Men Want?' at the Pantheon theatre all this week."

Inexpensive Lobby Display Helps Koch on Ray Picture

Manager Bill Koch of the Garden theatre, Minneapolis, conceived and planned the execution of a striking lobby display on "Two Minutes to Go," playing recently, second run, at the Strand.

Pennants cut out of paper and of the variety used by football fans were hung on the canopy of the theatre and directly in front of the box office a huge mounted cut-out of Ray about to buck the line was placed where it attracted the attention of the passerby. Pine boarding was used around the lobby and box office, giving the appearance of the stands used at small colleges.

The illusion was carried out to such an extent that patrons were in the same frame of mind as they would be at a real college game and even cheered when the climax to the big football game flashed on the screen.

Circus Atmosphere Stressed in "Little Clown" Exploitation

Manager Kennedy of the Galax theatre, Birmingham, Ala., used a variety of stunts on "The Little Clown." The lobby looked like a circus lot with a cut-out of Miss Minter walking a wire up high, also a goose doing the same. The ticket booth was painted in red and gold to look like the back end of a circus ticket-wagon. On top of it was a big cut-out of a lady snake-charmer doing her bit. A big paper elephant was plastered on one side-wall. A ballyhoo was a great success; two very small donkeys, carrying two grown boys whose feet dragged the ground, with appropriate banners—they drew great crowds on the streets and blocked traffic. Irate traffic cops, pushing at the business end of the donkeys—who were in no hurry at all—made great fun.

Clever Novelty Helps "Over the Hill" at Boston

A novelty hand-out which brought in greater results than any single bit of exploitation in the history of the Tremont Temple, Boston, was recently devised by the management of the house and distributed in connection with the showing of "Over the Hill."

This was a cut-out less than six inches in length and represented a small girl carrying a basket over one arm. On the basket was printed the following message: "I am walking to Tremont Temple, Over the Hill. Walk with me."

The unique character of the idea lay in the construction of the feet. Instead of having two stationary feet, the "girl" was provided with four mobile ones, only two being visible at the same time. The four feet revolved and when pushed over any surface gave the illusion of movement of the part of the cut-out.

Instructions on the back were: "Run the little girl along your arm from your hand Over the Hill of your shoulder." Several thousand of these novelties were distributed.

Bridal Party Helps Robertson on "Dangerous Curve Ahead"

A WEDDING party, followed by a trip in a decorated bridal automobile, was used as a part of his exploitation for "Dangerous Curve Ahead," by Manager E. C. Robertson, of the Victory theatre, Fayetteville, Ark.

The wedding took place on the stage of the theatre and the young married couple was given a wedding trip by automobile through Fayetteville and the surrounding territory by Mr. Robertson in a sedan motor car which was decorated with the usual newlywed ribbons, Kewpie doll, etc. A large sign carrying the title of the photoplay was mounted on the front of the radiator, while banners carrying the name of the picture, theatre and show dates were fastened to the running-board on each side.

Washington "Ladies Must Live" Stunt Goes Good Again

Manager Stanley Chambers of the Palace theatre, Wichita, Kas., was quick to take advantage of a timely tie-up during the showing of "Ladies Must Live." At the time more than five hundred women workers of the packing industry were out of employment because of the general strike. Ten attractive girls were chosen from among them and the Wichita Daily Eagle agreed to supply the girls with papers free of charge during the three-day exploitation stunt.

White silk sashes, with the words "Ladies Must Live" printed across them in red, were worn by the girls, and when they sallied forth on the street their papers sold like the proverbial hot cakes. Four banners carried by the girls also helped.

Football Team Tie-up Still Makes Good

The idea of tieing up with local football teams as exploitation for "Two Minutes to Go," originated by Joseph Plunkett during the New York showing at the Mark Strand and used frequently since, was tried out with the usual success by Manager A. G. Talbot of the America theatre, Denver, during his recent showing of this picture.

In adopting the college tie-up for the American theatre, Mr. Talbot went even further by gaining the co-operation of a local newspaper in furthering the stunt and in this manner was able to get a larger degree of publicity. Mr. Talbot arranged with the sporting editor of the Denver Post for distribution of tickets to his theatre to all local scholastic football players. Different nights during the week were designated for different educational institutions of the city and players were asked to call at the sporting department of the Post for identification.

"Caligari" Exploitation Is Freakish But Effective

Bread knives with corrugated edges, such as are found in the chains of ten-cent stores, were stuck in the doors of half a dozen prominent residents at night, a week or so before the showing. A bit of red paper with "Revenge—Cesare" printed upon it was attached to the handle of each knife. Four times during the night the police department was called on the phone by agitated householders who had discovered the bread knife stuck in their doorway. The Pottstown Ledger carried a top-head story about it.

The next day the stunt was linked up with the approaching screening of the "Caligari" film.

A lobby display consisting of a doctor's office, with the physician made up to represent Dr. Caligari, the box office girl dressed as a head nurse and another girl as an assistant nurse, was installed. The office furniture consisted of chairs and tables which were decidedly "futuristic" in their lines and colorings. Signboards on either side of the lobby entrance informed passers-by that this was "The Office of Dr. Caligari. Office Hours 1 to 11. For appointment see Head Nurse."

Cabinets containing the cut-out figure of Cesare from the six-sheet in the cabinet, and the figures of Dr. Caligari and the girl, were placed in prominent store windows.

A special window carried a display consisting of a large imitation phonograph record. A cut-out figure of a large dog was placed near the record while a label proclaimed that the record was "His Master's Choice." Yellow window cards with a black head of Dr. Caligari were used in this phonograph record display and in other windows. A special four-page herald was preapred, carrying on its front page the sinister figure of Dr. Caligari and illustrated within from stills of the production.

Novel Herald for "The Devil Within"

The hand-out was printed on thick white paper measuring two and a half by eight inches. On one side in red ink was printed "GO TO see 'THE DEVIL WITHIN' with DUSTIN FARNUM AT THE EMPIRE THEATRE, THURSDAY, FRIDAY AND SATURDAY."

Five inches from the top there was a fold which, when turned over, covered everything but the words "GO TO see THE DEVIL." The word "see" was printed in very small type and was hardly noticeable. On the back of the novelty, which was turned over at the crease, was a picture of the devil.

The card attracted general attention, and because of its cleverness made the favorable impression which was hoped for by its creator. Although 5,000 of the cards were printed, the expense was small as compared with the results obtained.

Log Cabin Lobby Front for "Snow Blind"

John M. Anderson, manager of the Princess theatre, Boone, Iowa, prepared an effective and inexpensive theatre front display for "Snowblind." The display was built entirely by Mr. Anderson and his staff, and it aided materially in drawing extra business during the showing of the photoplay.

The title of the picture, in large, white, cut-out letters, extended clear across the front of the theatre directly under the marquise. An imitation log-cabin was built around the ticket booth. Two cards of stills, with cut-out pine trees in the sloping tops of the large pieces of cardboard, stood against the wall at either side of the entrance.

Other posters and frames flanked the log-cabin box office. The display was the centre of much attention all the time that it remained in the lobby.

Window display on "Dangerous Curve Ahead" by A. C. Walterhouse, pub. director for the Post theatre, Battle Creek, Mich., and described in the accompanying story

Baltimore Merchants Exploit "Connecticut Yankee"

Paper bags imprinted with an announcement of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" and distributed by a number of grocers and butcher shops with sales made, was an angle of exploitation recently utilized by the management of the New theatre, Baltimore. Further exploitation included attaching string tags to automobiles and door-knobs throughout the residential districts of the city. By publicizing the week's program among the automobilists many persons were attracted to the theatre despite the fact that they did not live within short distances.

The lobby of the house was decorated with board painted to resemble the castles and parapets of royalty in the days of King Arthur and his Knights of the Round Table.

Walterhouse Has Real Idea

"Great Moment" Exploitation Interests Post Theatre Patrons

FOR inexpensive and original exploitation the following stunt put over by A. C. Walterhouse, advertising manager of the Post theatre, Battle Creek, Mich., for "The Great Moment" draws first prize.

Some time prior to the opening date of the showing Mr. Walterhouse sent out an alleged copy of a letter from Gloria Swanson stating that she was mailing two dozen rings made from her hairpins, like the one used as a wedding ring in the picture. Some thousand persons were reached with this letter besides copies that were posted in public places.

The next step in the campaign was to insert an ad in the "Lost and Found" columns of the local papers which read as follows:

"Lost—Somewhere between the G. T. Depot and Sanitarium a lady's ring of peculiar design and workmanship. When lost the ring was placed in a small pasteboard box addressed to the Post theatre, Battle Creek, Mich. Finder please return to Post theatre and get reward."

Then, a few days after the ad had been run, twenty-five boxes that would answer the description of the ad and each containing one of the hairpin rings and a slip of paper explaining that the inclosed was a duplicate of the ring Miss Swanson had worn in the picture were distributed on different streets in the city. The box also carried the information that the finders were to keep the ring but that on returning the box to the theatre it would be good for admission to see "The Great Moment." Twenty-four of the boxes were turned in and the stunt caused no end of comment.

De Bruler Joins the Lobby Display Exponents

Special lobbies have been practically unknown to the Grand theatre, Atlanta, but Manager De Bruler, who took charge of the theatre early in November, is a great believer in them, and his first special lobby was for "Short Skirts."

A small stage, about eight feet long, was built along one side of the long, rather narrow lobby of the theatre. This stage had a row of footlights, and the curtain was at "half-mast." Back of the curtain had been arranged four hosiery "dummies," each clad in the filmiest of stockings, and extravagant high-heeled slippers. The curtain revealed these dummies about two inches below the knee and the narrowest of frills simulated "Short Skirts."

A special 100 feet of film had been used the week before at every performance to advertise the picture. This special strip showed a curtain in half raises, so that the people passing behind it were visible almost to the knees. Across this "stage" paraded girls attired in costumes ranging all the way from the sweeping trains of '76, through the crinolined hoop skirt age and down to the modern flapper in her knee-length skirts and chiffon hose. This picture was always received hilariously, and did no small amount towards boosting the picture.

Mitchell Turns Poet to Boost "The Whistle"

To Kalamazoo, Michigan's most mouth-filling town, belongs the discovery of Bill Hart, poet. Before the Postal Telegraph Company offices was a Brobignagian telegram, about the size of five one-sheets arranged side by side. The message read:

"Mr. and Mrs. Kalamazoo and Family, care of Majestic theatre:
"All folks remember me,
And what a shootin' man I used to be;
If you like plans that with action bristle
I'm here on the 9th in 'The Whistle.'
Bill Hart."

W. Griffith Mitchell, manager of the Majestic Gardens, seized this location to be one of the best in Kalamazoo. The display was talked about.

Duluth Newspapers Aid "Over the Hill"

Messrs. Finkelstein and Ruben, operators of the New Garrick theatre, Duluth, Minn., aroused the people of that city with an exploitation tie-up during the recent showing of "Over the Hill" that had every one "remembering mother" with flowers, candies and letters.

With the aid of a William Fox exploitation representative, arrangements were completed with a large number of florists, confectioners, stationers and department stores for the establishment of window displays, the general theme of which would be to urge the public to remember mother with some little present.

In addition to the window displays, a newspaper contest was conducted in one of the evening dailies on the Mary Carr photographs, in which she was posed as various famous women in American history. Prizes consisting of copies of Will Carleton's poems, on one of which "Over the Hill" was based, and free tickets to the showing, were offered to those who guessed the names of the famous women represented—one of the poses being printed daily in the newspaper—together with the best short essay on the famous woman's career.

Small Town Manager Gives Coogan Picture Big Campaign

Jackie Coogan in "Peck's Bad Boy" came to the Haven theatre, Olean, N. Y., last week. The picture played to larger houses than had ever been in attendance at this house and standing room was at a premium for the entire run. In connection with the showing Manager A. W. Root put over some excellent tieups, including one with the local distributor for the Peck's Bad Boy suits and overcoats. The company printed a coupon in large ads in the Olean newspapers entitling every boy presenting it together with 11 cents to admission at a special showing of the picture. The regular admission is 22 cents. The special show was put on after school hours. In connection with the show Mr. Root also staged a prologue, representing a grocery store scene, which opened with a local youngster, dressed as Jackie Coogan, seen sneaking out on the stage looking for an apple to steal while the owner of the store is absent. A policeman stood in the doorway. Seeing the youth steal the forbidden fruit, the cop gives chase. The chase led to many amusing incidents, with everything in the store being knocked over. The youth who impersonated Coogan was the son of the stage manager of the Haven.

Niagara Falls Book Stores Cooperate with Finke

When D. H. Finke, manager of the Bellevue theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., put on "The Sheik," he arranged with several of the local book stores for window displays of Edith M. Hull's book, and in return put the names of the firms co-operating in his ads, calling attention to the fact that patrons still had time to read the story before seeing the picture version. These ads were run several days before the opening. Mr. Finke put on an excellent prologue in connection with the picture, used large newspaper space and billboards, distributed window cards all over Niagara Falls and surrounding towns and as a result packed them in during the presentation.

Ralph Ince with Selznick in 1922

The announcement is made by Myron Selznick, vice-president in charge of production, that Ralph Ince will continue to be an important factor in the screening of Selznick pictures during 1922. Before Mr. Selznick departed for Europe he outlined plans that will keep Mr. Ince busy with production engaging Eugene O'Brien and Elaine Hammerstein as stars.

Loew Takes Educational Output for Entire Year

MARCUS LOEW has just signed a contract for the entire output of Educational Films, Inc., for the 1921-1922 season. Throughout the thirty-five theatres in Greater New York City and the nearby sections of New York State and New Jersey, Educational Pictures will form the bulk of the short subject presentations during the coming year.

This contract calls for seventy-one two-reel comedies, besides such subjects as Sketchografs, Robert C. Bruce Scenics Beautiful, World Wanderings, Kinograms, the news reel, etc., which the Loew theatres already are showing.

"Miss Lulu Bett" Success

Jesse Lasky Sees Proof of the Triumph of Artistic Pictures

THE splendid success being achieved by William deMille's picture, "Miss Lulu Bett," is particularly gratifying because it is striking evidence that you do not have to play down to the American public," said Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in a statement issued this week.

"Because some pictures, well acted and well produced have in the past not gone over to tremendous successes," said Mr. Lasky, "a certain section of the industry has apparently jumped to the conclusion that, to be successful picture producers must stick to hokum and claptrap. I have no patience with this theory, as it has been demonstrated time and again that you cannot aim too high in purveying entertainment to the American exhibitors and American people.

"In producing 'Miss Lulu Bett' as a picture, we not only took into consideration the powerful drama which lay in Zona Gale's story, but we also were guided by the tremendous popularity of her novel and her play. We saw immense possibilities in this story as a picture, and we were strengthened in our belief by the receipt of numerous letters from clubwomen and other leaders of various communities expressing pleasure that they were going to have a chance to see 'Miss Lulu Bett' on the screen.

"The success of 'Miss Lulu Bett' at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, as well as at other big first-run theatres throughout the country proves we were justified in our high hopes for this picture. Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rivoli, told me he thought 'Miss Lulu Bett' was one of the best motion pictures he had seen in all the years he had been in the business."

Goldwyn Comedy Western

"His Back Against the Wall" Is Built for Laughing Purposes Only

"HIS Back Against the Wall," the New Goldwyn comedy by John Frederick, in which Raymond Hatton is featured, is said to be a new kind of western photoplay. Julien Josephson, one of the most expert continuity writers in the country, prepared the script from Mr. Frederick's novel, while Paul Bern, editor of Goldwyn's scenario department, edited it. Rowland V. Lee was especially engaged to direct this picture and was so successful that Goldwyn retained him for other productions.

The story concerns one Jeremy Dice, a tailor's assistant in a New York East Side shop, who is a born coward. When he hasn't spunk enough to resent his "girl" being taken from his arms by an old flame at a dance where they won the prize, the tailor fires Jeremy. He goes West, is robbed and kicked off a freight train into an Arizona desert. He takes shelter in an abandoned shed in the desert where two bank robbers kill each other in a quarrel over the division of their latest robbery.

The sheriff's posse finds Jeremy on the scene with the revolver of one of the robber's in his trembling fingers. The timid and shrinking tailor's helper is hailed as a mighty two-gun man and carried to the town of Chatterton in triumph. Jeremy tries to explain to Mary Welling whose brother had been killed by the robbers, that he had nothing to do with the death of the robbers, but lacks the courage to do even that.

"Way Down East" Does Remarkable Business

J. G. Goldman, manager of the Strand Theatre, Fargo, N. Dak., reports that during a nine-day showing of D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East," during which time a new $250,000 theatre was opened in Fargo, the Strand not only did a remarkable business throughout the run of this United Artists release, but that the management did not hear of a single dissatisfied patron.

"We want to go on record," Mr. Goldman reports, "as saying that in our opinion 'Way Down East' is the greatest box-office and audience attraction produced in the last five years."

"The Three Musketeers" Crowds Front Page

What happens when Douglas Fairbanks and his "The Three Musketeers" goes into a small city, and how the local paper spreads this star and his greatest picture all over the front page, was demonstrated when this United Artists release was shown at the Palace Theatre, El Centro, Calif.

The day before the first showing, the Imperial Valley Press, an afternoon paper, gave the feature as big a front page display head as any other piece of news, the story running over for a half column turn on page two. The next afternoon there was another front page display. The next afternoon saw still another first page "smash."

Tod Browning Will Direct "Crook" Story

Tod Browning has been selected by Universal to direct for the screen what is characterized to be "the most startling underwold story penned since O'Henry. The story, titled "Peter-man," was written by Louis Victor Eytinge, a life-termer in the Arizona state penitentiary. The author's acquaintance with the "crook" and the motives that actuate this type is said to have resulted in an unique work.

Herbert Hawlinson will play the stellar role, and the supporting cast will include George Webb and William Courtwright. The leading woman has not been selected as yet. Harvey Gates has just completed the scenario of the original story.

Vignola Preparing for New Production

While no definite announcement is forthcoming, it is understood that Robert G. Vignola's next production for Cosmopolitan, for which he is now preparing, will be a big spectacular picture requiring colossal sets and a large number of people. Mr. Vignola has just completed "Beauty's Worth," by Sophie Kerr, starring Marion Davies. This is the second production with Miss Davies as a star, his first having been "Enchantment."

No definite information is available as to the title and type of story, nor as to the cast, but it is understood that the settings will be done by Joseph Urban who did the settings in "Enchantment" and several other Vignola productions. D. P. Carle who was Mr. Vignola's assistant for many years and who was given leave of absence several months ago to direct several short subjects has returned to Mr. Vignola's staff in his old position as Assistant Director.

Expect "Quo Vadis" to Equal Original Gross

"QUO VADIS," George Kleine's production of the Sienkiewicz novel, released in a brand-new garb by Wid Gunning, Inc., bids fair to break the records it made when it was first shown in this country, announces that company. Trade and lay critics are united in proclaiming it still, ranking with "Birth of a Nation," as among the greatest spectacular productions ever made.

When the massive Italian production first invaded America, it was handled as a regular production, at what was then an unusually high admission charge. It ran for twenty-six crowded weeks at the Astor theatre, New York City, and was shown at a great many large houses throughout the country, being handled as a road attraction. Today, according to reports being received at the Wid Gunning home office, there is every indication that the two million dollars it grossed then, will be equalled, if not exceeded.

Pathe Releases for Jan. 8th

"The Canadian Lynx" of "Bill and Bob Series" Heads the Schedule

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., announces that "The Canadian Lynx," the next offering of the series of "Adventures of Bill and Bob," will head the short-subject features and serial episode scheduled for release the week of January 8th. "The Canadian Lynx," shows the boys actually capturing the fiercest specimen of the cat family and also shows the youngsters as rivals in a humorous love match.

"The Red Men's Menace" is the title of the second episode of the new Ruth Roland serial, "White Eagle." The current chapter shows Ruth Roland performing some of the most hazardous thrills she has yet attempted.

"Take a Chance,' is the latest reissued one-reel comedy starring Harold Lloyd. The comedian is assisted in the offering by Bebe Daniels. "The Dog and the Mosquito" is the newest animated cartoon of the series of "Aesop's Film Fables." "Lose No Time" is the title of the current Hal Roach comedy featuring "Snub" Pollard. The moustached comedian is assisted by Marie Mosquini and the staff of the Hal Roach comedians. Pollard appears as a genuine "go-getter" who endeavors to get himself in the good graces of his boss in order to secure a raise of salary.

"Back Pay" an Early Release

Frank Borgaze Production of Hurst Story for Cosmopolitan

A scene from Cosmopolitan Productions picturization of Fannie Hurst's "Back Pay," a Paramount picture, directed by Frank Borzage

"BACK PAY," the story of a girl with a "crepe de chine soul," created by Cosmopolitan Productions from the story by Fannie Hurst, will be released by Paramount early in January.

This picture is said to be notable because of its big and controversial theme, the afme of its author and the calibre of cinema talent that engaged upon its making. Fannie Hurst, authoress, Frank Borzage, director, and Frances Marion, scenarist, the trio whose combined efforts evolved "Humoresque," have again collaborated in the case of "Back Pay."

The production is the third directetd by Frank Berzage for Cosmopolitan and follows soon after his "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford." It is different from either of his two previous Cosmopolitan Productions—its variance being another proof of the versatility and mastery of the young director.

"Back Pay" is a history of the perennial struggle within a girl's breast between sheltered simplicity of a small town and the glitter, gaiety and luxury that are to be had in the big city.

In the cast of this picture are seen Seena Owen in the leading feminine role; Matt More, playing the country boy; and J. Barney Sherry, playing the "heavy." Others are Ethel Duray and Charles Craig.

To Present Tennysonian Classic on Screen

THE big spectacle film, "Lady Godiva," which was recently announced for release through Associated Exhibitors, is founded directly upon the legend which inspired Lord Alfred Tennyson's poem of the same name. A recent announcement declares that this Wistaria Productions offering is a serious attempt to place upon the screen one of the world's famous literary classics with a true representation of the original.

It is declared that the screen version of "Lady Godiva" is perfect in its delineation of eleventh century England, and is distinguished by tremendously big and elaborate settings, the entire town of Coventry having been reproduced with historical accuracy. There are reported to be sweeping mob scenes, in which thousands of extras were employed, and marvelously gorgeous and extravagant action, such as the coronation scene and the wild revel which preceded the Earl's downfall.

Brooklyn Fans Select Gloria Swanson

Gloria Swanson, Paramount star, has been declared the winner in a popularity contest conducted recently by George J. Wehner, a Brooklyn exhibitor with a string of ten theatres.

Mr. Wehner decided to obtain attractions that were really what his patrons wanted. He therefore held a popularity contest in all of his theatres. The outcome showed that Gloria Swanson, Paramount star, was the best liked by the patrons of the Wehner theatres.

Selznick's "Conceit" Ready at Exchanges

Select branches throughout the country are screening "Conceit," second of the Supreme Selznick Six, for important first-run accounts. Prints were shipped from the New York offices some days ago, and early bookings will soon be announced.

Just as "Conceit" holds it own in comparison with "A Man's Home," its predecessor among the Selznick company's roster of big specials, so do the various advertising accessories on the picture hold their own. The exhibitors campaign book on "Conceit" has been completed and is in the hands of the Select branch managers.

"A Doll's House" to Be Finished by February

So marked has been the progress in making Ibsen's "A Doll's House," the forthcoming Nazimova production, and her first to be released through United Artists, that it is now being predicted that the picture will be completed and ready for presentation sometime during the month of February next.

Among the foremost players in the cast engaged by Nazimova are Alan Hale, Wedgwood Nowell, Nigel deBrulier, Florence Fisher, Elinor Oliver and Cere Lee. Little Phillipps DeLacy and Barbara Maier will appear as the children.

J. Parker Read Subject Well Under Way

J. Parker Read, Jr.'s latest photoplay "Pawned," which will be released by First National, is now well under way at the Thomas H. Ince Studio with Tom Moore and Edith Roberts in the principal roles.

"Pawned" was adapted from the story "Pawned," the latest novel of Frank L. Packard, author of "The Miracle Man." Mr. Read is enthusiastic over the story "Pawned," the purchase of which he negotiated from Mr. Packard in New York City. Mr. Packard had previously received several flattering offers for the motion picture rights to his newest book, it is stated, but refused to consider any of them until Mr. Read expressed an interest in it. It was sold to Mr. Read with the definite understanding from Mr. Packard that Mr. Read would personally direct the picturization.

Norma Talmadge Ready for Next Picture

With Norma Talmadge about to begin production on "The Duchess of Langeais" and Constance Talmadge well under way in the 'shooting' of "The Divorcee," Joseph M. Schenck's activities in the Hollywood film colony are traveling along at a 100 per cent clip.

Mr. Schenck made the important announcement last week that Frank Lloyd, erstwhile Goldwyn director, would be in charge of the forthcoming Norma Talmadge production and that Frances Marion would prepare the continuity for the Balzac story. A capable and versatile cast is being collected to support Miss Talmadge in this film, which is expected to be her most elaborate production.

Youthful Players a Necessity

Abraham Lehr Stresses Youth as Requisite of Screen

Abraham Lehr, vice-president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corp.

ABRAHAM LEHR, vice-president in charge of production at the studios of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation in Culver City, Calif., is in New York, conferring with Samuel Goldwyn and other officials of the company on matters of production policy. He expects to remain here for a few weeks developing plans that will be put into operation on his return to the Coast where the studio organization is well ahead of the production schedule for the current season.

With such successes as "The Old Nest" and "Dangerous Curve Ahead" still traveling at high speed and "The Sin Flood" coming as a sure-fire attraction for the new year, Mr. Lehr reflects a confident optimism in the Goldwyn company's ability to make pictures that the public wants.

In talking of the production requirements of the day, Mr. Lehr stressed the need for youthful players to interpret youth and romance on the screen. "We cannot afford to stand still," said Mr. Lehr, "we cannot rely on actors and actresses because they have become popular in youthful roles. In the ordinary course of events the passing years leave their mark on these players just as they do on all the rest of us and it becomes necessary to find others to fill their places.

"A careful study of the preferences of motion picture fans throughout the country leads to the conclusion that the great majority want above all else a dominating love motive. Now this love interest does not always have to be centered in extremely youthful characters; but there is no getting away from the fact that youth, romance and love are generally a more attractive trinity than middle age, romance and love. This being the case there is no ignoring the need for the attributes of genuine youth in our acting personnel.

"The artful actor does wonders in stimulating characteristics that are not his own, but after all there is a magnetic something about youth—its verve, its sparkle that can be reflected on the screen only through the medium of youth itself. Goldwyn is a young company and it intends to remain so. We have young men in high executive positions in all branches of the organization and through them we get a constant supply of fresh ideas. We have players such as Patsy Ruth Miller and Cullen Landis who radiate youth and high spirits and we are looking for more of the same caliber.

"In selecting players we keep in mind the need for appealing to the average taste of the American public. Clean-cut, wholesome young men and women whose experiences have not hardened them or led to a premature sophistication are the natural interpreters of the romance of the rising generation. Exotic types may have a brief voice, but their popularity is necessarily limited.

"Another important point in making pictures of broad appeal is what may be termed finish in production. Goldwyn pictures have won a reputation for being carefully produced in the matters of settings, lighting and photography. All of these men are, of course, held secondary to the story, but they can be made of great value in conveying the desired impression to an audience.

"Under the direction of Cedric Gibbons, art director at the Goldwyn studios, every detail of a picture's setting is carefully worked out in order to secure a suitable atmosphere, and where the story permits, no expense is spared to present homes of wealth and good taste."

Cleo Ridgely Engaged for Binney Cast

Two well-known former stars, Florence Roberts of the stage and Cleo Ridgely of the screen, will play in support of Constance Binney in the Realart picture, "The Sleep-Walker," released by Famous Players-Lasky.

Cleo Ridgely was co-starred with Wallace Reid in "The Golden Chance" and other plays before her marriage four years ago to James Horn, the director. She also co-starred with Lou Tellegen and starred in her own right in such plays as "The Chorus Lady."

Only recently did she return to the screen with Betty Compson in "The Law and the Woman" and now, with Miss Binney in "The Sleep-Walker," by Aubrey Stauffer which Edward Le Saint is directing. Others in the cast are Edythe Chapman, Jack Mulhall and Bertram Grassby.

Sets Are Finished for Wm. DeMille Subject

A New York hotel lobby complete, with telephone booths, news stand, switchboard, etc., forms the first of the interesting settings that William de Mille has had prepared for his new Paramount production, "Bought and Paid For," the successful Broadhurst play which Clara Beranger has adapted to the screen. Agnes Ayres in the role made famous by Julia Dean and Jack Holt in Charles Richman's part, with Walter Hiers playing the role of Jimmy Gillay and Leigh Wyant as Fanny Blaine, comprise a cast of unusual excellence.

The management of the new Aldine theatre, Philadelphia, makes the announcement that a special midnight showing of the George Arliss film version of "Disraeli," next Sunday night, January 1st. This will be the first showing of this United Artists release in Philadelphia, and Mr. Arliss will appear in person at this performance.

Nell Shipman Picture Wins Many Bookings

Nell Shipman in "The Girl from God's Country," the outdoor animal drama, released by Wid Gunning, Inc., has been received by the big exhibitor circuits of the country as one of the strongest box-office cards of the fall and winter season, according to reports which have reached the Wid Gunning home office recently.

The S. A. Lynch Southern Enterprise Circuits in Georgia, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama and Florida, Texas, Oklahoma and other Southern states, booked the pictures for runs over the hundreds of theatres they control. Other important circuits which lost no time in booking "The Girl from God's Country" were: the entire Poli Circuit in New England; Jensen and Von Herberg, Seattle; Lubliner and Trinz Circuit, Chicago; Gore Brothers, Ramish and Lesser, Los Angeles; Rialto theatre, San Francisco; Turner and Dahnken Circuit, San Francisco; Bernard Depkin, Baltimore, and Bingham and Cohen, Indianapolis.

Presents Powerful Theme

"Hail the Woman" Links Intolerances of the Past and Present

THOMAS H. INCE put a powerful argument against the blue-laws into "Hail the Woman" his special production released by Associated First National Pictures when he created a prologue laid in Plymouth in 1620, and directly connected the intolerance of the days of the Puritan with the bigotry and intolerance of the present day.

"Hail the Woman," produced from C. Gardner Sullivan's original story is a severe arraignment of present day intolerance. The story centers around Oliver Beresford, a stern and relentless old New Englander, very much the type of the modern reformer who attempts to regulate the life of his family and of the community in accordance with his rigid principles of conduct.

As the head of a rich small-town family the effects of his bigotry are wide-spread, and the picture portrays distinctly the influence of his narrow vision and his determined principles upon the lives of three conspicuous characters.

No more vivid story of the making of a reformer has ever been pictured, it is declared, than the development of the character of Beresford's son which is portrayed by Lloyd Hughes. Were it not for a series of incidents entirely outside the control of his tyrannical father this son would have become as he started life, a hypocrite and a bigot.

The picture portrays as well the distinction between the breadth of vision of the present generation and the past and pictures clearly the difference between the viewpoint of the people of a small town and the people of a large city.

The prologue which Mr. Ince built into the picture portrays the conviction of a girl in Plymouth for flirtation and her punishment on the ducking stool, which is connected directly with the rest of the story.

Disabled Soldiers Employed by Realart

Doing its "bit" to end the unemployment problem insofar as it affects the wounded ex-service men, Realart celebrated the beginning of "The Heart Specialist," starring Mary Miles Minter, by employing thirty-five disabled soldiers for certain scenes. The men were given work through the co-operation of Realart with the Hollywood "Motion Picture Post" of the American Legion. The picture will be released in April by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Clever Child Actor in Mermaid Comedy

A new child actor, little Bobby DeVilbis, whom critics on the Coast have declared has every chance of becoming one of the screen's most popular child actors, is to be seen with Lloyd "Ham" Hamilton in the latest Mermaid Comedy made for Educational featuring this popular comedian. The picture is titled "Rolling Stones."

Albert Parker Directing John Barrymore

At the Amsterdam Studios in West 44th street, New York, Albert Parker is directing John Barrymore in his second production following "The Lotus Eaters," an adaptation of Cohan Doyle's famous detective story, "Sherlock Holmes."

In support of Barrymore, Director Parker, who produced "The Isle of Regeneration" and other Norma Talmadge pictures, has selected a cast of prominence, including Carol Dempster, Gustav Von Seyffertitz, Hedda Hopper, Anders Randolph, Robert Schable, and Roland Young.

Two Selznick Pictures Near Completion

Word comes from the Selznick home office that two of its productions are rapidly nearing completion. They are "Channing of the Northwest," starring Eugene O'Brien and directed by Ralph Ince; and the Henry Lehrman production starring Owen Moore.

A Privilege to Exhibit "Four Horsemen"

To exhibit "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," is a privilege, declared the Rickards and Nace Amusement Enterprises, Inc., of Phoenix, Ariz., this week in a telegram to B. F. Rosenberg, manager of Metro's Los Angeles exchange. The Rex Ingram production for Metro of Ibanez's famous novel recently broke all records at these exhibitors' Rialto Theatre.

"Manger to the Cross" a Holiday Attraction

Vitagraph's six-reel feature, "From the Manger to the Cross," is being used by many showmen in various parts of the country as a special holiday-time offering. Many are running it for the entire week starting Christmas Day, and others are continuing it through the holidays into the New Year, and reporting much interest and good business.

Photoplay Edition on Zona Gale's Novel

As a part of Paramount's exploitation campaign for William De Mille's production, "Miss Lulu Betts," copies of the photoplay edition of the novel by Zone Gale, from which the Paramount picture was adapted, are now being distributed to book stores throughout the United States. The book is published by D. Appleton & Company of New York, who arranged with the Paramount advertising department for the special jacket which will encase each volume placed on sale for the next several months, or during the picture's run.

Estelle Taylor Chosen as Team's Mascot

The honor of representing both the Eastern and the Western sections of the United States has been bestowed upon Estelle Taylor, the beautiful and popular actress, who for about two years has been playing leading parts in William Fox productions. Word has just been received from Los Angeles that Miss Taylor has been chosen as honorary mascot of the Washington and Jefferson football team of Pennsylvania, which has journeyed to California to meet the gridiron performers of the University of California in an intersectional match on January 2, at Los Angeles.

Pickford and Fairbanks Studios Clean House

House-cleaners in force swept through the offices of the Mary Pickford company, in the United studios, and the Douglas Fairbanks studio, at Hollywood, last week in preparation for the home-coming of the "King and Queen of the Screen."

All invoices, statements and reports were assembled. At the Fairbanks studio a new fire protection system has been installed, new film vaults built, and a series of cutting rooms erected and equipped with the most modern ventilating apparatus that could be obtained. All of which is taken to indicate that the dynamic Douglas will make the film fly soon.

Nothing definite is known at either studio regarding the plans of either Miss Pickford or Fairbanks.

"36 a Year" Policy to Be Continued

In reviewing the progress made during the past year, Playgoers Pictures declare that the exhibitors have justified the continuance of their policy of releasing feature productions on the basis of thirty-six a year.

A statement just issued by that company says that they will proceed during 1922 on that release basis and will offer an array of program features which will be of consistently good quality and box-office value.

Commend "Our Mutual Friend"

Gunning Picture Selected by Better Films Committee

THE National Committee for Better Films has placed "Our Mutual Friend," the Wid Gunning picturization of Dickens' last complete novel, on its list of the best family pictures released during 1921, according to a notification just received at the Gunning home offices from Orrin G. Cocks, secretary of the committee. Two other Gunning releases, "The Old Oaken Bucket" and "What Do Men Want?" the Lois Weber spectacular drama, have likewise been accorded the honor of a place on the list, making an unusual record considering the short time the Gunning company has been in operation, and the comparatively small number of pictures it has released thus far.

The committee gave "Our Mutual Friend" special mention in issuing its list, commenting favorably on the portrayal of the Dickens' characters, adding that it possessed "undoubted appeal." The list consists of those plays considered as possessing a mass appeal, suitable for neighborhood and small town theatres as well as metropolitan houses.

The Wid Gunning offices have been flooded with unsolicited testimonials from men and women, from all walks of life, who have seen and enjoyed "Our Mutual Friend," either during its run at the Lyric theatre, in New York City, or elsewhere.

These communications indicate that the "better film" movement, endorsed by Wid Gunning, has started a successful drive to draw to the motion picture theatres people who would not ordinarily attend a screen production. Almost all of those who were impelled to write in, said that they rarely went to the movies, but would attend more often if they could be assured of seeing pictures possessing the drama, humor and charm of "Our Mutual Friend."

Most of the letters of appreciation were from average men and women, but there were included communications from prominent artists, churchmen, educators, men of business, and writers. All of the letters gave emphasis to the fact that the picture was far from "highbrow," but that it was as much alive and full of action as if it had been written by a present-day thrill-merchant.

"Everyone should see this picture," wrote Edward B. Shallow, associate superintendent of schools of New York City. "It is interesting, clean and wholesome. It does great credit to its producers."

"Every lover of Dickens and everyone who appreciates good things on the screen will enjoy 'Our Mutual Friend,'" said Jessie Bonstelle, writing from the National Arts Club. Henry Alexander, treasurer of the Dickens Fellowship, stated that "to the lover of Dickens, the presentation of 'Our Mutual Friend' is an unalloyed pleasure. The Dickens world is under deep obligations to you for offering them such a rare treat."

"Our Mutual Friend" has been booked heavily throughout the country, according to reports received at the Wid Gunning home offices, a great many of these being in small towns catering to neighborhood or family patronage.

Announcement Made of Early 1922 Productions

APPROXIMATE plans of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for the year of 1922 were made public this week in an announcement from the Hodkinson offices. The statement includes a list of early 1922 productions and a summary of probable releases for the balance of the year.

Two important items on the Hodkinson 1922 list are the "Official Urban Movie Chats of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America," which will be released at the rate of one a week beginning January 15th, and the more recently announced Great Authors series to be released monthly. The two-reel Triart productions based on the masterpieces of famous artists, of which two have already been released, will continue to be issued at the rate of one a month. The balance of the program includes a number of Hugo Ballin productions, Edwin L. Holly wood productions and several new productions not yet ready for announcement.

Three productions are scheduled for release in January: "French Heels," "The Young Painter," and "At the Sign of the Jack O'Lantern." "French Heels" is the first of the series of Edwin L. Hollywood productions starring Mrs. Irene Castle. It was written by Clarence Buddington Kelland, and the cast includes Ward Crane and Charles Gerard. "At the Sign of the Jack O'Lantern" is the second Renco Film Company's production for Hodkinson release, the first having been "Lavender and Old Lace," by Myrtle Reed. "At the Sign of the Jack O'Lantern" is also a Myrtle Reed story. The cast includes Betty Rose Clark, Victor Totel, Earl Schenck, Wade Boteler, Clara Ward, and others.

"The Young Painter" is the third of the Triart Productions, which are being made under the supervision of an Advisory Board of eminent art patrons consisting of Robert W. De Forest, president of the Metropolitan Museum of Art; Francis C. Jones, treasurer of the National Academy of Design; Edwin H. Blashfield, president of the National Academy of Design; Charles Dana Gibson, president of the Society of Illustrators and editor of "Life"; Robert Aitken, president of the Sculptors Society of America; Louis C. Tiffany, founder of the Louis Comfort Tiffany Foundation, and Daniel Chester French, one of the world's most noted sculptors.

During February Hodkinson will release "Heart's Haven," a Benjamin B. Hampton Production, featuring Claire Adams, Carl Gantvoort, Claire McDowell and Robert McKim; and "Hope," the fourth Triart production. "Hope" is based on the immortal masterpiece of the same name by Watts. Also in February, or in early March, another Benjamin B. Hampton production, "The Gray Dawn," is scheduled for release.

Another Triart Great Masterpiece production which is scheduled for release early in 1922 is "Mona Lisa," based on the famous painting of the same name by Leonardo da Vinci. Extraordinary care and unusual treatment will be accorded this picture, and the Advisory Board will personally supervise the work of production.

These productions, with subsequent Edwin L. Hollywood and Hugo Ballin products, augmented by the Urban products including the Official Urban Movie Chats, the Great Authors productions and a special four-reel feature entitled "The Four Seasons," an Urban Popular Classic recorded by Raymond L. Ditmars, curator of the Bronx Zoo, provide the nucleus of a 1922 program which will be greatly enlarged and expanded. Already negotiations are pending for the acquisition by Hodkinson of several pretentious special productions, as well as such other special feature productions and star program attractions that may be acquired from time to time.

Wm. Carleton Opposite Katherine MacDonald

In "Domestic Relations" her latest photoplay, which Chet Withey is now directing at the Freferred Pictures Studio, Katherine MacDonald is supported by William P. Carleton. Carleton is well known as a leading man, having played "leads" for the past three years.

Other screen favorites who are in the cast are Barbara La Murr and Frank Leigh. Frank D. Ormston designed the settings for "Domestic Relations."

Fox Completes Special with Mary Carr

The special which Mary Carr has been making at the New York studio of William Fox is about completed. It is a story of New York's East Side, and the Ma Benton of "Over the Hill," it is said, has another wonderful mother role.

Asks Bids on "Foolish Wives"

Laemmle Addresses Exhibitors Direct in Selling Special

AFTER waiting a year and a half for "Foolish Wives," Carl Laemmle now announces the final arrangements for its showing and distribution to exhibitors. The past week has seen the completion of the distribution plan and has received thousands of assurances that exhibitors are highly appreciative of the decision he made to let them have it direct instead of following a long period of extended engagements in individual cities.

For the purpose of distributing "Foolish Wives" the Universal has created an extraordinary sales force operating directly from 1600 Broadway, New York City. This extraordinary force consists of eight men to each of whom has been assigned a territory or zone. These men have nearly all of them been busily engaged with H. M. Berman, the exchange manager, on the details of the selling plan for the last three weeks. They will be occupied for some time only with the big cities in their zones, and it will be necessary for them to do a great deal of traveling in order to cover the territory which the Universal for ordinary selling purposes has divided into 33 exchanges. For this reason it has been thought best to announce to exhibitors that all inquiries about the release of this picture in their territories should be addressed direct to 1600 Broadway, in order to receive the prompt attention which it is Mr. Laemmle's desire shall be given to every offer from exhibitors.

Mr. Laemmle resolved to follow up his move giving America's most costly picture direct to exhibitors by an equally startling and unprecedented departure. He has, in the statement just issued, asked every exhibitor who is interested in "Foolish Wives" to make him personally a bid on "Foolish Wives." The following is his statement addressed to exhibitors:

"What Do You Bid For 'Foolish Wives'?

"But Universal's Million Dollar Picture is so totally beyond the class of any production ever before attempted that it must be handled in a revolutionary manner.

"Universal can never get its money back on this stupendous super-production. It has already cost so much that by the time we have exploited it and have made the prints we will have to take in two and one-half million to break even!

"I could take in more money than this by road-showing 'Foolish Wives.' But there are two powerful arguments against such a method. First, road-showing is a slow process. Second I consider it unfair to you exhibitors, and therefore poor policy, to make regular moving picture theatres wait for months and months, and maybe years, after release date before showing the screen's greatest effort.

"I want moving picture theatres to have first crack at the biggest achievement in the history of the industry.

"I say I want this. But I can't afford to sacrifice a million dollar picture—the only one ever made—to accomplish it.

"Therefore I can't go through with it unless you meet me more than half way.

Some of the greatest exhibitors in the world have made handsome offers for first-run of "Foolish Wives." But, as handsome as those offers have been, they do not cover that part of the negative and positive cost chargeable against their cities.

Better still, such men as Tom Moore of Washington, Felt Brothers of Philadelphia, Ruben & Finkelstein of St. Paul and Minneapolis, and others, have offered me their theatres on any terms I see fit to make, because they say the industry owes this tribute to Universal! It is a great spirit, a new spirit, a spirit which will inspire Universal to reach greater heights in the future than it ever hoped for before.

"Other exhibitors have said that I will be justified in asking terms that have never been dreamed of before. One man said, 'Your company has done a thing no other concern ever dared to do. You are entitled to recognition for this. You are entitled to the very highest limit every exhibitor can give you.'

"It was this exhibitor who suggested that I ask you to make your very highest bid for 'Foolish Wives.'

"Will you do it? Will you smash all precedent and tell me the very limit you can stand in order to have the honor of being the first to present the first million dollar production in your city?

"Will you demonstrate that my policy of giving moving picture theatres first chance is the right policy?

"With so much at stake I naturally reserve the right to accept or reject your bid; in either event, I am going to receive it in the best of faith, just as I ask you to accept this announcement.

"Address all bids to Universal Film Mfg. Co., 1600 Broadway, New York City.

(Signed) "CARL LAEMMLE."

Gunning Star to Tour U.S.

Expect Lucy Doraine, Star of "Good and Evil," to Come Shortly

A REPORT just received from abroad by Wid Gunning, Inc., brings word that Lucy Doraine, famous Continental star, who appeared in the Gunning release, "Good and Evil," is very anxious to come to America, to make personal appearances in connection with the showing of that production. Miss Doraine, according to the report, is working on another massive production, and as soon as that is completed, she will make arrangements to visit this country. She hopes to be able to do this during the coming season.

Reports to the Gunning offices from the exchanges of the organization throughout the country indicate that the dazzling young actress who has fascinated Europe, has already obtained a considerable following in this country in the short time since her meteoric appearance in "Good and Evil," and that further productions in which she will appear will be awaited with the greatest interest by American fans.

"Good and Evil" is presented by the Herz Film Corporation. It is a Sascha Production, and was directed by Michael Kertesz, the husband of the star. Ten thousand people are in the supporting cast of "Good and Evil," and this tremendous corps of players, together with the sumptuous sets, many of the scenes being photographed in the Royal Palace at Vienna, has aroused considerable interest in the production amoug exhibitors and patrons.

Leading critics and exhibitors in the United States who have viewed "Good and Evil" have more than confirmed the enthusiastic reports of the production which preceded it from Europe. When it was shown at the UFA Palace, in Berlin, the leading German motion-picture paper said: "It is a super-production in the real sense of the word. It is a film which can be placed side by side with the world's best productions."

Southern Cities Greet Charles Ray Warmly

SOUTHERN hospitality was cordially extended to Charles Ray last week during his first visit to the South. In Washington, D. C., where the star and his party made their first stop after saying farewell to New York, Mr. Ray met many of the foremost political figures of the nation, including President Harding, Chief Justice Taft, ex-President Woodrow Wilson, Herbert Hoover, and others, and under the personal escort of Senators and Representatives was enabled to view the Government machinery at its work. In Atlanta Mr. Ray was warmly received, and as the guest of Sig. Samuels, owner, and Willard Patterson, manager of the Metropolitan and Criterion theatres, he had a crowded and auspicious program during a brief 24-hour stay, which included an official welcome by Governor Thomas W. Hardwick and a personal visit to the Metropolitan theatre where the crowd overflowed to the sidewalks in response to advance notices of the star's appearance. Mr. and Mrs. Ray and their party which included Arthur S. Kane, Richard Willis, Albert A. Kidder, Jr., and George Kizard, camera man, spent Christmas in New Orleans.

Mr. Ray's first visit on the final lap of his Eastern trip was Baltimore, where he went principally to be in attendance at a ball and revue given for the benefit of the Buddies' Club of that city. More than fifteen thousand persons crowded into the Fifth Regiment Armory to greet the guest.

"Man's Home" Bookings Stimulated in N.Y.

Henry Siegel, manager of the New York branch of the Select Pictures Corporation, is already rejoicing in the beneficial effects of the showing of "A Man's Home," Selznick special, at the Capitol Theatre, New York City, the week of December 18. As was confidently expected, the big Ralph Ince Production made a most favorable impression upon the rank and file of theatregoers throughout the reater city.

The word has gone out quickly to metropolitan exhibitors, with the result that bookings for the "Man's Home" are being rapidly listed in some of the foremost theatres in New York, Brooklyn, Newark, and other large communities.

Prominent Players in Assd. Exhib. Product

Among the coming features released by Associated Exhibitors is the powerful outdoor lumber story, "Clansmen of the North," which was recently completed under the direction of John W. Noble. The lead is handled by Richard C. Travers, and the cast includes many familiar names. Another outstanding release is "Woman Wake Up," a brilliant and appealing drama, featuring Florence Vidor.

In a recent statement, Associated Exhibitors called the attention of theatre owners to the very representative list of stars appearing in their productions. Included in this list are such names as George Arliss in "The Devil;" Mary Thurman, Niles Welch, Jos. Dowling and others, in "The Sin of Martha Queed;" Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven in "Marry the Poor Girl;" the all-star cast in "The Unfoldment;" and Grace Darmond, Harry Meyers, Jimmy Morrison, Wm. Courtleigh and others in "Handle With Care."

These, of course, are in addition to the famous Harold Lloyd, star of the big Associated-Lloyd comedies.

Release of Irish Prisoners in Pathe News

With 3,000 Sinn Fein political prisoners released—as pictured in Pathe News No. 102—one of the earliest practical results of the signing of the Irish peace is realized. Prisoners are seen leaving Kilmainhan Gaol, saying goodby to British officers and being greeted by crowds of friends.

Secretary of the Navy Denby is seen visiting a big naval gun factory and scrambling over acres of 16-inch guns—a costly "graveyard" under the Arms Conference "scrapping" agreement. In the meantime Urban Ledoux preaches a "sermon" in front of the Pan-American Building, while banners are carried about containing peace Bible texts. Other timely topics are included.

New Cosmopolitan Picture at Rialto

"Just Around the Corner," a Fannie Hurst story filmed by Cosmopolitan Productions, will have its first New York presentation at the Rialto Theatre beginning Sunday, January 1st. This production was directed by Frances Marion, who also wrote the scenario. It was Miss Hurst who wrote the original story of "Humoresque," the Gold Medal winner of 1920, and Miss Marion who wrote the scenario of that great success. The new picture is released by Paramount.

Emmett Flynn in N. Y.

Emmett J. Flynn, who directed the Fox spectacle, "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," and "Shame," is in New York from the west coast, his third trip east in eight months. Flynn brought with him the film of a big special he had just completed in California from William Fox, with John Gilbert as the star.

Fox to Make Educational Films

WILLIAM FOX, president of Fox Film Corporation, announces for the new year an important addition to his screen enterprises. He has organized Educational and Industrial Divisions, planned on a broad scale.

This new enterprise is inspired by what Mr. Fox regards as a crying need for educational films that really educate, and for films dealing with business that not only tell the manufacturer's story instructively, but create lively interest while doing so.

The Educational and Industrial Divisions, in their operation, will be wholly independent of the amusement enterprises of Fox Film Corporation. They have their separate and distinct staffs—directors, scenario writers, librarians, technical men, artists, animators, and clerical forces. The two divisions are under one head—Herbert E. Hancock, formerly director of Fox News. Supervisory direction, however, will be exercised by Mr. Fox and by Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager of Fox Film Corporation.

The decision to establish an Educational Division was reached after mature deliberation and after exhaustive investigation had demonstrated that educational institutions to-day, with their progressiveness ideas, require what they have not heretofore had from motion picture producers—a comprehensive service embracing every type of educational film.

The Educational Division possesses an immense advantage in its access to the libary of Fox News, containing more than 1,000,000 feet of negative film from which may be assembled hundreds of educational subjects.

Herbert E. Hancock, director of the new educational and industrial divisions of Fox Film Corporation

The Industrial Division, it is felt, has an appeal which must prove irresistible, inasmuch as it presents the latest method of advertising and one the tremendous pulling power of which is universally conceded. The progressive manufacturer realizes the extraordinary value of the screen as a means of reaching the public directly. He is desirous of telling his story in an attractive way in pictures. This has been demonstrated by widespread inquiry. But it is also a fact, states Mr. Fox, that American manufacturers thus far have hesitated to enter largely into this field of business exploitation because of the absence of any substantial motion picture producing company engaged in a comprehensive way in this branch of the industry.

The Fox plan fixes the price charged for such films at the lowest figure that is possible, and also offers to the manufacturer a system of circulation to meet every need. The guaranteed circulation is either local, national, or international, according to requirements. The United States is divided into service zones; but the Industrial Division is also inviting orders from business firms in foreign countries. Its activities cross both the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans.

The Fox exchanges and branch offices abroad are co-operating energetically with both the Educational and Industrial Divisions. Three hundred cameramen in all parts of the world will serve these new divisions, being subject to call at any time. Wherever a firm may be located—in the distant East, West, North or South, or close to home—its needs will be attended to with equal promptness and care.

The main offices of the new Educational and Industrial Divisions are in the Fox Studio building, in West Fifty-fifth Street, New York. They occupy almost an entire floor of the big plant.

"Molly O" Opens on the Coast

IT is doubtful if any producer or star, or their production ever received the ovation accorded to Mack Sennett and Mabel Normand, when "Molly O," the latest feature production of the creative genius of Mr. Sennett was given its premiere showing at the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles, Wednesday evening, November 30.

"Molly O" enjoyed a real first night audience. Invitations signed by Mr. Sennett were issued and forwarded to the stars, producers and directors of filmland, the same being extended to their immediate families and intimate friends. Miss Normand and F. Richard Jones, her director, chaperoned the entire cast of the production. City officials and representatives of the clergy were also invited and present. According to schedule, the curtain was to rise at eight fifteen, word reached the world outside the realms of the studio that the idols of the thousands and thousands of fans would be at one time under one roof, with the resultant effect that the Chief of Police was appealed to to assign sufficient uniformed men to handle the masses who collected an hour before the doors were opened, to secure a position of vantage from which to get a close-up in the flesh, of their screen favorites.

Two local commercial photographers mounted their stepladders to be in readiness for the first car to approach the curb. After the first automobile discharged its weight of stars, it was closely followed by another and another. So fast did they come the sharpshooter found it difficult to keep cartridges in his flashlight pan, and the policemen found it hard to keep passage way to the entrance.

Though numbering many, many hundred, the crowd was very orderly and sent up round after round of applause as the stars, both men and women, took the few steps from the curb to the theatre lobby. When Mabel Normand's big Pierce Arrow rolled up to the entrance and the waiting throng spied the little star of "Molly O" half hidden among the cushions, with Charlie Chaplin as her escort, the best imitation of a mob scene (lacking, of course ,the rough stuff) was witnessed immediately. It took fully ten minutes to escort the couple, known and loved the world over as the foremost stars of comedy.

Inside the beautiful Mission theatre were gathered as close as possible in row after row, all the luminaries of the Pacific Coast studios. Outside the theatre not a star of any of the other celebrities of filmdom was to be seen. It was a gorgeous assemble of beauty and talent which Mable Normand and her greatest production mastered out. The happiness registered by Miss Normand at seeing so many of her friends of the profession present for the occasion, was so sincere as the appreciation shown by them during her performance in "Molly O."

Sharp on the dot of the time appointed for the presentation, Mr. Fred Niblo, at the request of Mr Harry David, manager of the Mission, introduced and christened "Molly O" in its initial run in Southern California.

That the audience was practically a professional one in its entirety is evidenced by the following list submitted by First National:

Goldwyn's "Theodora" at Capitol Theatre

Goldwyn's Italian spectacle, "Theodora," which met with such overwhelming critical commendation in New York, Boston, Chicago, Detroit and Pittsburgh, the only towns where it has as yet been seen and where it showed at the $2 top scale, will be the attraction at the Capitol Theatre, New York, starting New Year's day, Sunday, January 1.

Naval Picture Will Be Screened for Officials

"The Battle of Jutland," the three-reel reproduction of the world's great naval conflict, which has been brought to this country for distribution by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., is to be presented at the Marine Barracks in Washington on January 9, following its showing at the Naval Academy on January 7, which has already been announced by Educational.

Students at the Academy and naval officers on duty there will be able to see this remarkable short reel special at the Annapolis presentation, but for the convenience of officers stationed in Washington, Educational has made arrangements to present the picture again with the assistance of the Marines.

Marion Davies Hostess to 500 Soldiers

Marion Davies, star of Cosmopolitan Productions, gave one of the biggest soldier Christmas parties in New York City on Sunday, December 25. She consulted the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars to get a list of former service men who were unemployed, far from their families, or convalescing in military hospitals near New York.

There were 500 responses and the main dining room at Shanley's restaurant, 43rd street and Broadway, was bright with holly and evergreens as the motors drove up and discharged the guests.

Hodkinson to Handle "The Four Seasons"

Harry J. Shepard, of the Kineto Company of America, has completed negotiations with the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for the distribution of a four-reel special production, entitled "The Four Seasons," an Urban Popular Classic recorded by Raymond L. Ditmars, curator of the Bronx Zoo, with the cooperation of Charles Urban, President of the Kineto Company.

"The Four Seasons" is described as a feature novelty of rare beauty and one that is exceptionally fascinating in its visualization of nature's handiwork.

Four Selznick Productions

Three Star Issues and One Revival; First Released Jan. 10

FROM January 10 to February 10 Select will issue four attractions, embracing one for each of the Selznick stars—Elaine Hammerstein, Eugene OBrien and Conway Tearle—and a Constance Talmadge revival "Good-Night Paul" is the "come back," a production by the late Walter Edwards that was based on a play by Roland Oliver and Charles Dickson and first issued when Lewis J. Selznick was making the Talmadge girls screen stars three seasons ago.

Conway Tearles "Shadows of the Sea" is set for January 10. This is an Alan Crosland production based on a story by Frank Dazey, associate editor of the Selznick scenario department. The cast in support is headed by Doris Kenyon and includes Arthur Houseman, Crawford Kent and J. Barney Sherry.

January 20 brings Elaine Hammerstein to the screen with her newest production, "Why Announce Your Marriage?". This is also an Alan Crosland presentation made from a scenario in which Crosland collaborated with Lewis Allen Brown, inspired by Fanny Hurst's ideas on matrimony. Niles Welch makes another appearance as Miss Hammerstein's leading man and the supporting company engages Florence Billings, Arthur Houseman and Frank Currier in essential roles.

Eugene O'Brien's presentation of "The Prophet's Paradise" is likewise an Alan Crosland production. It is the third issue in the O'Brien series and is declared to constitute a type of presentation quite different from any in which he has previously starred. The incidents engage an American in Turkey where he meets strange adventures while rescuing an American heiress from an exceedingly perilous position.

Sigrid Holmquist, known in her native land as the "Swedish Mary Pickford," is O'Brien's leading woman in "The Prophet's Paradise," this being her second appearance in American pictures. She is just now being exploited in association with "Just Around the Corner," a new Cosmopolitan production wherein she acted shortly after she arrived here from Sweden. In her own land Miss Holmquist was a screen star, going direct from school to the studio. Arthur Houseman and Bigelow Cooper are also prominent in O'Brien's support.

"Behold the Man" Wins Notable Tribute

"Behold the Man," Pathe's beautiful hand colored story of the Life of Christ, has received a notable tribute from James Dean, film critic of the Newspaper Enterprise Association. To his audience of more than a million theatre goers, Mr. Dean said:

"The 'best seller' of all times is the Bible. That is because, judged from a literary standpoint alone, it possesses more dramatic situations than have ever been enclosed between the covers of any other volume.

"A number of film versions of the Bible have been made. Most of them have failed because they have not transferred the Bible to the screen in its dramatic phases only. One such film was 'The Life of Our Saviour,' renamed 'Behold the Man.' It was many reels long. It embraces too much of the historical and religious detail of Jesus' life.

Francis Mangan Opens Presentation Bureau

Francis A. Mangan, formerly associated with the Allen theatre, Montreal, as production-manager, announces that he will operate a presentation bureau with headquarters in New York. Pre-release and premiere showings and prologues will be arranged by the new bureau, according to the announcement. Mr. Mangan's presentation department will be part of the activities of the New York Concert League.

"Pathe Playlets" Work of Great Authors

Some of America's greatest playwrights and leading novelists are authors of the "Pathe Playlets" which Pathe will issue in three-reel form, beginning with Frank Keenan's, "The Midnight Stage," on January 29th. A compilation of the authors of these plays reads like a "Who's Who" of American dramatists, and is a sterling tribute to the policy of Pathe when making these pictures, of selecting the best America had to offer in a literary way.

Included among the authors of the first fifteen features Pathe has nominated for re-issue in condensed form, are Winchell Smith, Paul Armstrong, Carolyn Wells, George Scarborough, Gilson Willets, John Moroso and Ellery Clark.

First Nat'l Stars Give Dolls to Aid Poor

At a monster benefit given in the New York Hippodrome Sunday, Dec. 18th, by a galaxy of grand opera and musical comedy stars, one of the most interesting events was the raffling of twelve dolls donated by First National stars. The proceeds of this item is said to have amounted to $4,000 and went towards providing a happy Christmas to poor children of New York's East Side.

The stars who donated the dolls were Norma and Constance Talmadge, Jackie Coogan, Madge Bellamy, Marguerite de la Motte, Anita Stewart, Katherine MacDonald, Richard Barthelmess, Mabel Normand, Hope Hampton, Anita Loos and John Emerson. An additional interest was lent to these dolls by the fact that they were dressed to represent the donors in various roles.

Cartoon at End of News Reel Meets Approval

The inclusion of a Tad or a Tom Powers cartoon at the end of each issue of the International News Reel has aroused great enthusiasm among exhibitors and has been the means of adding many theatres to the list of International News patrons, announces R. V. Anderson, News Sales manager of International. Nat Holt, manager of Loew's State Theatre, Los Angeles, sent word to Universal, which distributes the International News Reel, that the cartoon has added fifty per cent. to the entertainment value of the reel, according to word from the Universal home office.

Frank Mantzke on Hodkinson Sales Staff

Frank Mantzke, formerly manager of the Robertson-Cole exchange in Minneapolis, and at one time manager of the publicity department of the General Film Company in Minneapolis, has been added to the sales force of the Hodkinson exchange in Minneapolis, according to an announcement from the Hodkinson Home Office this week.

Common Sense Plus Uncommon Pictures

The length of a picture has nothing to do with its exhibition value. If the stars are there, the cast is there, the play is there and the direction and production are there, you have a box-office picture whether it is in three reels or six. The chances are that if it was good in five it is better in three!

Analyze the pictures listed on the two previous pages. You'll find stage stars like Frank Keenan, William Courtenay, Bruce McRae, Lumsden Hare, T. Wigney Percival, Paul McAllister and Florence Reed; celebrities like Irene Castle and Fania Marinoff; screen luminaries like Baby Marie Osborne, Marguerite Snow, Helene Chadwick, Gail Kane, Antonio Moreno and Warner Oland; big stage successes like "Via Wireless" and "At Bay"; famous books like "The Closing Net"; authors like George Scarboro, Paul Armstrong, Winchell Smith and Henry C. Rowland; directors like George Fitzmaurice. What a splendid list of the best talent in the land!

These three reel pictures are honest-to-goodness first class attractions judged from every standpoint. They are certain to get you both business and friends. If you'll look at a few of them you can't fail to be enthusiastic.

Jan. Releases Named by Fox Film Corp.

FROM Fox Film Corporation comes announcement that "Man's Weakness," the first production starring William Farnum since his return from Europe, will head the list of January releases for that organization. Adapted from the novel by Alexander Dumas, the story deals with a romantic chapter in the life of Edmund Kean, the famous English actor of the early nineteenth century. In the New York studios of William Fox, where the picture was made, there was erected an interior of the world-famous Drury Lane theatre of London. The picture carries an exceptionally large cast. Herbert Brenon directed.

Tom Mix's January release will be "Sky High," in which the star is supported by Eva Novak. "Any Wife" is the title of the Pearl White production in the January list. Herbert Brenon directed. Shirley Mason's next release will be "Little Miss Smiles," from the story by the late Meyer Kelly.

"Gleam O'Dawn," by Arthur Goodrich, will be the first starring vehicle of John Gilbert, recently raised to stellar distinction by William Fox. Jack Dillon directed. "Winning With Wits," starring Barbara Bedford, is the second Fox picture in which she appears as a star. There are three Sunshine Comedies on the January production list. They are "Try and Get It," "False Alarm," and "Hold the Line." Mutt and Jeff comedies complete the schedule.

New Mermaid Comedy Titled "En Route"

The greater part of the Hamilton-White stage has been utilized for the construction of train sets which are being used in the production of the latest Educational-Mermaid Comedy featuring Lloyd Hamilton, which is to be called "En Route." In addition to a Pullman car, where much of the fun takes place, there is a dining car, observation car and sleeper, and a large locomotive. The sets are among the largest ever used in filming a Mermaid Comedy featuring Hamilton.

Another Rupert Hughes Story for Goldwyn

Goldwyn has purchased the screen rights to another one of Rupert Hughes' humorous short stories.

It is entitled "Bitterness of Sweets" and has to do with an ambitious but poor young girl who often does not have enough to eat. The Goldwyn editorial and scenario departments believe that they have material in this Hughes short story for another motion picture comedy masterpiece.

A scene from "The Unfoldment," an Associated Exhibitors' release

Assd. Exhib's January List

Three Releases Due Next Month; "The Unfoldment" Heads Schedule

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS announces that its January schedule of releases will include a Ray Rockett special, a George Kearn production, and a Playgoers picture made by Herald Productions. The George Kearn production is "The Unfoldment," which will be released January 1. The Playgoers offering, "Reckless Chances," featuring J. P. McGowan, will be issued January 15. On January 22 will be released the Ray Rockett special, titled "Handle with Care."

The theme of "The Unfoldment" deals with the efforts of a newspaper girl to change the lives of her associates who, through contact with the rougher side of life and influenced by adversity, have lost the finest instincts of their better natures.

The production is in six reels, and includes a list of players who are well known for their work in previous features. The cast includes Barbara Bedford, Florence Lawrence, Wm. Conklin, Albert Prisco, Murdock MacQuarrie, Chas. K. French, Wade Boteler and Lydia Knott.

"Reckless Chances," is the third of a series of five made for Playgoers by Harold Productions. J. P. McGowan is director as well as star. Is is predicted that "Reckless Chances" will add further popularity to Mr. McGowan, who, it is said, made a distinct impression with the public in his previous Playgoers features.

In "Reckless Chances," Mr. McGowan is supported by a new leading lady, Dorothy Wood, a slender blonde beauty who has come into prominence during the last few months. Other important roles are handled capably by Andrew Waldron and Robert Walker. "Reckless Chances" is a rousing railroad story, to which Mr. McGowan has given the best of the railroad thrills gained through long experience in directing pictures of this nature.

Heralded as an unusually fine production, Ray Rockett's "Handle with Care" is said to be one of the best audience pictures of the season, and certainly the title has wonderful exploitation possibilities. An indication of the class of "Handle With Care" is gained through a review of its large and well-known cast. The principal role is handled by Grace Darmond, while Patsy Ruth Miller, who has been coming along fast, plays the ingenue. The male characters include such names as James W. Morrison, Harry Meyers, William Courtleigh, Landers Stevens and William Austin.

GoldwynProductWidely Sold Abroad

Goldwyn has sold its fourth year product in widely separated parts of the foreign sales field, according to an announcement made by J. H. Hoffberg of the firm's forcign sales department. In some cases new sales affiliations have been made and in a few isolated instances virgin territory has been added to the field served by the Goldwyn product.

The fourth year product has been sold for Australia and New Zealand to Australasian Films. Limited, which serves all of the most important motion picture theatres in those two islands. Both the third and the fourth year Goldwyn pictures have been sold for distribution throughout the Dutch East Indies, the Federated Malay States and the Straits Settlements to the Middle East Films, Limited, a subsidiary of the South African Film trust.

Goldwyn fourth year product has also been sold for Mexico.

Kent-Selznick Week to Be Held in Detroit

THE Select Pictures Corporation branch in Detroit, Mich., is putting on a special sales drive of its own the week which includes February 8th, designating it Kent-Selznick Week.

On February 8th, J. O. Kent, manager of the Select office in Detroit, will have been in charge of Lewis J. Selznick's business in Detroit just four years and will have been in Mr. Selznick's employ a little more than seven years. It also happens that February 8th is Mr. Kent's birthday.

The special sales drive was the idea of some of Mr. Kent's exhibition friends who have expressed a desire to turn up for him an unusual volume of business during this particular week as "something good to write home about."

Century Offers Varied Program for January

"An Idle Roomer," the first Sweet picture to be directed by Arvid Gillstrom, has to do with the adventures of a young man in a furnished room house—a subject which will find ready sympathy with many bachelors of small income who try to do light housekeeping by hiding the stove in the victrola and other stunts not in general favor with landladies. Of course Sweet falls in love with his landlady's daughter, played by a new Century beauty, Thelma Dillerman. Bud Jamison fills his usual ungrateful role of villain and gets his deserts in the most approved comedy fashion.

"Horse Sense," Sweet's other comedy, is directed by Fred Hibbard. Margaret Cloud, Bud Jamison and Harry Cornells are in the cast. The action takes place both on land and on sea, and much of the fun is on board ship.

"Circus Clown," starring Brownie and Baby Peggy, is on the way from the Coast. Fred Hibbard is the director, and the story deals with life under the big tents.

Other January releases are "The Straphanger," Lee Moran's first Century Comedy, and "Shipwrecked Among Animals," Sweet's parody on the Universal success "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals."

Bert Lytell to Be Seen in Role of Detective

Bert Lytell, who has been seen as the gentlemanly crook of a score of screen dramas, has turned the tables on his underworld companions of the screen and is now appearing as a detective. In Bayard Veiller's now Metro production, an as yet untitled story from his own pen, Lytell plays Henry Brown, the persistent seeker after government enemies.

Bruce Makes New Series

ROBERT C. BRUCE, producer of scenic pictures, whose one hunderdth picture was recently released by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., and whose European series, now almost completed on Educational's release schedules, has added much to his popularity, has just returned to New York from the Northwest with a group of pictures that mark a new departure in scenic moving pictures.

The new subjects brought back by Mr. Bruce will be called "Wilderness Tales." Each will present an intersting little story about men in the great outdoors, all the acting being done with beautiful scenic backgrounds. This will combine the attractiveness of the pure scenic with the appeal of novel stories laid in the mountains, valleys and waterways of Washington, Oregon and California and occasionally along the Northern Pacific Coast.

Mr. Bruce went into the Great Rocks Country in Washington, where only sheep herders are ever known to go. Even the Government rangers were unable to advise the party how to cross the mountains on the other side. But the Bruce party fought their way over the snowclad, treacherous hills that marked the far side of the valley, and after a hard tussle made their way out, with splendid "shots" of territory that had never before been photographed.

The first release of this new series will be on Educational's release schedule for February. It is called "And Women Must Weep," and will follow in order of release "Unknown Switzerland," which is to be made available to exhibitors in January and which closes the current European series.

Others to follow in this series of "Wilderness Tales" include "The Split Outfit," "The One-Man Reunion," "Prickly Conscience," "Nights of Many Shadows," "The Natural Born Liar" and "Missing Men."

Talmadge Re-Issues a Hit

Selznick Reports Revivals Have Duplicated Original Successes

THE pictures that Lewis J. Selznick produced at the time he was making Norma and Constance Talmadge stars of the screen have previously been announced as part of the Selznick output for the year and thus far several of them have been released. When the schedule is complete there will be six of each star in a selection of their releases that demonstrated their box office value when first released.

Three of the Constance Talmadge announced revivals have either been released or are in Select exchanges for distribution and two photoplays with Norma have reached the screen, "Poppy" and "De Luxe Annie" being Norma's issues, while Constance has appeared in "Scandal," "A Pair of Silk Stockings" and "Good Night Paul." Earlier in the year "Ghosts of Yesterday" and "The Moth" were issued as Talmadge revivals, and it was the box office reception these "trial balloons" received that influenced the decision to revive twelve more.

Norma will, during 1922, be seen in "By Right of Purchase," "The Safety Curtain," "Her Only Way" and "The Secret of the Storm Country" and the Constance releases will include "The Lesson," "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots" and "A Lady's Name." When these are all in circulation the full schedule of Talmadge revivals will be complete.

These attractions were originally screened little more than two years ago and the progress of the Talmadge girls as screen favorites makes all of their works attractive to the enthusiastic following they have created since Selznick first started them along the road of stardom. So desirable have the revivals thus far issued been considered by enterprising showmen that in many of the first run theatres it is declared that the Talmadge reissues have been treated exactly as though they were offerings shown for the first time.

Standardize Release Prints

Different Rothacker Plants Turn Out Prints of Identical Quality

"THE ROSARY," the Selig-Rork production for First National, affords the Rothacker-Aller Laboratories of Los Angeles and the Chicago Rothacker plant the first opportunity to show what they can do in the way of standardized release printing.

Twenty-five prints for the Western territory were made in Los Angeles under the supervision of Joe Aller. Then the negative was rushed to Chicago where the remaining prints were laboratoried.

Prints of identical screen brilliancy and tone values are possible from two different laboratories only when both plants are standardized so as to operate in perfect and practical synchronization with respect to time cards, printing machines, plant temperature, developing formulas, etc.

Preliminary plans for this standardization were worked out between Chicago laboratory technicians and Mr. Aller during the latter's trip East last fall. Then representatives from the Chicago organization visited the coast plant. In order to effect a standardization of laboratory processes that would be standardization in all that the word implies it was necessary among other things, for both plants to begin using a special distilled water, as developing chemicals mixed in different water would have different reaction on the film—a slight difference perhaps but nevertheless a varying ultimate screen result.

"The big thing about this standardization is that it will enable us the better to serve First National, United Artists, Robertson-Cole and oher clients," said Watterson R. Rothacker.

"The standardization of our laboratories is an insurance policy taken out for the benefit of producers, distributors, exhibitors and audience—insurance that after the Coast organization has made Western Prints which please the producer, the Chicago organization will in turn supply Middle-Western and Easter Exchanges with prints of identical worth.

"We are looking forward to that day in the not distant future when we will have laboratories in London and New York, and will be in position to give a virtually world-wide standardized laboratory service."

Bobby Vernon in New "Rube" Picture

"Hokus Pokus" is the latest Christie Comedy completed for Educational. It features Bobby Vernon in a new kind of "rube" picture, in which not a scene takes place on a farm.

Glbert Gable Has Record of Achievements

GILBERT E. GABLE, president of Achievement Films, Inc., whose first picture, "The Power Within," is announced for current release by Pathe, is an executive with an enviable record in the promotion and advertising fields. His ability to gain and hold public interest, resultant largely from his sure knowledge of "what the public wants," is principally responsible for his selection as president by the financial powers behind Achievement Films, Inc.

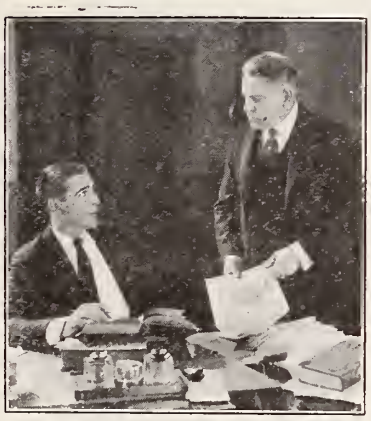
Mr. Gable's first work was in the field of traveling salesmanship and later in the publicity field. He has also been associated with the Philadelphia Record as promotion manager. In 1918, he was appointed as Director of Publicity by the Federal Reserve Bank. In this capacity he engineered patriotic parades and publicity. For the Victory Loan, Mr. Gable produced a series of advertisements which were submitted to a National Copy Jury at Washington. Out of the 115 copies selected by the jury, 104 were written by Mr. Gable. This copy of Mr. Gable's was given an unprecedented amount of newspaper space throughout the United States and its possessions.

Broadway an Exterior in Witwer Comedy

Broadway had one of its greatest thrills last Thursday night when Harry Pollard, director for "The Leather Fushers," the H. C. Witwer prize ring series being filmed for Universal with Reginald Denny as the star, paraded his company up and down the Gay White Way at the height of the theatre crowd hour, filming the crowds, the lights and "The Leather Pushers" principals. A battery of Sunlight Arcs provided illumination for the camera-men.

It was not a publicity stunt, as the shots taken of the principals and of Broadway life are to be used in Round Three of "The Leather Pushers" series.

Stern in East to Aid Century Week Drive



Julius Stern, president of Century Film Corporation, has come to New York to aid in the "Century Week" drive, during which exhibitors have pledged themselves to place a Century Comedy in every first run house in the country.

Reports from the different exchanges show the idea of making Christmas week Century week has proved a popular one and that booking returns are rolling up in a most promising manner.

Lee Moran, Baby Peggy, Harry Sweet and Brownie, the dog with a college education, will make new friends as well as renew old ones during the holiday period.

Paramount New Year Issues

"Lulu Bett," Wallace Reid and Realart Pictures for January 1

A scene from the new Paramount picture, "Rent Free," in which Wallace Reid is starred

PARAMOUNT opens the year 1922 with William de Mille's production, "Miss Lulu Bett," and Wallace Reid in "Rent Free," scheduled for release January 1. It will also release the Realart picture "Too Much Wife," starring Wanda Hawley on the same date.

"Miss Lulu Bett" unfolds a most interesting story of American home life. It is adapted from the successful novel by Zona Gale and Miss Gale's own play which won the Pulitzer prize for the best stage play during the season of 1920-21. Clara Beranger was responsible for the adaptation.

The title role is played by Lois Wilson, Milton Sills plays opposite her, while character roles are played by Theodore Roberts, Helen Ferguson, Ethel Wales, Mabel Van Buren, Clarence Burton and May Giracci.

There are said to be a lively plot and plenty of action in the Wallace Reid picture, "Rent Free," in which Wallace Reid is starred. Mann Page and Izola Forrester Page wrote the story of "Rent Free," and Elmer Harris wrote the scenario from which Howard Higgin directed. Lili Lee plays opposite the star.

Lorna Moon is the author of the story of "Too Much Wife," which was written originally for the screen. Miss Moon is a former well-known newspaper woman who has recently attained notable success as a writer of screen tales. Her most conspicuous success to date is the Paramount special, "Don't Tell Everything."

Tie-Up on "Over the Wire"

Strong Advertising and Exploitation Being Used for Metro Film

"OVER THE WIRE," the Metro production of Arthur Somers Roche's story, starring Alice Lake, is proving the season's winner for advertising tie-ups in the newspapers. The exploitation idea, recommended in the Metro press book, of co-operating with merchants who make a specialty of sending goods on telephone order, has made a hit with the exhibitors, declares the Metro home office. Everywhere the picture has been shown there have been full-page or double-truck displays of the picture's advertisement, along with the advertising of "the butcher, the baker and candle-stick maker," all running under the "Over the Wire" streamer head.

An example of the way the tie-up works is afforded by the Minneapolis Daily News, for the showing of the picture at the Strand Theatre. The "Over the Wire" streamer was flanked by a cut of a woman at the telephone giving her order, with a clerk in an apron at the other end receiving the order over the wire. Under the city's collected advertising, representing many trades, are the eight-column line: "We are always on the other end of the wire ready to serve you."

In addition, A. H. Fisher, the Minneapolis branch manager for Metro, had inserted an advertisement in a tie-up with the Western Union, using the Western Union telegram form, under the caption: "Just Received." The telegram read:

"Theatre Going Public,
"Minneapolis, Minn.

"We hope you will enjoy OVER THE WIRE, which is being shown at the Strand Theatre this week. We have just finished a TRIP TO PARADISE, with Bert Lytell; THE FOURTEENTH LOVER, with Viola Dana; THE HOLE IN THE WALL, with Alice Lake, and THE HUNCH, with Gareth Hughes. Don't fail to see all of the above attractions, and may add that "THE CONQUERING POWER, starring Rudolph Valentino and Alice Terry, co-stars of THE FOUR HORSEMEN OF THE APOCALYPSE, will be shown in your city shortly. This is considered by us the greatest picture we have ever produced.

New Members of Wid Gunning Organization

Wid Gunning announces the appointment of George Slater and Frank Hoyfron as Special Representatives, in charge of the Wid Gunning, Inc., Los Angeles branch.

Troy M. Rodlun, formerly assistant circulation advertising manager for the Hearst magazines, has joined the Gunning organization to handle direct mail exploitation.

James Englander, formerly with Vitagraph and Federated Films, and a newspaperman of wide experience in New York City, is now a member of the publicity department, doing general publicity work. Irvin C. Davis, direct from a long experience in the advertising and sales' promotion field, and M. R. Edwards, are others who have entered the Wid Gunning publicity and advertising departments.

James Cruze to Remain with Paramount

RUMORS that James Cruze, the director, would serve his connection with Famous Players-Lasky at the end of the year are unfounded, declares a statement from the Paramount headquarters, and arrangements are now under way to retain his services. There is no doubt that Mr. Cruze will remain with Paramount for some time to come, it is declared.

He is at present engaged on "Is Matrimony a Failure?" a Paramount special comedy with T. Roy Barnes, in the leading role and such well known players as Walter Hiers, Lila Lee, Lois Wilson and others in the cast.

During the past years Mr. Cruze has directed some of the most successful Paramount pictures and recently completed "One Glorious Day," featuring Will Rogers and Lila Lee.

Ban Lifted for Showing of "Conquering Power"

Three hundred exhibitors and their wives saw a special showing of the Rex Ingram production for Metro of Balzac's "The Conquering Power," on Sunday evening at the roof-garden of the Hotel Adelphi, Thirteenth and Chestnut streets, Philadelphia. It was the first motion picture shown in Philadelphia in a year on a Sunday.

Robert Lynch, manager of the local Metro office, obtained police permission to put the picture on before an invited audience on the ground that the exhibitors could not all manage to see it during the week. News of the showing stirred a renewal of the agitation for an open Sunday for photoplay theatres in Philadelphia.

In addition to the Adelphia showing, Mr. Lynch arranged for the simultaneous display of 150 twenty-four sheets, announcing "The Conquering Power," with Rudolph Valentino and Alice Terry in prominent roles opening at the Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia, on January 9.

"Sailor-Made Man" as Holiday Attraction

The Capitol Theatre of New York and the Symphony of Los Angeles, head an impressive line-up of first-run theatres across the country, which are playing Harold Lloyd's big feature, "A Sailor-Made Man," as a Christmas week attraction. No previous Harold Lloyd production has received the tributes of praise which have greeted 'A Sailor-Made Man" from exhibitors and newspapers.

The fact that this is Harold Lloyd's first comedy of feature length makes its showing doubly impressive and proves Harold Lloyd's right to be viewed by the exhibitors as a star with such a tremendous public following as to justify "A Sailor-Made Man" being the big feature during one of the most important weeks of the entire year.

Cleveland House Adopts Long-Run Policy

The Stillman Theatre, one of the largest and finest of Cleveland's downtown houses, has adopted the policy of long-run showings of big pictures. Because of its ideal location, the Stillman is able to put on three and four week showings at admission prices of 35 and 50 cents for matinees and 50 to 75 cents at night. The theatre seats 2,000.

Special efforts were made by the management to create interest in it because of its sheer power. Acting in cooperation with Walter E. Lusk, manager of the Associated First National Cleveland exchange, Manager Jack Kuhn gave a special showing of the picture a few days before its scheduled opening, to an invitetd audience of clubwomen. Loew's Euclid Theatre, which is dark at the present time, was used for the showing.

New Vitagraph Building in Omaha

Vitagraph's big chain of branch offices, which has been steadily lengthened in the past two years, is to have another link enlarged—this time in Omaha. For the past couple of years, Vitagraph has been opening branches in cities which previously were not used as exchange centers, has been constructing new Vitagraph Buildings and enlarging its old ones.

Work on Omaha's new Vitagraph Building has already been started, Vitagraph having completed negotiations early last week with C. W. Calkins, president of the Calkins company of Omaha. The new exchange will be fire-proof, and equipped with three standard size film vaults. It has been leased by Vitagraph for ten years.

House Peters to Star in "The Storm"

House Peters will star in the Universal-Jewel dramatization of "The Storm," Langdon McCormick's sensational stage play. Reginald Barker will direct the production, starting as soon as Peters finishes his starring role in "Human Hearts," which King Baggot now is filming as a Universal-Jewel super feature.

Plan Increased Production

R-C Gives Word of Extensive Production Activities After Jan. 1st

PESSIMISTIC rumors of an impending closing of the R-C Studios in Hollywood following the curtailment of production at several other Southern California film plants are belied in a cheerful statement issued to-day by local R-C officials in regard to the future plans of their company. Preparations are now being made for increased productional activity immediately after the first of the year, according to these officials, and there is no hint of pessimism as to the concerned.

It has been decided not to start any new productions during the Christmas holidays, it was stated, because of the thoroughly human penchant of actors for seasonal enjoyments away from work at that time of the year. But the R-C organization will be expected to make up for lost time in the first few weeks of 1922.

Sessue Hayakawa has two productions which are now being prepared for release. "Five Days to Live," which was made under the name, "In The Street of the Flying Dragon," and in which the star is supported by his wife, Tsuru Aoki, has received the final touches of the film editors and a finished print is being awaited. Final scenes in "The Vermilion Pencil," in which Hayakawa is supported by Bessie Love, will be completed within a few days. The cutting department has started to edit the film under Hayakawa's personal supervision. This will take several weeks, but the star is expected to start upon another picture about January 9. The name of his next story has not yet been announced.

Pauline Frederick is also supervising the cutting of her latest production, "Two Kinds of Women," adapted from Jackson Gregory's novel, "Judith of Blue Lake Ranch." Miss Frederick's next R-C production is expected to be a film presentation of William J. Locke's novel, "The Glory of Clementina." E. Richard Schayer is now preparing the continuity for this story, and it is expected that it will go into production about January 9.

Doris May is nearing the close of her third R-C starring vehicle, "Boy Crazy." She will be started upon her next picture, "Gay and Devilish," about the same time the Hayakawa and Frederick companies begin work again.

It is also announced from the coast that several new companies may be organized for special productions early in 1922, as the R-C scenario department has purchased several books and plays that are considered excellent screen material. Christy Cabanne, who has been in New York for several months directing productions for R-C Pictures Corporation may return to California to make his next film at the R-C Studios here, it was stated.

Lives of Great Authors Ready for Screen

ARRANGEMENTS have been completed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and Harry J. Sheppard, of the Kineto Company of America, for the distribution by the Hodkinson Corporation of a series of one-reel Great Authors Productions made by Charles Urban.

The series consists of twelve productions featuring the lives of such celebrated American authors as James Whitcomb Riley, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, Walt Whitman, James Fenimore Cooper, James Russell Lowell, Edgar Allen Poe, Washington Irving, John Greenleaf Whittier, Nathaniel Hawthorne, William Cullen Bryant, Oliver Wendell Holmes and Mark Twain.

According to present arrangements the productions will be released at the rate of one a month and prints on the first few releases are now being rushed to completion in order to meet the demand for early dates from first run accounts.

Anita Stewart Finishes "Woman He Married"

The production of Anita Stewart's latest picture, "The Woman He Married" has been completed at the Louis B. Mayer studio under the direction of Fred Niblo. The film now being cut and titled by the director is expectetd to be ready for shipment to New York within the next few weeks. Mr. Mayer will present it through First National.

"The Woman He Married" was adapted by Bess Meredyth from the stage play by Herbert Bashford, formerly a San Francisco newspaperman. Supporting Anita Stewart in the cast are Darrl Foss, Shannon Day, Donald MacDonald, William Conklin, Charlotte Pierce, Charles Belcher, and Frank Tokunaga.

Special Song Written for "My Boy"

Jack Norworth, well-known lyric writer, and Al Piantadoso, composer of "The Curse of an Aching Heart" and other popular songs, have collaborated at the request of Joseph Plunkett of the Strand, New York City, in the writing of a special song number for Jackie Coogan's new picture, "My boy." The song was used in the Strand prologue this week for the showing of "My boy." The song will also be used in the Los Angeles presentation of the picture. The title of the song is "I'm Just a Lonely Little Kid."

Theo. Roberts Chosen for Ideal Cast

The Tacoma Ledger's Ideal Cast contest, recently closed, gave Theodore Roberts the lead over all other individuals in any class and returned him as winner in his own class, character man, with a vote of 26,909. This was a tremendous plurality over the next highest who had a vote of 3,517. Rudolph Valentino, Paramount featured player, won the leading man competition with a vote of 13,359. Bebe Daniels, as a vampire got 25,719 votes and won the contest in her class—rather a misnomer at present as she is no longer playing vamps.

Banner Year for Equity Predicted by Baum

"LOUIS" BAUM, Equity's high pressure salesman, has just completed his monthly swing around the circuit, finishing up the sales negotiations begun at the home offices of Equity.

In his review of the conditions as they exist now, and in his prediction for the coming season, Baum has this to say: "From all indications business is due for an extensive improvement, brought about by reason of the fact that surplus accumulations of sold contracts are rapidly being played up, which gives the independent distributor opportunities for further sales and naturally a like opportunity for the buying and releasing of new pictures.

"Equity has never been in a better position in its history than now, in that the greatest portion of its sold contracts are being played up. As a result Equity is laying plans for a large amount of product for the coming season to meet the demand that the better era of business will naturally present. As I see it the field does not call for a volume of pictures, but rather fewer pictures and better pictures.

"In this connection a number of producing and releasing companies' propositions are now being entertained, and although nothing has yet been decided, an announcement of great interest to the entire independent field may be forthcoming shortly. Equity will not proceed until it has definitely learned from exhibitors and exchanges just exactly what type of productions are preferred and just how big they should be."

Max Weiss to Return to U. S. in February

Max Weiss, at present abroad in the interests of Adventures of Tarzan Serial Sales Corporation, distributors of the serial starring Elmo Lincoln, is at present visiting the film centres of France and Germany. He recently left London, England, following the disposal of "Adventures of Tarzan" to Jury Imperial Pictures, Limited. He will return to this country the early part of February.

L. L. Hiller Sees the State Right Picture Steadily Growing in Favor

"I don't feel that anyone will contradict the fact that the state righting of good pictures is growing in favor," Mr. Hiller remarked. "Of course, at first the exhibitors wondered if they were really going to get good pictures, and they were naturally backward about showing too much enthusiasm. But the past year has been a big period of advancement for the Independent field. The exhibitor has realized in the past year that it is poor business judgment, and often means a great loss of money, when he books a picture a year before it is made, by signing on the dotted line that he will play everything sent to him. This is exactly what happened in too many cases, and the exhibitor discovered that he could not force poor pictures on his audiences.

"Good clean pictures, pictures that are intelligently made, pictures that do not flaunt a star who cannot act, pictures that have comedy value or else are tensely emotional and dramatic—these are what the public is demanding today, and unless the public is satisfied, they stay at home.

"Of course, the fly-by-night Independent exchange, and the fact that many state right pictures featured people who were notorious in the daily press, have proved a detriment in the past, but that day is over. The chorus girl who kills her lover is no longer sought as a motion picture star any more than she is in demand as a vaudeville headliner.

"The whole mental calibre of the United States is advancing; the great public school systems are attending to that, and as the young people grow up they are thinking—and reading—deeper than the average of ten years ago. And they want more intelligent amusement. I sincerely believe that the Independents are the first to realize how vitally important it is that they should get that type of motion picture they are demanding.

"Yes, there is no doubt about it, 1922 is going to be a big advancing year for the Independent field."

"Sherlock Holmes" Stories

Fifteen Subjects, to Be Exploited by Alexander Film, Are Ready

THE fifteen Sir A. Conan Doyle "Sherlock Holmes" two-reel dramas, that the Alexander Film Corporation have secured for exploitation throughout the United States and Canada, are reported ready for circulation backed by a publicity equipment more extensive and elaborate than the firm has ever undertaken.

The first time that the "Sherlock Holmes" subjects have found their way to the screen, despite their world-wide sensational appeal and popularity, trade and public interest in their release in this country is said to be widespread and expectant. Wonder that the detective stories of the best detective story writer of them all had not long ago been gobbled up by enterprising producers is answered by the aversion that Sir A. Conan Doyle at first entertained toward the transfer of his material to the screen, and later to the very high price that the author's publishers who know film values placed upon the release of the copyrights.

The recent syndication of a brand new "Sherlock Holmes" group of stories in the varied publications of the Hearst newspaper and magazine interests, totalling millions of copies per month, is regarded as an important impetus to the anticipation with which photoplay managers and audiences now are said to be looking forward to the releases.

The fifteen subjects are: "The Man With the Twisted Lip," "The Beryl Coronet," "The Resident Patient," "The Dying Detective," "The Devil's Foot," "A Case of Identity," "A Scandal in Bohemia," "A Noble Bachelor," "The Yellow Face," "The Red Headed League," "The Copper Beeches," "The Empty House," "The Tiger of San Pedro," "The Priory School," "The Solitary Cyclist."

Exploitation Material for Arrow Special

ARROW FILM CORPORATION announces that the Publicity Campaign Book on "Ten Nights in a Barroom" is ready and will reach exchanges, exhibitors and others interested forthwith.

This book is as far as possible a radical departure of the ordinary type of Press Book inasmuch as it contains the cream of the exploitation experience gained at Providence, R. I., where the picture was subjected as to what is generally regarded as a try-out.

The picture is to be presented at Reading, Pa., on January 9th, and thereafter at Chester, Pa., and many other cities in the territory. In this campaign W. J. Hagerty of the De Luxe Film Company is in charge, and he has a number of most elaborate plans in the exploitation of the picture in that territory. Baby Ivy Ward will make a ten weks' tour of the territory in the interest of the picture, and it is probable that John Lowell will also be present.

Newspapers Interested in "Jungle Adventures"

Few motion pictures have interested the newspapers of the country more than Martin Johnson's "Jungle Adventures," which was photographed by Mr. Johnson in the wilds of British North Borneo, for the Exceptional Pictures Corporation, announces that company.

When "Jungle Adventures" was shown at the Capitol Theatre in New York City, it received lavish criticisms from the dramatic critics, and the trade papers were equally generous in their praise. Since then the newspapers and magazines throughout the country have been asking for data on Mr. Johnson and his unusual motion picture diary of his experiences with the wild animals of far-away Borneo. Within the past month no less than twenty-three newspapers have carried half page stories of "Jungle Adcventures," and several of the magazines will carry special feature stories early in the year.

Herman Robbins Joins Natl. Screen Service

HERMAN ROBBINS, who resigned as general sales manager of Fox Film Corporation to go into business for himself, announces that arrangements are now completed whereby he has affiliated himself with National Screen Service and has taken charge as general manager of their sales in the United States.

"I have carefully analyzed National Screen Service in the past few months, its steady constant growth, and the unqualified praise it meets with wherever shown, and I am keenly aware that it is only a question of time when the National Screen Service method, enabling the exhibitor to show in attractive film form instead of by slides his coming attractions with interesting box office drawing extracts from those attractions, will be a requisite necessity in every theatre just as feature films, good music, comedies and news reels are now an integral part of his weekly and daily program."

"I am highly gratified to be associated with Messrs. Pollak, Weinberg and Gruen. I plan to create sales organizations for National Screen Service in the principal exchange centers throughout the country for direct personal contact with all exhibitors as to the value of this service to his patrons and to his box office."

Elmo Lincoln to Make Personal Appearances

After several weeks of negotiations, Louis Weiss, Secretary of Adventures of Tarzan Serial Sales Corporation, announced this week that Elmo Lincoln, star of the serial "Adventures of Tarzan," will make a personal appearance tour of several weeks duration in conjunction with the showing of this production in several of the territories. Lincoln, at present in Los Angeles, will arrive in New York on January twelfth.

Pyramid Finishing Picture

"My Old Kentucky Home" Company Back from South With Exteriors

RAY C. SMALLWOOD and his technical staff and all-star players arrived in New York City recently after spending seven weeks in the South, making the exteriors for Pyramid Pictures, Inc., first super drama "My Old Kentucky Home." Mr. Smallwood timed his outdoor settings so that Monte Blue, Sigrid Holmquest, Lucy Fox, Julia Swayne Gordon, Frank Currier, Matthew Betz and Billy Quirk could be in New York City for the Christmas holidays.

The original story for "My Old Kentucky Home," written by Anthony Paul Kelly, finds its scenes and locales in the South. Five weeks were spent in Savannah and Thomasville, Georgia, while the last two weeks were employed in and about the race track at New Orleans.

One of the features of "My Old Kentucky Home" is the staging of a big horse race. Southern hospitality was never better exemplified than by the manner in which society turned out at the time when the scenes and settings were made for this part of Pyramid's first release. More than 1500 prominent Southerners can be seen in "My Old Kentucky Home."

With Mr. Smallwood in New York, nothing will be left undone to have "My Old Kentucky Home" ready for pre-showing before January 15th. Elaborate plans have been made by Pyramid to start this picture on its run in a manner in keeping with the class and calibre of the production and the greatness of the cast.

Mr. Smallwood will personally supervise the editing, titling, and assembling of this picture. And as soon as it is complete Mr. Smallwood will commence casting for Pyramid's second super production, "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge," that stellar Broadway attraction written by Paul M. Potter.

Monte Blue, who has earned additional fame by his masterly acting with the Gish girls in Griffith's latest spectacle, has been signed by Pyramid Pictures as the first of the all-star cast to be featured in "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge."

Announces Cast and Episodes of Serial

With the release of his new serial, "'The Mysterious Pearl," now set in the many territories which have been contracted for by independent exchanges, E. S. Manheimer of Photoplay Serials Corporation has announced the cast of characters and the titles of the entire fifteen episodes, all of which are completed and ready for immediate booking. Ben Wilson plays the part of Scott Mallory, the detective in the J. Grubb Alexander story and Neva Gerber is seen in the role of the "Pearl" from which the drama gets its title. Victor Durand is played by William Carroll, Topper Lacey by Ashton Dearbolt, but the characters of Captain X and "The Brass Spectre" cannot be divulged until the last episode of the serial is released. The titles of the fifteen episodes are given in their order of release as follows: The Pearl Web, The Brass Spectre, The Hand in the Fog, Four Black Pennies, Through the Door, The Bride of Hate, The Getaway, Broken Fetters, Leering Faces, The Graven Image, The Phantom Husband, The Door Between, The Living Death, The Lash, and The Pearl. Neva Gerber is called upon in this her latest serial to play a dual personality role.

A New Year of Opportunity

By Joe Brandt

A MERRY CHRISTMAS and a Happy New Year to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS and to all Motion Picture Exhibitors. To the NEWS our sincere thanks and gratitude for its efforts during the past year to aid the Motion Picture Industry in every way possible toward the heights it will achieve—and for its thoughtful, intelligent co-operation and effort in behalf of the Independents.

Here's hoping that the Independents will continue during the coming year to prove worthy of that co-operation. So far as it is possible to forecast with any degree of intelligence these days, it is, I think, safe to say that the coming year presents for the Independents the biggest chance they have had for some time—and can and will prove for them a year of great success—if they handle the situation wisely.

From all sides comes word—behind which apparently, there is a large degree of truth, that the large "program" production companies are planning to curtail their output and cut down on their releasing schedules.

This means, then, a great chance for the Independents. Exhibitors who are tied up to a definite programme will find that they no longer have so large or so varied a field from which to draw and will, in consequence turn to the Independent productions to fill their open dates—while the exhibitors who are not tied up to a programme will concentrate more than ever on securing good Independent productions for their patrons.

Here, then, is the big chance for the Independents—if they will only meet it and realize that the Independent Market is no longer a "dumping ground"—that it has a very definite place—that it is meeting and competing with on its own ground, the big programme production company—and that there is the big chance to establish with the exhibitor the belief that Independent productions are worthy.

Wall street men, with money to invest, are turning more and more of recent years to the motion picture production field. It is, naturally to Independent production that they turn. The greatest need of the Industry to-day is a better co-operation between the exhibitor and the Independent producer and distributor—a better "break" from each to the other. Only so, with this co-operation from the exhibitor, will the Independent be encouraged to make the big worth-while production that will prove a big box-office attraction.

Many Deals Pending on "Ashamed of Parents"

Negotiations for the selling of some of the biggest territories in the country are now being consummated by Harry M. Warner, of Warner Brothers, for his latest feature attraction, "Ashamed of Parents," it is announced.

These deals are said to have followed the widespread announcement of the universal appeal of the production, and the fact that a broad and sweeping publicity and advertising campaign has been carried on throughout the entire state of New York. Twenty-four sheets of the picture have been placed in every conceivable location throughout the state, and these are said to have prompted the writing of an unusual number of letters from motion picture enthusiasts relative to the showing of the attraction.

IMMEDIATE DELIVERY

"Black Panther's Cub" Bought by Friedman

THE latest territorial sale of Equity's "The Black Panther's Cub," starring Florence Reed with distinguished Broadway cast was consummated last week by Louis Baum of the Equity's sales staff with Ben Friedman, of the Friedman Film Corporation, of Minneapolis. The territory includes Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota and Northern Wisconsin.

It is Mr. Friedman's intention to exploit "The Black Panther's Cub" in a big way and to assist exhibitors in putting this big production across in the various territories.

Elaborate Pre-Views for "His Nibs"

"His Nibs," the Exceptional Pictures Corporation's production, in which Charles (Chic) Sale is starred, will be released in many of the big first-run houses of the country, shortly after January 1st, and, if the pre-views are to be considered as indications of the success of the picture, "His Nibs" will be one of the greatest favorites of 1922. L. L. Hiller, President of "His Nibs" Syndicate, Inc., has received numerous interesting reports on these pre-views, each one lavish in its praise of the picture. All-Star Productions of Salt Lake City, exhibited "His Nibs" at a private showing at Pantages Theatre, with all of the exchange men and exhibitors of Salt Lake City in attendance, and the five-reel comedy won the instantaneous approval of the entire audience. They voted that it was a picture of unusual merits, a decided novelty ,and that Charles (Chic) Sale was a superb artist whose protean art was sure to prove as popular on the screen as it has on the stage.

"Jungle Goddess" Distribution

Selig Serial Will Be Distributed on Independent Market

THE Export and Import Film Company, Inc., which controls the world rights on the new fifteen episode animal-jungle serial, "The Jungle Goddess," the American distribution of which was undecided upon, have now definitely announced that this Selig chapter-play will be sold on the independent market.

This decision was made following a careful survey of the state right field and only after a sufficient number of episodes had arrived in New York and passed the inspection of Mr. Ben Blumenthal, president, and L. Auerbach, vice-president of the Export and Import Film Company.

"The Jungle Goddess" has been in production for the last four months at Col. Wm. N. Selig's studios and is now rapidly nearing completion. The concluding episode of the serial is scheduled to be in New York by February 1st.

Colonel Selig is acknowledgedly one of the most experienced producers in the motion picture industry. His name has been associated with box-office successes too numerous to mention.

As a producer of wild animal serials he stands in a unique position, having already made two great wild-animal chapter-plays, "The Lost City" and "Miracles of the Jungle."

The Export & Import Film Company recently contracted for Colonel Selig's entire output for the next three years. "The Jungle Goddess" is the first of Selig's productions under this new contract.

When starting "The Jungle Goddess," Colonel Selig is said to have been given carte blanche power to go to any means to excel anything which has ever been done in wild animal serials and thereupon placed his entire resources into the production of this serial.

In making "The Jungle Goddess," Colonel Selig has the advantage of being able to draw upon the Selig Zoo for jungle beasts, this being the largest privately owned collection of animals in the world.

James Conway, who is directing the serial is making use of the numerous troupes of wild animals Selig has loaned to various circuses and which have been recalled for use in the episode drama. He has at his call a collection of over 470 animals, it is said, including tigers, lions, leopards, chimpanzees, giraffes, monkeys, crocodiles, sacred cows and myriad other jungle tribes.

Elinor Field, who is being costarred with Truman Van Dyke in "The Jungle Goddess" is a star in her own right and has just played the heroine in several Metro pictures. The story for the serial was especially written for the screen by Agnes Johnson and Frank Dazey, who have many successes to their credit.

"In placing 'The Jungle Goddess' on the independent market," states an official of the Export & Import Film Company, "we believe we are offering the greatest wild animal jungle serial ever made. Every exhibitor knows Colonel Selig. Every exhibitor has faith in him and regards him as the peer of wild animal serial makers. They know him from his past successes and will book this serial on his name alone. Given unlimited resources to work with, Colonel Selig has promised that 'The Jungle Goddess' will be his chapter-picture masterpiece."

Russell Picture Well Liked

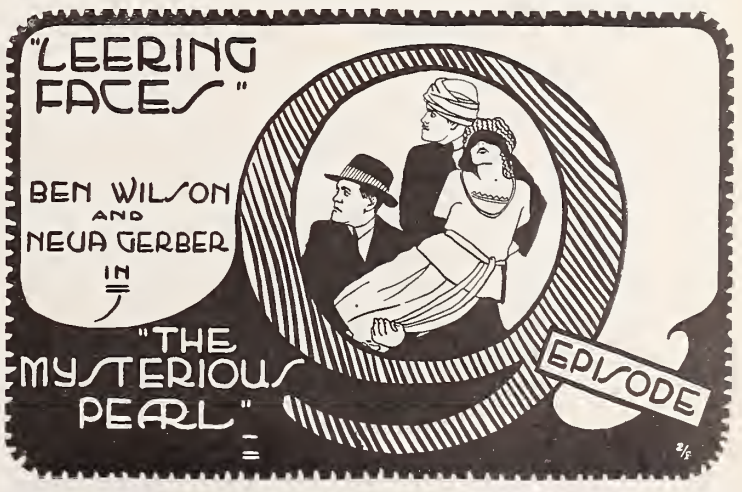
State Righters Report Fine Reception for "Shadows of Conscience"

JUDGING from letters received at the offices of Russell Productions, Inc., Chicago, the company's big seven-reel American classic, "Shadows of Conscience," is slated, from the point of booking possibilities, to be one of the biggest and most profitable investments made by state right operators during the current year.

The Pioneer Corporation, which is now releasing the picture in the states of New York, northern New Jersey, Illinois and Indiana, has screened the production for a number of eastern exhibitors, "with the result that there is going forth a unanimity of praise for the feature," states A. E. Lefcourt, president of Pioneer Corp.

He further advises:

"Indications point to 'Shadows of Conscience' setting a new pace in the release of independent productions, and we are indeed happy that we procured this photoplay from you. It is just such productions as 'Shadows of Conscience' that make the independent field the favorite one with the exhibitors, and you are to be congratulated on having to your credit a production so worthy and so masterful.



"It is safe to say that exhibitors all over the country will do big business with this feature, and furthermore, give to the patrons of their theatres that great satisfaction so necessary in the upbuilding of any business."

Negotiations have just been completed between W. D. Russell and W. T. Gaskell for the rights to "Shadows of Conscience" in the state of Wisconsin. It is the intention of the Gaskell Enterprises, which operate from Chicago, to "road show" the picture, which will have its premier in Milwaukee shortly after the first of the year. Joe Cohen, general manager of the Gaskell Enterprises, stated for Mr. Gaskell that, in his opinion, the Russell picture is far bigger and because of the wide appeal of the story and the advertising possibilities represented in the title, it represents an attraction that will go far beyond ordinary released when it comes to selling the picture to the public.

Jimmie Adams, who is soon to make his debut as one of the Hallroom boys combination in this comedy series

Smith and Adams in New Hallroom

The first of the Hallroom Boys Comedies in which Jimmie Adams appears arrived in New York this week from the West Coast producing centre, for release through Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc.

"Nobody's Baby" has been decided upon as the releasing title. is the first of a series of special comedies that have been prepared for the purpose of permitting Sid Smith and Jimmie Adams, who are respectively Percy and Ferdie, an opportunity to display to the fullest advantage their comedy team work.

The story of the new comedy revolves aronnd a lost baby, for the finding of whom a large reward is offered—a reward which the Hallroom Boys set out to secure. During the course of the action they attempt to return twelve different youngsters to the advertisers of the reward. Interesting announcement comes from the producing centres that, beginning with this first comedy, in which Jimmie Adams appears, the Hallroom Boys will be seen henceforth in the habiliments that made them famous.

Liberty Theatre Corp. Buys Russell Picture

In referring to the buyer of the rights to the Russell production "Shadows of Conscience" in the States of Kansas, Southern Missouri, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico, as reported in the issue of this paper dated December 24th, the name, Supreme Photoplay Corporation was used incorrectly as the purchaser. The name of the company to whom the rights were sold is the Liberty Theatre Corporation of 1712 Broadway, Denver, Colo., of which George Levy, the well known West Coast exchange operator, is president and manager.

"School Days" Exploitation

"Advertise With Music" Is Slogan; Gus Edwards' Songs Always Popular

WHAT is declared to be one of of the greatest publicity and exploitation stunts ever devised is about to be launched by the publicity department of Warner Brothers with Gus Edwards' "School Days," featuring Wesley Barry.

In order to inbed the idea firmly in the minds of the exhibitors who will play the picture, and incidentally to furnish them with advance exploitation material, the Warner Brothers have adopted the following slogan for "School Days," viz: "Advertise with Music."

The musical feature of the production is based on the fact that the Gus Edwards melodies, which are universally known, play a big part in the picture. With the slogan "Advertise with Music" coupled with the production, containing as it does a title that has adorned the front cover of a musical sheet for years, and which has been sung throughout the breath and scope of America, the enterprising showman is declared to have an unbeatable combination while showing the picture.

The innovation of the publicity and exploitation stunt in conjunction with "School Days" will be started at the exchange offices of the Warner organization. A phonograph, the horn of which will protrude out of one of the big windows on the exchange floor, will play the Gus Edwards melody, "School Days," all day long. Also, permission is being secured for the installation on the roof of the Leavitt Building of a Magna-Vox, or what is more commonly known as an 'amplifier" which, when connected by wire with the long chain of music stores and commercial shops throughout the city, will play the school day song so that every passerby will hear it.

Other innovations are said to be in the process of materialization by the Warner publicity department, as "School Days" contains tremendous possibilities for publicity and exploitation. The "Advertise with Music" slogan will be syononymous with the picture wherever it is being shown.

Peters Joins Affiliated

C. C. Burr Signs Cameraman for Future Independent Pictures

GEORGE PETERS, one of the best known camera men in the motion picture profession, and who has filmed more stars than any other man in his line, has been engaged by Charles C. Burr, president of the Affiliated Distributors, Inc., to film all feature productions that will be put out by that corporation. In securing Mr. Peters, Mr. Burr feels that he has secured the services of one of the very best men obtainable and his presence will greatly add to the prestige of his organization.

Mr. Peters was born and educated in Chicago. From boyhood he was always interested in photography, and at one time had ambitions to become a painter. After leaving school he became a member of the photographic section of the Chicago Tribune, during which time he photographed many of the Windy City's most fashionable set. His work became known in all parts of the middle west, and he was affered numerous positions by other leading publications. One of his hobbies was to photograph paintings by well known masters. In this line of endeavor he became a favorite in art circles.

In 1910 he was approached by a well known picture producer, who induced him to sever his connections with the Chicago Tribune and go with Selig, then the leading photoplay man of the day. In those days he photographed many well known picture people and his name soon spread in photoplay circles. Later he went with Thomas Ince, World Film, Metro, Selznick and Goldwyn. Among the well known stars he has photographed have been Lillian Gish, Tom Moore, Owen Moore, Elsie Janis, Fred Mace and a host of others.

"Prodigal Judge" Complete

Vitagraph's Special, Featuring Jeane Paige, is Now Finished

"THE PRODIGAL JUDGE," Vitagraph's super-feature adapted from the novel by Vaughan Kester, has been completed. Jean Paige, who is featured in the production, and several of the principals recently returned from Savannah where the final exteriors were filmed and since then Director Edward Jose has made the few remaining interiors at the Brooklyn studios. The final editing and titling has been done and the technical force is now working full speed preparing prints for the release of the picture which will come early in the new year. "The Prodigal Judge" will be presented as an Edward Jose production.

In "The Prodigal Judge" Vitagraph believes it has one of the greatest productions in its long career. Those who have seen the picture at a private showing at the executive offices at 469 Fifth avenue, New York City, are agreed that it is a masterpiece. Scenically it is a feast for the eye. With the action laid in Tennessee in 1835, there were splendid opportunities for costuming. The Southern scenery, with its moss-covered trees, its broad stretches of the slow moving Mississippi River and great vistas of plantations afford colorful and picturesque backgrounds for the story.

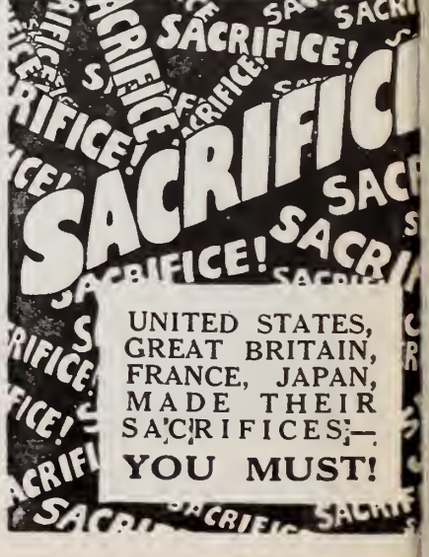
Non-Dramatic Picture Listed as Distinctive

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures strengthens its aid to the industry by securing as much publicity as possible for all pictures it considers to be of exceptional merit. It sends its news direct to the motion picture theatre patrons, thus creating a demand for pictures it deems of value to the public.

In one of its recent stories sent to the newspapers, it says:

"For the first time in the history of the publication of 'Exceptional Photoplays,' the critical bulletin of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, a film production lacking the dramatic elements of personal conflict has been reviewed in the Bulletin.

"The film to attract this unique distinction in the final issue of the year of the magazine, is 'The Four Seasons,' by Raymond L. Ditmars, produced under the direction of Charles Urban and released by Kineto, and as is suggested in the title, deals with the various aspects of nature through the cycle of the year. And yet, although it lacks all the plot and character elements which are typical of the American Photoplay, it is nevertheless, according to the review, real thrilling drama."



Fine Posters Provided by McGovern and Egler

McGovern and Egler, distributors of the new series of twenty-six two-reel westerns, featuring Shorty Hamilton, announce that they have provided a striking set of posters to be used in connection with the showing of the pictures.

There is one one-sheet and one three-sheet to be distributed with each release, besides a stock one and a stock six-sheet to run throughout the series until exhausted, then a new style one and a new style six-sheet will be made, and used as stock paper, and when they are used up, another style will be put in use.

The Film Prayer

BY A. P. HOLLIS.
Visual Instruction Service, North Dakota Agricultural College.

I AM celluloid, not steel; O god of the machine, have mercy. I front four dangers whenever I travel the whirring wheels of the mechanism.

Over the sprocket wheels, held tight by the idlers, I am forced by the motor's might. If a careless hand misthreads me, I have no alternative but to go to my death. If the springs at the aperture gate are too strong, all my splices pull apart. If the pull on the take-up reel is too violent, I am torn to shreds. If dirt collects in the aperture, my film of beauty is streaked and marred, and I must face my beholders—a thing ashamed and bespoiled. Please, if I break, fasten me with clips; never with pins. Don't rewind me—my owner wants that privilege, so that he may examine me, heal my wounds and send me rejuvenated upon a fresh mission.

I travel many miles in iron cans. I am tossed on heavy trucks, sideways and upside down. Please see that my own paper band is wrapped snugly around me on the reel and fastened with a string, so that my first few coils do not slip loose in my shipping case, and be bruised and wounded beyond the power to heal. Put me in my own shipping case. Don't make me a law-breaker. The law requires a certain type of can, two address labels, and a yellow caution label. Scrape off all old labels so I will not go astray.

Speed me on my way. Others are waiting to see me. The next day is the last day I should be held. Have a heart for the other fellow who is waiting, and for my owner who will get the blame. Don't humiliate me by sending me back without paying my passage and insuring me against loss or damage.

I am a delicate ribbon of celluloid—misuse me and I disappoint thousands; cherish me, and I delight and instruct the world.

Marked Activity in Theatre Building in Western New York State

Plans Are Out for a Great Number of New Motion Picture Temples

This year will find new theatres springing up all over the Western part of New York State. Exhibitors are planning many changes and great activity is predicted in theatrical building circles.

In Buffalo the Shea Amusement Company has completed plans for the mammoth Shea Metropolitan, which will be built during the coming year in Main street, above Chippewa. The Shea Company has been collecting ideas for this house for the past two years and Harold B. Franklin promises that it will bristle with novelties.

In the same city the Monument Theatre Corporation, of which M. Slotkin is general manager, is about ready to open its $2,500,000 business and theatre building, the new Lafayette Square. The amusement part of the project alone cost $1,500,000. Both super-productions and vaudeville will be presented and has a seating capacity of approximately 4,000. The Lafayette Square replaces the old Lyric and Family theatres.

Only recently the new Loew State Theatre was opened in Buffalo. This is a magnificent 3,800-seat theatre, having every feature known to modern theatre construction.

Max Spiegel and I. H. Herk have leased the former Shea Criterion in Buffalo and intend to remodel the interior and install a large stage. It has not as yet been determined what the policy will be. In addition to all these fine houses in Buffalo, there is continual rumor that the Mark-Strand interest may build a beautiful new house in the Queen City in the not distant future, as the lease of the present Strand will soon expire.

Going from Buffalo to Niagara Falls, we find the Cataract Theatre Corporation rushing to completion its mammoth new Strand on Falls street, next to the Cataract. A. C. Hayman, one of the best known exhibitors in the State, is head of the company. The Strand will open late in the spring of 1922. Also Frank Amendola is building the new Amendola Theatre at Pine avenue and Fifteenth street, which will be one of the most attractive neighborhood theatres in the Cataract city. The new Bellevue, opened this fall, is now becoming famous under the management of D. H. Finke.

Batavia, N. Y., is another Western New York city that is determined to be recognized in the theatre world. Two big theatres are planned for that city this year, one by Batavia Theatres, Inc., and the other by the Community Theatre Company. The Batavia house will be located at 36-38 Main street and will cost $175,000. The theatre was designed by Leon H. Lempert. The new Community Theatre will be at 206 East Main street and will cost $200,000, with a seating of nearly 1,500.

Not to be outdone by its sister cities, Lockport is building a handsome new theatre at Elm street and East avenue, under the guidance of the Lockport Theatres Corporation. The house will cost about $200,000, accommodating 1,600 seats.

Jamestown, N. Y., down in the Chautauqua district, is witnessing the erection of the new Palace Theatre by Peterson & Woods, proprietors of the present Winter Garden and Mozart. The Palace will have a seating capacity of 2,000 and will open next fall. It is located on Spring street, opposite the City Hall.

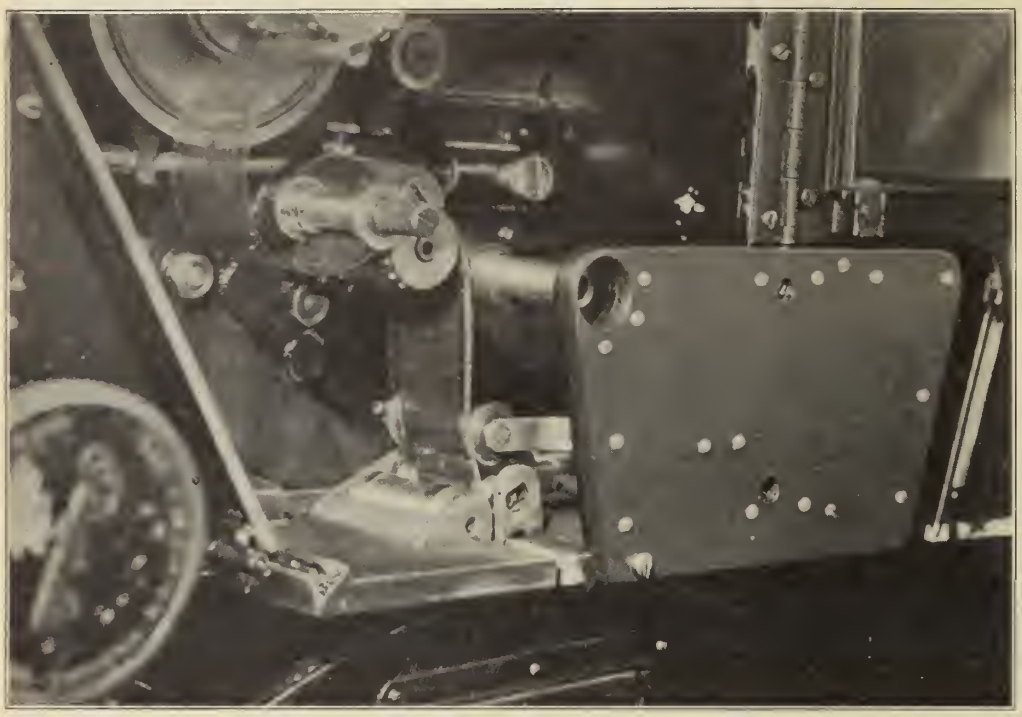
Samuel Carver, manager of the Empire, Buffalo, and secretary of the Western New York Unit of the M. P. T. O. A., has interested capital in Bath, N. Y., intending to build a new theatre in that town for exclusive picture presentation. The house will seat 1,500.

In Niagara Falls, Ont., just across the border from our own Cataract City, excavations have been started for a theatre to be built by the Niagara Grand Theatre, Ltd. This house, which will cost $250,000, is to have a seating capacity of 1,800 and will be located at Queen street and Buckley avenue.

M. P. Ryley has opened a new 700-seat picture theatre in Clarence, N. Y. The Corry Amusement Company has purchased two lots on North Center street, on which they are to erect a new motion picture theatre.

Captain Hyland of Belleville, Ont., has leased the Crown Theatre at Bridgeburg, Ont., remodelling it as a motion picture house.—TAYLOR.

Delft, Iron River, Mich., to Open



G. E. Moyle will be the manager of the new Delft theatre in Iron River, Michigan, which will open soon, according to H. S. Gallup, general manager of the Delft Theatrical Enterprises, controlling a string of theatres in the upper peninsula, with headquarters in Marquette.

The house will seat 725 people. The building is of brick, with a fully equipped stage by the Twin City Scenic Co. The booth will be equipped with Simplex machines and also a Simplex selling machine There will be a lightning coin changer in the box-office. The seats are Heywood-Wakefield. Most of the equipment was purchased through the Teco Products Manufacturing Co., at Minneapolis.—HEFFERNAN.

South Carolina Projectionist Invents New Film Warning Device

George Behlen, of Greenville, S. C., is a projectionist with an inventive turn of mind. He realized the need of some practical form of signalling the end of the reels without mutilating the film. The Behlen Film Warning Signal Device is the fulfillment of this ambition.

The Behlen Film Warning Signal Device has been placed on the market by the C. C. Rush Enterprises, Greenville, S. C.

Illustrating a Behlen Film Warning Signal Device in use on a Simplex projecting machine in the booth of the Casino theatre, Greenville, S. C. The white strip shown on the margin of the film between the sprocket holes and the outer edge is the contact tape. The contact tape is forming an electrical contact between the roller on the Behlen signal device and the magazine valve rollers on the projecting machine. The current thus formed rings a buzzer attached on the opposite side of the device. The "juice" is furnished by a dry-cell battery also attached on the other side of the device

The device consists of a small instrument which can be attached to any make of projecting machine in two minutes. There are only four parts to the device, namely, the base, buzzer, dry-cell battery and the roller over which passes the film in motion. The parts are all attached to the base and require no adjusting.

When films arrive at the Casino Mr. Behlen takes each reel and cements two strips of contact tape near the end. The two tapes are placed a sufficient distance apart to allow one minute to elapse between the signals given by the first and second contact tapes. The tapes are cemented on the margin of the film between the sprocket holes and the outer edge. This operation requires less time than making a patch.

When a reel of film is nearing the end the first strip of contact tape forms an electrical current between the roller on the Behlen device and the magazine valve rollers. This current rings a buzzer which is the signal for the projectionist to get the second machine ready. The second contact tape gives the final warning and enables the projectionist to make a perfect change-over with the skill that no other form of signalling will permit.

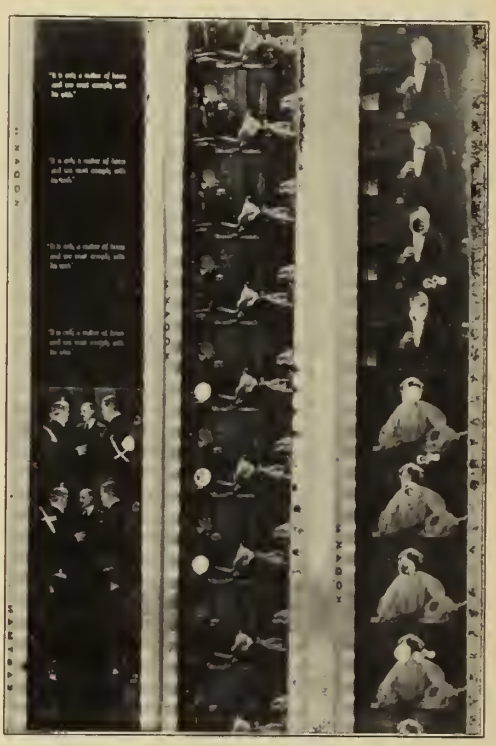
Have New Film Cement

The Eastman Kodak Company have placed a new film cement on the market.

Eastman film cement is made from tested chemicals and will be consistently uniform in quality. It has the distinct advantage, in that it will stick both regular and safety stock.

Several Baltimore Theatres Simplexized

N. C. Haefele & Co. of Baltimore, Md., dealers in Simplex Projectors and a complete line of projection equipment, report the opening of the new 1,200 seat Columbia Theatre, 709 Columbia avenue, Baltimore, Md., of which The Eureka Amusement Company are owners.



The projection room measures fifteen by sixteen feet and is equipped with a General Electric Motor Generator set of 70 ampere capacity, Arc Controls, Safe-T-First enclosed film cabinet, motor rewinder and two Type "S" Simplex Projectors which are in charge of Mr. Harry Schanne, Projectionist. A sixteen-foot picture is projected with Snaplite lenses on a Minusa screen at a distance of one hundred and ten feet.

The above company also equipped the Lyceum Theatre, Sparrows Point, Baltimore, Md., which has a ten by twelve foot projection room. The equipment, which is in charge of Mr. B. Gregory, Projectionist, consists of a General Electric Generator set and two Type "S" Simplex Projectors which project a twelve-foot picture with Snaplite lenses on a Minusa Screen at one hundred and ten feet.

N. C. Haefele & Co. recently removed from 412 E. Lexington street to more extensive quarters located at 228 N. Gay street, Baltimore, Md.

Remodeled Palace Opens

What was formerly the Palace theatre in Schenectady, N. Y., and which will be known as the New Strand, reopened recently under the direction of William M. Shirley, who has managed the house for some time. The house is virtually new. It has a seating capacity of 1,500, the main floor accommodating 950. The decorative effects are by Fred Snyder. Entrance to the house is through a lobby measuring 16 feet by 25 feet, of glass and marble, this work being done by the Fonda Construction Company of Syracuse. There is a well-like effect around a small mezzanine floor, stairs leading from this to the balcony. Overhead an effect will be secured by illuminated gold panels, the decorations being by William Eckart. Three Simplex machines are to be installed in the house. The throw will be about 125 feet. The screen will measure 12 feet by 14 feet. A Marr and Colton organ was installed.—GRANT.

$2,000,000 House to Replace Old Chicago Landmark

The McVicker Theatre, owned by the Jones, Linick & Schaeffer organization, is to be torn down and replaced with a $2,000,000 house, seating 3,500 people.

The policy is to be big features and Loew Vaudeville.

The work of demolishing the old McVicker, which is one of the landmarks of Chicago, having been built 67 years ago, will commence immediately. The present vaudeville will be moved to Woods Theatre until the new house is ready.—YOUNG.

Samuel Strausberg and Morris Bleendes Open Their $300,000 Theatre

One of the best equipped community houses in the country, the State, De Kalb and Franklin avenues, Brooklyn, opened recently. Designed by Charles A. Sandblom, of New York City, the house is beautiful and has all conveniences of the largest movie theatres. The general design is patterned after the architecture of the French Renaissance, with the exterior done in red tapestry, panelled brick with terra-cotta trimmings.

The lobby has a covered ceiling with concealed indirect lighting effects, as well as an elaborate crystal fixture suspended from the ceiling and a marble mosaic floor. Imported Belgian black marble adorns the lower sections of the lobby walls, as well as the ticket booth. The lobby frames were furnished by the Libman-Spanjer Corporation.

The auditorium is designed in the French Renaissance effect, with brocaded tapestry designed walls and pilasters surmounted by vaulted arches, between which are six beautiful mural paintings. High overhead in the ceiling the large, elliptical dome is surrounded by cleverly concealed lights in deep coves. On all sides of the auditorium, at the base of the vaulted arches, this same idea is also effectively carried out. Three color lighting and dimming effects permit the operator to change the lighting of the entire theatre, flooding the auditorium with any kind of colored lights. The general color scheme of the auditorium is old rose and gold, harmonizing with rich red velour hangings at the crescent-shaped stage and throughout the auditorium.

A Hope-Jones Wurlitzer organ is installed in the State. The auditorium accommodates approximately 1500 people. The mezzanine floor contains comfort rooms, managing offices and projection room. Pictures are to a Raven screen by high intensity Simplex projection. The State is ventilated by the Typhoon system. The house is owned and operated by Morris Bleendes and Samuel Strausberg.

Open Dreka Theatre, Deland, Fla.

Realizing the vast importance of a new theatre of the type of the Dreka, the Dreka Daily News of Deland, Fla., issued a special edition of the paper, in which nothing appeared save advertisements from those firms fortunate enough to have been connected with the construction of the theatre; the news stories concerned the theatre only, and the pictures carried were of the theatre, the manager, Howard P. Stewart, and Mr. Dreka, himself, Deland capitalist, who built the theatre.

In every possible detail the Dreka is worthy of comparison to the best theatres in the land. Mr. Dreka did not argue that, because Deland was small, a medicre theatre would suffice. He believes that the people of a small town will patronize and pay for a beautiful, modern and thoroughly comfortable theatre twice as quickly as they will pay for a cheap little "shot-gun structure."

The Dreka Theatre, as it stands today, has long been a dream of Mr. Dreka's. Plans for it were drawn up, and approved early in 1917—and then the war came along, and the construction of the theatre was held up. The same plans, however, were used, except that the seating capacity was enlarged, and some minor changes to take advantage of late improvements and developments in this line were made.

A Twin-4 Monsoon cooling system keeps an even, comfortable temperature all the time in the Dreka. The inverted lighting system was used, and fixtures are of unusual beauty. Two Powers-6 B projectors, with Type E arc lamps and lamphouses guaranteee perfect projection. There are heavy bronze fixtures, and brass ones, too, with the most modern ticket box office imaginable, all bronze grille-work and marble. The tickets are sold by one of the newest and most popular style machines.

In the lobby, just as one enters the theatre, are two tall stands, of ivory wicker, bearing ivory wicker cages in which are canaries. Between these two cages is a long ivory wicker settee, covered with the gayest of English chintzes, backed by a tall stand of fresh flowers. There is, too, a tiny wicker writing desk, and a few chairs, so that one may wait for friends, or, if one wishes, wait for the beginning of the picture.

In every way the Dreka is worthy of its owner's dream, and of the high place it will hold in the esteem of the citizens of Deland.

To Extend Building

The Goldstein Amusement Company, owners of the Strand theatre at Palmer, Mass., has bought a tract of land adjoining that occupied by the playhouse, the intimation being that it will be utilized ultimately for extension of business. At present, a strip of the newly-acquired land will be used to widen the approach to the theatre and to enable proper lighting of this approach.—AGARD.

Magnificent Buffalo House Will Open Doors Very Shortly

What promises to be one of the most magnificent houses in Buffalo, N. Y., will be opened shortly in the new Lafayette Square theatre in the Lafayette Square Building, which is being constructed at a cost of $1,250,000. The house is being erected by the Monument Theatre Corporation, of which M. Slotkin, a veteran Buffalo theatrical man, is general manager. Leon Lempert of Rochester designed the house, which has a seating capacity of close to $4,000.

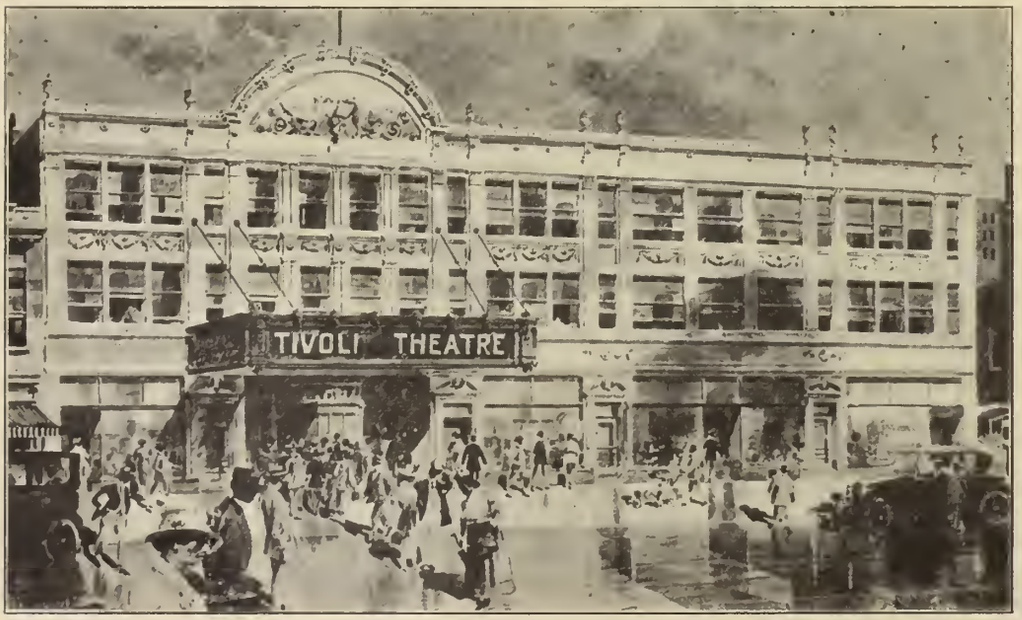
The Lafayette Square is a reproduction of the Tivoli in Chicago. It is a vast temple of marble, onyx, and other costly materials. At this writing the house interior is filled with scaffolding, but one is able to get an idea of the brilliance which will shine forth on opening day.

The theatre entrance faces Lafayette Square, the center of the city. The entrance is covered by a large porte cochere. A massive marble and onyx stairway leads upward from the lobby to a spacious mezzanine floor, patterned much after the Capitol theatre, New York. Three entrances lead from the mezzanine into the balcony, along the front of which are placed the loge and box seats, the latter running entirely around the house from stage to stage. On the mezzanine are located ladies' and gentlemen's rest rooms, ushers' retiring rooms, drinking fountains, etc. The mezzanine floor will be covered with rich Oriental rugs and beautifully furnished. Rich tapestries will hang from the walls.

The projection booth will be located directly over the rear of the balcony and will be one of the finest equipped in the country, special arrangements being made for the comfort of the operators. The stage is unusually large and of course will have every device known to modern theatre building.

One of the big features of the Lafayette Square are the many exits. Two large alleyways have been built on two sides of the theatre and Broadway is on one side and Washington street on the other, so that the theatre really has exits on all four sides.

Another big feature will be the $50,000 Wurlitzer Hope-Jones orchestral organ, which is now being installed.



A mushroom ventilating and heating system of the most modern type is being installed. Indirect lighting will be used throughout, not an incadescent bulb being in view. Color lighting, which has been employed for some time to good advantage on the theatre stage, is now being used in a special way in the auditorium and the new Lafayette Square will be able through its equipment to flood the house with every rainbow hue.

The walls of the auditorium, lobby and grand stairway will be adorned with beautiful mural paintings. The front of the house, especially the entrance, will be brilliantly lighted, a mammoth electric sign, with the name of the theatre, rising many feet up the front of skyscraper.

The Lafayette Square is located on the site of the old Lyric and Family theatres, two historic Buffalo amusement structures. With the completion and opening of the new house, the Olympic, operated by the same interests, will have its policy changed to straight pictures. The Lafayette Square will present super-productions and vaudeville.—Taylor.

Strand a Model Small Theatre

The Strand at Oxford, Ky., which opened recently, is a comfortable moving picture house of the small type. Erected and decorated by the owner himself, Carl N. Bierbusse, it is fitted out as a model small theatre. It was built at a cost of $15,000, and has a seating capacity of 350, eighty of the seats being in the balcony. The Strand is constructed of stone. The interior is finished in green and tan.

A system of fans and ventilators keeps the temperature low in summer, while in winter the heat is furnished by gas stoves. The pictures are projected for 2 6B Power's machine a distance of 80 ft. to a Minusa screen.

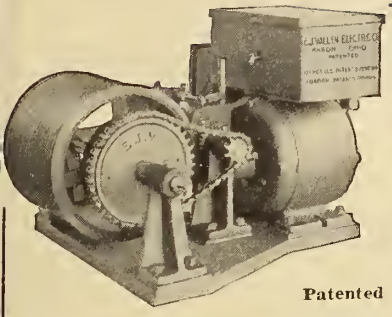
Plans Submitted

Minneapolis, Minn.—Plans have been submitted to the city building inspector for a new two-story business block and large motion picture theatre to be erected at Franklin and 4th avenue, South, at a cost of $175,000. Work is to be started on the new building in February. Local business men are backing the propect. Nothing definite regarding the theatre's policy is known but as it is out of the downtown district, it will in all probability be a second run house.—Wise.



Remodeled Isis Now the Colonial

After being remodeled and practically reconstructed the Colonial, San Diego, was opened recently. Formerly the house was the Isis, with entrances on Fourth street only. Since being altered there are entrances leading from both Fourth and Fifth streets. At the latter entrance there is a large marquise, supplied by Cliff Reid of the Theatrical Products Co. of Los Angeles.

The lobbies and lower side walls are of grey marble from San Diego quarries, the upper walls being in grey to correspond with the stone. At the entrances to the Colonial there have been constructed Colonial pillars.

The Colonial is equipped with an Argus crystal bead screen, 15 by 20, which is set back 40 feet from the first seats in the house. The picture is projected 90 feet from two Proctors machines, installed by the Theatrical Products Co. of Los Angeles. The projection room is located on the main floor, is 16 x 9 ft., constructed of metal, lath and plaster. A rewind stand is located between the two propectors. Hal C. Rogers, chief, and Max V. Wilson are in charge of projection.

J. Ward Hutton is in charge of the prologues and music, and H. McC. Davenport will direct the modified jazz, with Robert Jackson as relief man.—Wright.

National Anti-Misframe League Forum

Dec. 19, 1921.

Dear Sir:

I received your letter that you were out of buttons. I think the N. A. M. L. is a very good idea. The film I get now is in good condition, but some time ago I ran a film at the Orpheum Theatre and it was in very bad condition, paper pasted on the film, also bad patches, torn sprocket holes and I found from 5 to 10 misframes in one reel. I put it into the best condition possible. I am doing the best I can for the betterment of Projection.

I am an operator at St. Josephs' Auditorium, E. Mauch Chunk, Pa. I am a good friend with operator at the Orpheum Theatre, and I told him about this League and gave him the address and told him to become a member of the N. A. M. L. We are both doing the best we can.

Very truly yours,
ANDREW GMITTER,
82 E. Third St., E. Mauch Chunk, Pa.
N. A. M. L. Member No. 1517.

Dear Ed.:

I have been intending for some time to write in to the department, but owing to the fact that I have been employed in a seven-day town (namely Cairo, Ill.) for the past year, I have been unable to secure enough time to say anything.

I am now unemployed, owing to the fact that a theatre affecting me closed down a few days ago leaving me at liberty until I can secure a position elsewhere.

I have two inventions in particular which I want to discuss. After two years of hard study and drawings I have succeeded in inventing an Intermittent sprocket taper pin remover and installer for the Simplex & Powers machines, though I can make them to fit any projectors which have taper pins to hold the Intermittent sprocket. This instrument places the taperpins in the sprocket by automatic pressure and at exactly the right pressure and absolutely prevents the star-wheel shaft from being sprung. Just as soon as I complete getting my patent, the NEWS will be one of the first to receive an outlined drawing from me introducing this instrument. I also have succeeded after six months study in inventing a Simplex & Powers flywheel pinion gear and remover which removes and installs the pinion gear from a flywheel without the least possible scar, and when the old pinion gear is worn out with teeth like a knife, it takes only about 30 seconds or not more than I minute to remove the old pinion-gear and install the new one.

You shall also receive drawings and a model of same when I secure my patent. I wanted to discuss the Simplex extralite shutter and the new Powers Rollerpin movement, but haven't the time. I'll close for this time, hoping to write you again in the near future.

Very sincerely yours,
HENRY M. ALSMAN,

To The Projectionist

It is real encouraging to note that a projectionist has devised and patented an apparatus which may prove a practical and paying proposition. The apparatus referred to is the Behlen Film Signal Warning devise invented by of South Carolina, described on another page of this issue. Attention is not drawn to this device because of its merits, as the editor has never actually seen the article, but rather to the example it sets for other projectionists.

The projectionist knows first hand the shortcomings of the equipment with which he comes in daily contact. He knows also where the possibilities lay for improvements to secure one hundred per cent perfection. It is very probable that the small defects common in our present day apparatus will be illuminated in the future and the projectionist is very advantageously situated to make these improvements.

It is the wide awake man that gets along in the world. He keeps up to the minute on all that is going on around him, neglecting no opportunity to increase o nhis general knowledge. Thus the projectionist who is constantly striving for the betterment of his profession places himself directly in line for success. None of us know when opportunity is to knock at our door; the only safe motto is "preparedness."

The editor realizes the fact that these are only a few sources from which the projectionist may draw upon for general knowledge in his profession and wishes to extend his services to everyone to whom he can be of any possible help.

A series of articles will appear in these columns in the near future which will be of general interest and benefit to all.

Sylvia Theatre, Sylvester, Georgia.

Dear Ed:

I am glad to see the members of the N. A. M. L. waking up. Since I joined the League two years ago, a large number of members have been added to the large list, and I think it is about time that we make a drive for the things that we want. First, of course, we want better films, without mis-frames and punch holes. We can have these if we can ever get the exchanges to co-operate with us. If they would remove the holes before a film is shipped and watch it when it comes in, they could soon determine who is doing all the punching. This is the only way that it will ever be stopped. When I get a film with a lot of holes, mis-frames and bad patches in it in, but the exchanges don't seem to pay any attention to it. . . . Let some of the other members write in something on this . . . lets see how they all feel about it.

CURTIS A. LUKE,
N A M L No. 1159.

Annapolis, Md.

Dear Ed.;

In attempting to add my little bit of comment to the Forum I am sending the following: Most of my trouble is with untrue reels which the film exchanges send out. When the inspector rewinds the film from one side to the other and then piles the other reels on top of them, which breaks the sprockets out. And I think if this was looked after more carefully it would do away with so many splices. That causes jumpy pictures. This does not sound like much to kick about, but I think that every projectionist will agree with me.

L. B. D., Annapolis.

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

What Have Gundlach Projection Lenses Done for The Motion Picture Industry?

They have raised the standard of quality and illuminating power to the highest degree.

They have supplied lenses in three sizes to provide the exact focal length with the utmost illumination for every possible condition of projection.

They made the No. 2 size Projection Lenses available YEARS AGO which removed the limitation formerly upon the distance the picture could be projected and the size of theatres.

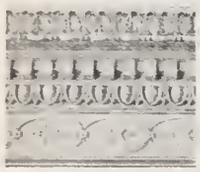
They have set a standard for optical quality, illumination and uniformity which may be equalled but not excelled.



Better look for the name GUNDLACH and be sure you are getting lenses with a reputation. There is no better value.

Joie, Fort Smith, an Ideal House

The new Joie Theatre, Fort Smith, Arkansas, reflects the most modern ideas of theatre construction from the electric ticket machine in the box office to the hot air heating plant under the stage. There is an entire absence of posts in the big auditorium. The main floor is 78 feet long and 60 feet wide from the orchestra pit to the standing rail. The balcony is as wide as the house and 43 feet deep at its narrowest point, the center.

A Departure from the conventional theatre is the boxes. The place where the box seats are usually kept in most theatres is purely ornamental in the Joie and is filled with an art glass panel.

The best seats in the house are in the loges on the front rail in the balcony, being only 31 feet and less from the stage.

The stage itself is 32 feet deep and 78 feet wide with an opening of 38 feet. The main floor is inclined, affording a clear view of the stage from any seat in the house. The total seating capacity is approximately 1,500, of which about 800 will be on the main floor.

The chairs are 21 inches wide, three inches wider than the average theatre chair. They are heavy, well fitted to the body, and with deep upholstered seats.

The balcony has five inside stairway exits, with one leading to the alley.

The building, strictly fireproof, built of brick, stone and reinforced steel and concrete represents an outlay of about $50,000.—NOBB

Music and the Picture

Grauman's 100% Program

Managing Director of Los Angeles Picture Palace Explains Reasons for Musical Policy

IN these days of curtailed patronage in many theatres, when managing directors exasperated by continued diminished net profits, look about for possible remedies for an apparently chronic condition and in so doing, allow their thoughts to dwell on the advisability of lessening the overhead by decreasing the size and effectiveness of the theatre orchestra, the following expression of views by Sid Grauman, managing director of Grauman's and Grauman's Rialto Theatre, Los Angeles, written exclusively for the NEWS, will be of timely interest.

Mr. Grauman says:

When any exhibitor engages an orchestra to play every day and every evening in a picture theatre and an orchestra of authentic symphony proportions and quality (65 musicians) to play every Sunday morning, he must have his reasons. When, in addition to this he laboriously works on prologues, engaging talent and genius to participate as preluding entertainment agencies to the presentation of a feature picture he must be convinced that the time, and effort and the money spent, pays.

All of which explains why my theatres devote so much attention to the musical program, not occasionally but week after week and month after month.

The problem of the picture exhibitors is to produce what he calls "one hundred per cent entertainment"—that is entertainment that will give to 100 per cent of his patronage their "money's worh."

The picture hasn't been made to do that; the vaudeville show hasn't been assembled yet that accomplished that goal and the musical program hasn't been presented either that achieves such perfection—but a combination of all three elements, plus others has and does.

Let us say that your taste in pictures does not run to stories of adventure, but that you do like revelations of the elegancies, follies and foibles of society. You go to the cinema and perhaps you pay to see a picture by the greatest of all exponents of the adventurous and heroic in all screenland—Bill Hart. Your neighbors on all sides of you thrill to the well-told story, but you remain unmoved. The entertainment this far has been, let us say, 75 per cent perfect—it has hit the entertainment-requirements of 75 per cent of the audience, but it has missed you.

But on the bill is an act like that we are presenting this week in the engagement of Max Fischer and his "personality band" as an extra touch to a fashion show in which a stage full of feminine beauties display a quarter of a million dollars worth of furs.

You begin to feel that the exhibitor has remembered that every one doesn't care for even Bill Hart.

Then jazz syncopation and social spectacle is succeeded by sublime music from an orchestra capable of playing anything from Beethoven to Victor Herbert or from Brahms and Schubert to Sullivan and Lehar.

You have enjoyed at least half the bill.

The entertainment has been made 100 per cent and nobody remains ungratified. It has all been worthy and on a high artistic plane—the wants of all have been consulted and gratified. Educational elements have not intruded themselves, but have been present; esthetic taste has been excited and satisfied and the imagination has been stimulated in wholesome and healthy manner.

That is the reason why Grauman's theatres will continue to serve every kind of taste except coarse taste by a diversity of entertainment that is aimed week after week at the bulls-eye of "100 per cent."

Sid Grauman

A New Stringed Instrument

In Berlin one Waldemar Giese has been giving a concert on a newly invented stringed instrument called the "bass-baritone." It is said to be a cross between a 'cello and a double bass and is tuned a fourth higher than the double bass. The tone is small and without expression and characteristic color, and correctness of intonation is difficult to attain. Harmonics were much used by the player, who presented a dull concerto by the famous double bass player, Kussewitzky.

Lipschultz Returns to Minneapolis

George Lipschultz, Milwaukee's best known photoplay orchestra leader, is back again at the Strand. Mr. Lipschultz left Milwaukee some months ago to go to the Pantheon theatre, Chicago. After he had left Saxe brothers found they had a gap in their organization that somehow they could not fill. Finally arrangements were made with Lubliner and Trinz, Chicago, to release Mr. Lipschultz from his contract and he returned to Milwaukee.

History of First Performance of "Rhinegold"

A writer in the Paris Temps recalls how Paris first heard the music of "Rhinegold," which has just been restored to the stage of the Opera. It was on May 6, 1893. The orchestra pit was covered with a platform. A little table was put there, lighted with a kerosene lamp with a green shade. The curtain rose and showed the setting of the nuptial chamber in "Lohengrin." Then entered, like a wedding procession, Messrs. Renaud, Fournets and Vergnet, and on their arms Mmes. Renée Richard, Bosman and Jane Marcy, who sat down in six chairs placed for them. There were two grand pianos, at which Raoul Pugno and Claude Debussy took their seats. Lecturer came forward, took his seat at the table and read a substantial essay: It was Catulle Mendes. After the lecture some scenes from the music drama were sung and played with great success.

Witmark Song Scores at Rialto

A very interesting musical score, which includes many old time New England favorites, has been arranged for the New York Rialto Theatre feature this week, "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," but the tune that is being used as the special thematic material for the score is a comparatively recent song, "My Home Town Is a One Horse Town," published by M. Witmark and Sons.

Carl Rollins, the featured singer, is using the song also as his vocal number with the Rialto Male Quartettte singing the chorus on the second repeat.

Niagara Falls Theatre Has "Music Lovers Week"

D. H. Finke, manager of the new Bellevue theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., put on a "Music Lovers' Week," as an added attraction last week, offering to play songs and selections requested by patrons on the big orchestral organ. The patrons of the Bellevue wrote their requests. The numbers receiving the largest number of requests were played. Mr. Finke also staged a prologue showing famous composers in connection with the stunt.

C. Sharpe Minor Will Play at Buffalo

C. Sharpe Minor is coming to Buffalo. The famous organist of the Grauman Theatre on the west coast has been engaged by M. Slotkin, general manager of the new Lafayette Square Theatre, Buffalo, to act as organist on this 4,000 seat house, which opens January 15.

Mr. Slotkin has installed a $50,000 Wurlitzer Hopes-Jones unit orchestral organ in the Lafayette Square, which is said to be one of finest instruments in the world and which C. Sharpe Minor will play.

The announcement of the coming of this famous musician has created much comment in Buffalo and western New York and is only one of the many surprises which Mr. Slotkin has in store for Buffalo theatregoers when the mammoth house opens next month.

Feature Subjects of Short Length

"Bonnets of Auvergne"

THIS single reeler will prove to be a special delight to the ladies, for they are presented with interesting views of the hairdress of the peasants of France. The queer bonnets and laces in the family album of fifty years ago will get no greater laugh than the peculiar specimens shown in this picture.

Mr. Bruce does not, however, concentrate exclusively on hats and hairdress. Many types of peasantry, male and female, are exhibited. The backgrounds are carefully chosen, and of especial interest is a huge statue of the Virgin, apparently some sixty feet in height, which crowns a volcanic hill. The whole thing is a pretty and interesting sidelight on French peasant life—a thing to delight even the globe-trotter who has only seen the larger cities with the help and assistance of a Baedecker.

—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Torchy Takes a Chance"

(Produced by Mastodon Films—Released Through Educational Exchanges, Inc.)

JOHNNY HINES rollicks through two reels of delightful nonsense in fine style in this latest "Torchy" comedy. There is not much of a story, but it is one of those farces that concerns the chase of a valuable, but exceeding elusive slip of paper. Johnny is presented with a chance on an automobile about to be raffled. His is the lucky number, but the wind comes along at the crucial moment and blows it out of the window. From then on we follow Johnny's difficulties in recovering it. It blows under a man's hat, jiggers down the street through the midst of traffic, and the resultant adventures are varied and amusing. His trials are too numerous to enumerate, but they provide opportunity for some new gags which are perfectly satisfying. A sewer claims it at the end, but Johnny spies it again at the end of the dock, and battles a fish for its possession. Length two reels.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"The Brand of Courage"

(Universal)

THIS is one of those "up boys and at 'em" type of westerns—which is to say that the hero is placed in several tight situations before the happy ending introduces him successful at arms and romance. The mining camp is presided over by a bullying villain. He attempts blackmail and endeavors to hold up the proprietress of a small restaurant for "protecting" the place. A young miner takes her part and in doing so makes the villain his enemy. The scene shifts to the hero's mine and the action reveals the young man signalling the girl by firing a long shot at the fire-bell. The heroine summons aid. The conclusion brings the triumph of virtue over villainy. The picture is snappy throughout, there being a good display of the western ingredients. In the cast are Harry de More, Laura La Plante, Ben Haggerty and Mack V. Wright. Length 2 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"A Ride for a Rancho"

(Cyclone Smith Western—Universal)

EDDIE POLO, the star of "The Return of Cyclone Smith Series," rides forward here in the last of these vivid documents of the West. This is the occasion for the cattle rustlers to attack the guardian of the El Dorado Ranch. The hero rushes to the rescue. In gratitude the owner offers him a job. The young man is assigned to the task of meeting the train which is bringing the rancher's niece, Helen, whom he has not seen in years. It develops that the rustlers are under the control of an unscrupulous engineer who is desirous of buying the ranch for a right of way. Unable to dicker successfully with the hero or the owner, the engineer turns to Helen since she is the rightful owner of the property.

This is the point wherein the girl assumes the identity of her maid and the latter masquerades as Helen. Consequently the villain is foiled again. There is a final scene which presents the hero fighting the scheming plotters singlehanded, and he makes a good job of it. The story does not offer much originality of plot, but it keeps moving with snappy action and the love interest is well developed. In all it is up to the Cyclone Smith standard.—Length 2 Reels.—Laurence Reid.

"Fool Days"

(Sunshine Comedy—Fox)

THIS is a good burlesque on "School Days" as conceived by songster and story-writer and the youth of the land. Al St. John is the funster and he manages to extract a deal of humor from the idea. His tricks exploited here are quite new even though they follow familiar ground in a general way. The comedian is discovered as a lazy school-boy whose home is outfitted with rather novel labor-savings devices. This is applying the Rube Goldberg touch—and giving it some semblance of reality. These inventions or contrivances are conceived with good effect. some might even be used in the small or compressed apartment even though they look cumbersome. At least they have the saving grace of appearing quite practical after all.

With the first reel devoted to showing these devices the comedy swings into its story as Al goes to school and cuts up didoes with all the imagination of a Huck Finn. The ape, Napoleon, helps out St. John on several occasions. "Fool Days" is ridiculous burlesque. It contains a goodly amount of laughs and keeps moving with little dependence upon padded incident. —Length 2 Reels.—Laurence Reid.

A bigger, better and prosperous New Year is the wish of the Motion Picture News to all its readers and friends.

"The Bell Hop"

(Larry Semon Comedy-Vitagraph)

TRUST Larry Semon to put the skids under the props of his pictures. The knockabout comedian of Vitagraph does not care a snap of his finger for expense. He builds to tear down —to build again some other day. He believes in plenty of sets, plenty of girls, plenty of flour, plenty of water, plenty of trap-doors and panels, plenty of chandeliers and—oh, well plenty of everything to keep his efforts going. The Semon comedies are unlike any thing being presented from rival concerns. One knows that good, old-fashioned slapstick will be in evidence. But Semon does insist upon this same brand of slapstick being novel and up-to-date. He never goes over the old ground. He even takes a tumble in a new-fangled way if necessary.

"The Bell Hop" finds him getting in "dutch" on several occasions. First he drops ink on the bald pate of a guest. It is good for a raucous laugh. Why? Because it is based upon the w. k. practical joke. Again he races and tumbles around the floors and rooms with the agility of a circus clown. Semon is there with the knockabout comedy. The picture is a riot of jazz and rare hokum and exaggerated buffoonery. It carries several novel stunts. But after you have seen the piece you will admit that Semon is some lil' home or hotel wrecker. Nothing is saved here, not even the fragments. The crowd should yell their collective heads off with this effort.—Length, 2 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

Advance Review of New Features

"Pardon My French"

(Messmore Kendall—Goldwyn)

EXACTLY why "Pardon My French," having been allowed sufficient time for doctoring, with such names as Sidney Olcott, director, Vivian Martin, star and a fine supporting cast to go on, is a grave disappointment, seems unaccountable. Nevertheless, as a farce comedy it simply isn't. Difficult to follow and disconnected to a point of requiring strict concentration to understand what it is all about, "Pardon My French" certainly does not exhibit as a 1922 model, to advantage.

Story hinges around a stranded theatrical troupe, Miss Martin as the ingenue. The "types," not only for the company but for other parts are well depicted, wherein manifests the recognized ability of Mr. Olcott as a director. But the comedy is nil, the plot bewhiskered and from the outside looking in, it appears the story which did not mould well into farce for the screen, is mainly responsible. Fine photography and excellent staging, interiors being particularly good, rush to the rescue, but mirth cannot be obtained from "sets" or good "shots," so it is what might be described as a farce without comedy and a comedy without farce.—Five reels.—Lillian R. Gale.

"THE CHILD THOU GAVEST ME"

(John M. Stahl-First National)

Rich Sets and Splendid Acting Give This One Its Appeal

YOU can always trust John M. Stahl in providing a rich production for his pictures. Whether he has a fitting story or not does not enter into the scheme at all. His attention is centered upon the interiors and exteriors—the little intimate details, and if the subject matter happens to be weak it will offer some appeal through its artistic dressing. If it happens to be strong—then the picture takes on a form which stamps it as something exceptional. "The Child Thou Gavest Me" carries imagination of plot and characterization even though it does seem overdrawn. The director has played up a domestic tragedy with sharp emphasis although the dramatic complications are brushed away in rather conventional or arbitrary style.

It is a plot that one is apt to remember for some time. The very daring of it demands some thought. Give the spectator a sumptuous wedding scene—one which takes up quite a bit of footage, follow it up with a startling exposé of the bride's hidden life, the unhappy woman informing her husband that she was betrayed by a soldier in Belgium while doing relief work—and you have a dramatic foundation which carries this story along with plenty of plot interest and suspense. It is all quite unlikely, but somehow it impresses you with its suggestion of tragedy. The husband takes his wife and her baby to his summer home. Here is occasion for Stahl to present some exceptional shots. The plot proceeds with the husband vowing vengeance upon the interloper. Overcme with jealous rage he shoots and seriously wounds the friend whom he thinks guilty. Explanations occur which compel the husband to realize that he committed the crime against his wife—during a drunken stupor. A reconciliation is effected before the young benedict can efface himself from the scene by means of suicide.

There are some convenient incidents, as for instance, the first appearance of the child. The real conspicuous highlight of the picture is the outstanding performance of the boy, played by Richard Headrick. This youngster is precocious to a degree, yet he never suggests that he is being guided in expression, so easy and natural is his performance. Barbara Castleton enacts the part of the wife with fine repression. She always conveys the impression that she is carrying a tremendous burden. Lewis Stone plays the husband in his usual manner of poise and persuasion. The title and the cast should get the crowd for this feature.—Length 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Child Thou Gavest Me," a thrilling story of domestic tragedy in high life will be the feature at the ———— theatre next ————. Produced by John M. Stahl, it may be called the most pretentious work of this director. As a picture it combines all the elements of pure entertainment, a strong story, continued suspense and a climax that startles and amazes. The author sets forth in a logical and interesting manner the complications that arise from a marriage solemnized without the groom knowing that his bride has a child.

The girl does not know that the child is still alive until after the wedding, and then for sufficient reason, she refuses to reveal the identity of the father. Thus before the echo of the wedding march has died out, the couple are estranged, but are compelled to live in the same house. The husband devotes his life to a search for the father of the child. The situation builds a scene of tense drama before the complications are cleared away and a reconciliation is effected. The picture is remarkably well acted by a prominent cast of players.

PROGRAM READERS

For magnetic drama you must see the John M. Stahl production, "The Child Thou Gavest Me," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with a cast of all-star proportions. Among the players are Barbara Castleton, Adele Farrington, Lewis Stone, William Desmond, Richard Headrick, Helen Howard and others. The wife—the husband—and the mutual friend! You've seen such characters in other stories—but never before in one so amazing as this! A wife who goes into marriage with a lie on her lips; a husband who finds that lie and waits; a friend who had loved the woman once—still loved her, some said—and tried to bring happiness to a home bereft of it. They, and the child, sweep to a climax of drama, surprise and absolute amazement.

SUGGESTIONS

The title of this feature commands attention. It is a title that will make people curious to see the picture. So concentrate a deal of your exploitation upon it. Treat the story as one that is positively amazing. Play up that it deals with a theme which is rich in dramatic elements. Play up the fact that it offers the wife—husband and the mutual friend—offers these figures in some startlingly new situations. You have a cast of prominent players to exploit also. So mention Barbara Castleton, Lewis Stone and William Desmond. The director has staged a number of amazing photoplays and he should come in here for some special exploitation. Feature the picture as an amazing drama of the home.

CATCH LINES

The drama of a wife who wed with a lie upon her lips. See "The Child Thou Gavest Me."

"THE LITTLE MINISTER"

(Paramount)

Quaint and Charming Picture Made From Barrie's Play

THERE is no doubt that James M. Barrie's play is entitled to the honors of being the most appealing play of the day. Ever since Maude Adams humanized the lovable character of Babbie, this quaint document had endeared itself to theatregoers everywhere. Now it has been adapted to the screen by Paramount, and the subject is worthy of fitting comparison. There is nothing about this adaptation which will arouse the slightest note of unfavorable comment. Everything is as it should be in regard to production, detail, intimate touches, backgrounds and the interpretation.

The appealing romance of Gavin for Babbie—a romance that tugs at the heart and engenders a fine sentiment will be appreciated everywhere. Babbie returned this love with all the femininity of the sex. Barrie is a keen, penetrating writer. He knows the feminine soul. And his Babbie is the eternal feminine. The spectator will instantly respond to her net of intrigue which she weaves around the serious-minded Gavin. He will express mute delight in watching him endeavor to break the romantic yoke—because it disrupts his spiritual thoughts. He will follow the attempts of the simple weavers to break a more dramatic bondage. And when Babbie takes Gavin to the high cliff and persuades him to blow the horn, warning the countryside of the approach of the soldiers he will say to himself—"that's quaint—that's appealing!"

It is a picture which is compact with human touches—which is embroidered with charming detail of Babbie's charm. The backgrounds are charged with the life of Thrums. The little minister tends his flock in the "auld licht kirk" and then follows up his spiritual mission by worshipping at the shrine of the colorful "gypsy girl." He will try and forget her. He will pray for himself. It is no use. He is human and surrenders to the call of the flesh. It is not so elusive—so ephemeral as the call of the spirit. Penyrhn Stanlaws, the director, has brought forth all his artistic touches. He is always the artist, a fact appreciated in the harmony of his backgrounds—the even color scheme of the various sets and details. His direction is highly commendable in shaping the play so that it constantly moves forward—moves with an even sequence of events. This is a picture of ideals. It suggests that the field of adaptation is limitless—that the surface has not even been scratched—among the works of authors. "The Little Minister" gives to Betty Compson her finest role since "The Miracle Man," and she makes Babbie a delightful study of piquant and persuasive expression. George Hackathorne plays the minister with good authority—lending to the part a quaint pathos. The picture is well rounded—finished, to be exact, in every particular. It is fairly saturated with charming qualities. Pathos and romance to be sure. And plenty of humor and sentiment.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A picturization of James M. Barrie's famous novel and play "The Little Minister," starring beautiful Betty Compson, will be seen at the ———— theatre next ————. This is a superb production directed with infinite taste by Penrhyn Stanlaws, and presents the charming star in the role made famous upon the stage by Maude Adams, the role of Lady Babbie. The production is praiseworthy in every particular and is certain to enthuse all those fortunate enough to see it. It is a type of story of the fine, clean and wholesome plays that are so much desired. It presents a story of a town that was all upset till a gypsy girl came and—upset it some more. Barrie presents this story charmingly and eloquently. He pictures the snug village of Thrums with its stern, religious people. It is a play that has been enshrined in the hearts of millions. Its love, charm and thrilling cvents are perfectly recorded upon the screen.

PROGRAM READER

"The Little Minister," Barrie's beloved play in which Maude Adams appeared so successfully for many years—and which will be remembered as one of the most appealing documents ever written, has reached the screen. It comes as a Paramount picture next ————. The actress who assumes the mantle worn so eloquently by Maude Adams is Betty Compson, who will be remembered for her sterling performance in "The Miracle Man." It is easily her finest role—this Babbie in "The Little Minister." As a picture it carries all the quaint charm and sincerity—all the fragrant romance and sentiment of the original play. It is charged with pathos and humor too. So come next ———— and be royally entertained.

SUGGESTIONS

This is an adaptation of Barrie's play of the same name. You know what to do in the line of exploitation. State that it is Barrie's masterpiece—that it is one of the most beloved plays that ever endeared itself to the hearts of an audience. Make a play for the older generation. Spread your paper announcing the fact that the picture is quite comparable to the original. Play up that it is Betty Compson's finest role. You can stage a prologue featuring a Scottish set—with the ensemble correctly garbed—executing Scottish dances such as the sword dance. A piper or two should be easy to find in the larger cities. Your musical score should exploit Scottish airs.

"WESTERN FIREBRANDS"
(Aywon-State Rights)

Snappy Action Makes This a Satisfactory Western

ANYONE looking for the essential elements that compose the conventional Western will find them in this feature starring Big Boy Williams. While cut from an orthodox pattern it contains enough of the entertaining values to make it acceptable as a satisfying offering. "Western Firebrands" is quite up to the other releases, "The Jack Rider," and "The Vengeance Trail," which starred the cowboy actor. In the first place it presents plenty of action of the sure-fire variety—such as his horsemanship and his ability to face the necessary dangers for the sake of realism. There is a good assortment of thrills present, too, so taking everything into consideration, the spectator is entitled to give his share of praise to the offering.

The director has, seemingly, gone to some difficulty in assembling the locations—there being a wealth of picturesque exteriors. These sets are in perfect keeping with the plot and add to its value. There is hardly a let-up in the tempo once the introductory footage is over. It certainly keeps moving—and the dramatic incidents have been emphasized so well that the spectator almost feels like an actual participant. The plot deals with virtue and villainy as found in the melodramas of a lumber camp. There is a superintendent or foreman whose object it is to stage a fake abduction in order to make himself solid with the heroine who is distrustful of him. There is a train carrying the girl and her father, the owner of the camp, and the foreman and his vicious henchmen attempt to wreck it by placing a tree across the tracks.

However, the hero discovers the plot and foils the disciples of evil. The foreman does not succeed in his abduction for the men kidnap her and hold her for ransom. The hero is a victim of the trap but manages to escape through the aid of an Indian girl. Help arrives from a neighboring ranch and the girl responds to the call of love. The mere telling of the plot does not indicate the varied assortment of thrills and the plentiful supply of action. But it carries these elements in good measure. Big Boy Williams should be hearing returns on his popularity before long. The latest of his features is certain to win him many friends. He plays his part with enthusiasm and feeling and manages to impress the spectator with his athletic talent. Virginia Adair is the heroine and an attractive one, while Jack Pitcairn and Bert Apling suffice as bad men.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Billy Fargo ..... "Big Boy" Williams
Tom Fargo ..... J. Conrad Needham
Richard Stanton ..... Billy Horne
Mildred Stanton ..... Virginia Adair
Victor Lanning ..... Jack Pitcairn
Pete Carson ..... Bert Apling

Directed by Charles R. Seeling.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Big Boy" Williams, the rugged cowboy star, who is creating a wide demand for his pictures, will appear at the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— in his latest offering entitled "Western Firebrands." This is a Western which is packed with several thrills—which carries the essential elements of suspense and action. It is also well fortified with a romantic story which balances it perfectly. The picturesque star has a role which entitles him to recognition. He can ride and throw the lariat with the best of them.

The story is one that is laid in the lumber regions—with an immense forest fire as the thrilling event. The star has many opportunities to display his courage. He is supported by a cast that has been chosen for its adaptability as well as talent. The story is a primitive adventure which presents a vicious enemy attempting to impress the girl through a fake abduction. The attractive backgrounds—the fast and crisp action and the acting and direction—these are sufficient to stamp this a first rate offering.

PROGRAM READER

Come to the ———— theatre next ———— and see a rapid-fire Western which carries plenty of action and suspense and which features "Big Boy" Williams. This star is a newcomer to the screen and he brings a vivid personality which wins friends. The title of the picture is "Western Firebrands"—a story of a lumber camp in which are featured some spectacular forest fires. You will be thrilled and entertained by this picture, which offers colorful scenery and which is rich in the qualities which satisfy. The star's previous offerings have entitled him to recognition. Come and greet this new personality. You will like him.

SUGGESTIONS

Since this is a Western perhaps it would be a good angle for you to exploit it with a lobby display. Some compo board can be used to represent a box-office—the design made over to resemble a hut. Your artist can decorate it with vivid colors. Fir trees or pine trees would provide fitting atmosphere, and these should be easy to obtain at the present time. Bill it as a rapid-fire melodrama laid in the West—that it offers lively action, good suspense and first rate love interest. Play up the star and mention that he is a newcomer. Stress the fact that the public is ever eager to see new personalities and that the chance has arrived to see a big, rollicking cowboy who can ride and perform feats with the best of them.

A lively picture crammed with crisp action and suspense. See "Western Firebrands."

"THE ROOF TREE"
(Fox)

A Slight Variation of Feud Story; Fairly Pleasing

THERE is a slight variation of the Kentucky feud story presented in William Russell's latest picture, "The Roof Tree." For one thing it gets away from the usual orthodox exposé of mountaineer moonshiners who, heavily armed, pass in and out of the picturesque backgrounds. You might say that it is a transplanted Western—since most of the action and incident feature the elements characteristic of such a tale. True it reveals the qualities of intense love and hatred, jealousies and traditions of the hardy mountaineers. The director has emphasized these touches with the result that the action is often retarded. But his attention to details is excusable if you consider the shortcomings of the plot.

Once the mystery note has spent itself—there is nothing to do but wait for the finish—though one has occasion to pay attention to some good romantic interludes—a slice of Kentucky feud life and some characteristic incident. The opening shot reveals a man being killed in a mountain hut. One suspects the hero who flees. However, his sister is the real assassin and the brother runs away to take the suspicion upon himself. He journeys over into Virginia under an assumed name. And the romance proceeds to find expression. By falling in love with a girl his action arouses the jealousy of a mountaineer neighbor. And then one is introduced to a new feud. He is fired upon from ambush and the enemy has him in his clutches when he is convalescing from the injury. However, the hero compels his rival, under oath, to refrain from any murderous attacks until he is upon his feet.

There is a noticeable flaw here, for as the hero falls from his wound, and the attention given to him afterward—one suspects he has received a vital injury. Yet a subsequent scene reveals his arm in a sling. It sort of belittles the fighting qualities of these mountaineers. The rival learns of his identity and turns him over to the law—to pay for his sister's crime. During his absence, the jealous lover endeavors to compromise the little wife. But the hero returns in time to give him a good punishment. So endowed is the rival's father with a sense of fair play—that he calmly looks on while his son is receiving a beating. The story is not punctuated by much crisp action. Consequently Russell's work suffers in comparison with some of his sturdy Westerns. Sylvia Breamer is good as the wife, and the mountaineer types are first rate. The title finds its meaning in the protection it serves for the family that planted it—a sort of tradition as it were. The exteriors are quite appropriate.—Length 5 Reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Ken Thornton ..... William Russell
Sally McTurk ..... Florence Deshon
Dorothy Harper ..... Sylvia Breamer
Caleb Harper ..... Robert Daly
Bass Rowlett ..... Arthur Morrison
Jim Rowlett ..... Al Fremont

By Charles Neville Buck.
Scenario by Jules G. Furthman.
Directed by Jack Dillon.
Photographed by Sol. Polito.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is "The Roof Tree," starring William Russell. The virile star has a vehicle here which permits him to enact with his customary persuasion—the role of a Kentucky mountainer. Russell's part in the picture is that of a sturdy Virginian of pioneer stock, who is forced to go to Kentucky to escape the wrath of the McTurk family after one of their number has been killed. Into this story of mountain love and hatred has been woven a tradition current among the people of certain mountain communities—namely, the beneficent influence of a "roof tree" over the fortunes of the family whose home it overspreads.

The roof tree idea gives a sentimental touch to a picture which seethes with primitive emotion. The story is by Charles Neville Buck, with Jack Dillon as the director. The star, of course, enacts a noble figure in the story. Chief in his support are Florence Deshon, Sylvia Breamer and Al Fremont. The offering is staged amidst backgrounds which are charming and picturesque.

PROGRAM READERS

A good old family name was the most treasured possession of a certain Virginian. He went to Kentucky and fell in love with a wonderful girl. If he had told her his real name something very strange might have happened, but if he denied that he was the man she thought he was—well he might lose her. What did he do? What would you have done? When you see William Russell in "The Roof Tree" at the ———— theatre next ———— you will know whether you have done the right thing. 'The Roof Tree" is a new Fox picture of the Kentucky hills. To miss it will deprive you of one of the best pictures ever shown here. It is filled with dramatic surprises and keen action and suspense.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a Kentucky mountain story although it is not based upon a feud. Play up the idea carried here—exploiting the well known tradition of the "roof tree." The dictionary says that a roof tree is a roof beam which renders a beneficent influence over the fortunes of a family whose home it overspreads. Play up that it carries the well known brand of action characteristic of William Russell's pictures. You can mention that it carries enough elements for genuine entertainment. Also mention that Sylvia Breamer is in the cast as leading woman. A prologue can feature a "prop" tree suggestive of the title and theme and the idea can be worked out in presenting an identical scene from the picture.

CATCH LINES

A story of love, hate, jealousy, feud and tradition. That is "The Roof Tree," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————.

An exciting love tale with Southern tradition. That is "The Roof Tree," starring William Russell.

"THE ROAD TO ARCADY"
(J. W. Film Corp.-State Rights)

Society Drama Makes Good Program Offering

THERE may not be anything original or novel of theme or characterization in "The Road to Arcady," if one remembers the "highest bidder" type of story. The author has gone over old ground. But the picture contains enough heart interest, dramatic conflict and artistic backgrounds to make it appreciated most anywhere as a worthy program offering. For one thing it contains expensive sets—the director, seemingly, going to some length in giving it a production entirely consistent with the theme. Then again he has assembled a cast that contains a group of real troupers. Roger Lytton and Julia Swayne Gordon have played the figures entrusted to them so well on other occasions that the interpretation is genuinely easy and natural for them.

The former is depicted to the audience as a mercenary character of wealth—who holds the whiphand over the father of the heroine—a man who listens to no entreaties that would lessen the burden of those dependent upon his good-nature. The girl is engaged to a struggling young architect. Yet she accepts the highest bidder—at her scheming mother's instigation—in order to spare her father. The picture is convincing up to the point that the financier displays a generosity of spirit. Unable to assert his personality with the girl and realizing that she will never tender him any love—he gives up his claim, stating that the youth's mother was once his sweetheart—and that he could not do anything to wreck his career. As a wedding present he also gives up any claim he has with the girl's father.

The story is adequately handled for the most part—the director stressing each scene to emphasize the pathos and heart interest. Since the financier is the dominant figure it is natural to assume that the actor portraying the role would walk away with the honors. And this is what Roger Lytton proceeds to do. He and Julia Swayne Gordon carry the burden of the plot in adequate fashion—the other players providing the happy balance or just so much background. The story may be time-worn but it still carries enough realism and dramatic foundation to interest spectators. One may anticipate how it will end, but there is sufficient conflict and balance to make it still valuable as entertainment. Virginia Lee is appealing as the heroine and Harry Benham is natural as the youth.—Length 5 Reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Antoinette Gerard.....Virginia Lee
John T. Hamilton.....Harry Benham
Benson Churchill.....Roger Lytton
Oliver Gerard.....Stephen Gratton
Helen Gerard.....Julia Swayne Gordon
Sue Dennison.....Mildred Wayne
Bob Gerard.....Hugh Huntley

Directed by Burton King.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A vital story of a girl bartered off by an ambitious mother—and the young woman rebelling when she discovers that love is stronger than any parental influence—that is "The Road to Arcady," that comes to the _____ theatre next _____ with a cast that comprises Roger Lytton, Julia Swayne Gordon, Harry Benham, Virginia Lee and others of adequate ability. The picture may be classified as a society drama in which are depicted a spineless father who, because of his financial dependence upon the man of wealth, allows himself to become subordinate to the other's whims and ambitions.

The mother is eager to have her daughter marry well. And Benson Churchill, the wealthy figure, courts the girl who is unable to offer him any response of love. Her heart belongs to John T. Hamilton, a worthy youth, but blessed with little resources. In time when the wealthy man understands that the girl does not love him he gracefully steps aside and shows his true character. He had merely been testing their values. The picture presents a deal of dramatic conflict and is capably staged and acted.

PROGRAM READER

Have you ever met a girl who was bartered off to the highest bidder? Perhaps you know one up the street or around the corner. Perhaps she is a ready subject to a scheming mother's ambitions. And then again perhaps she rebels. Would you, if engaged to this type of girl, and you were not blessed with money—would you encourage the girl to keep on loving you? Or would you relinquish all claim? See "The Road to Arcady" and see it satisfactorily answered. It is a society drama of the present day. It is well fortified with realistic scenes and capably acted by a cast comprising Roger Lytton, Virginia Lee, Julia Swayne Gordon and Harry Benham. It is a dramatic story. And offers good entertainment. Next _____. Here.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a title that is highly suggestive of romance. You can feature it as a dramatic account of society people of the present day. You can play up the theme if you do not question the loyalty of the fans of your house. If they have seen this type of story many times—they might not welcome this picture. So go careful in exploiting the theme. Play up the cast. The four principal players are all well known and all talented. Feature the picture as an interesting drama of society life—of a girl who was sold on the altar to the highest bidder. You can stage an adequate prologue which might feature a society set—or the actors representing symbols—such as Wealth, Honor, Dependence, etc.

CATCH LINES

"THE FIRE EATER"
(Universal)

Conventional Lumberjack Story Carries Plenty of Action

THERE is nothing very original about the plot of Ed (Hoot) Gibson's latest picture, "The Fire Eater." It offers a conventional plot and an equally conventional line of characters, though there is enough crisp action to satisfy even the jaded spectator. The author has placed his central figure in the role of a ranger whose duty is to suppress, peaceably or otherwise, the storm of rebellion brewing among the lumberjacks because the government has made a preserve of certain timberlands. The familiar conflict finds the star oppressed by the surly natives, who are dominated by a vicious villain. The father of the girl who has fascinated him with her charm is one of the ringleaders against him.

Undaunted, he takes up his task and it is a single-handed contest in so far as he is concerned, because they have discovered his identity. He proves his mettle in a knock-'em-down fight on the edge of a cliff and beats into submission the bully of the camp. The latter confesses the plot and is assassinated by the arch-villain. Naturally suspicion points toward the ranger. And his task is harder than ever. The girl's father, chagrined over the turn of events, sets fire to the timber and the thrill is offered as Gibson rides forth to subdue the flames. There is first rate action here—action tinctured with genuine realism.

The director, Reeves Eason, has caught some good effects and has added to the suspense of the fire by compelling his players to show real enthusiasm for their work. The star rides with his customary skill and performs several hazardous feats in the rescue work. The girl has been kidnapped, but is rescued by the hero. To avoid the creeping flames they seek shelter in a water hole. And the youth dashes forth to save the life of his enemy, who has been rendered hors de combat on a frail bridge in the path of the flames. Eventually the lumberjacks appreciate that the ranger is their friend.

The picture is easily anticipated, but the director has eliminated the obvious note by the compact line of action he has introduced. There is something doing most every minute. There is even comedy relief provided by Walter Perry. The atmosphere is correct, for the backgrounds have been caught in the open spaces of the timber country. What interiors are shown are entirely in keeping with the story. In all it is a satisfying western, and quite up to the Gibson standard. Exhibitors should get satisfactory returns with the presentation.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Ed (Hoot) Gibson is the star of this feature entitled "The Fire Eater," which comes to the _____ theatre next _____. This is a story of lumberjacks who live in defiance of government. Their ideas of right and wrong are based upon the old adage that possession is nine points of the law. Into their midst comes "Smilin' Bob" Corey, a ranger. His mission is to pacify the community without resorting to arms. But his identity is penetrated and the forces against him take up the entire camp. However, he has a girl on his side—the daughter of one of the ringleaders against law and government. When he rescues her she becomes his friend through all difficulties which arise.

The hero punishes a brutal lumberjack and impresses his personality so strongly that the campers are compelled to be friendly. In a moment of desperation the aged father sets fire to the timber and a raging fire occurs. It threatens to destroy many lives and a vast amount of property. But the hero is ready to rescue those in distress. The picture is crammed with vivid action—there being plenty of riding and gun-play. The star plays his role with his picturesque abandon, supported by Louise Lorraine, Walter Perry, Tom Lingham and others.

PROGRAM READERS

Suppose you had eked out a living as a lumberjack in a region which you looked upon as your own. Possession is nine points of the law and these lumberjacks decided that they owned the land. Suppose a government agent came into your territory for the business of spying or attempting to pacify you—what would you do? Would you show fight? Come and see how Hoot Gibson as the ranger handles the situation. "The Fire Eater" is crammed with dramatic action which furnishes plenty of thrills—plenty of charming and picturesque scenery—and plenty of suspense and romance. It is a picture which will grip you with its tense moments. It is as clever a picture as "Action." See "The Fire Eater" at the _____ theatre next _____.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have played the other Gibson pictures and your crowd warmed up to the star there is no reason why you should balk at this one. It carries all the action and thrills of of its forerunners. The name of Gibson has become synonymous with adventurous action. So feature the picture for this quality. Mention that it is a melodrama laid in a primitive region which reveals virgin timber. Play up the open spaces. Treat your copy with plenty of superlatives concerning the big outdoors. Mention that there is something doing every minute. You can put over a scenic for a prologue which shows lumberjacks at work. This should be easy to secure. Bill it as a crisp melodrama which features action and thrills.

CATCH LINES

Snug Little Comedy-Romance With Wallace Reid

THE motor car stories have been relegated to the background for the time being while Wallace Reid finds expression with a comedy-romance based upon an artist's adventures in avoiding paying rent for a studio. Those who have followed the screen for some length of time will recall this story. It is not new, nor novel, but it travels along on its four cylinders without missing a single spark.

Released at holiday time it is sure to bring a wealth of romance and sentiment—two qualities everyone is in search of this time of the year. The exhibitor, regardless of the star's popularity, can exploit the comedy angle here and have a deal of fun. He can point out the trying problem of the high cost of living—the exorbitant demands made by landlords upon their tenants to pay high rentals.

It is a sparkling comedy-romance—one that is a trifle obvious but one which goes merrily along singing its little romantic song. Wallace Reid will surprise even his devotees here—because he is developing into a light comedian of the first order. Time was when the popular star played his roles with a key upon the idea of asserting his own personality. Now he gives more attention to the shading of his role and emphasizing the necessary touches. The star is evicted from a conventional studio (Latin Quarter model) because of his inability to pay the rent. He has followed his own ambition to study art and cultivate it rather than give heed to his parent concerning taking up law as a profession. He takes life humorously—even philosophically and being evicted doesn't worry him to any extent. Like Peg, who turned to Mike when she was confronted with trouble—the hero turns to his terrier and the dog wags his tail in sympathy.

The youth is not making much progress with his art. He even forgets it while he encourages a couple of girls who have also pitched their tent on the roof to smile for him. He even rescues them from a storm. Then he descends below stairs from one roof and enters a vacant house. He takes up quarters without asking any questions. It turns out that the home rightfully belongs to the heroine but her step-mother has intervened and influenced the girl's father to give everything to her. The old man has died and a will is discovered in a dressing gown which awards the daughter all his property. So she promptly takes possession of the home and the artist at the same time. The picture is filled with intimate touches which carry sufficient humor. The roof episodes fairly sparkle with comedy and sentiment. It is a well written story, capably directed, and acted right up to the handle by a cast that includes Lila Lee and Lillian Leighton.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Wallace Reid's new Paramount picture, "Rent Free," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— features the popular star in the role of an artist. The hero is the son of a lawyer who wants him to follow the law as a profession. But the youth prefers to live in a dingy studio in poverty for the sake of an artistic career. Through his inability to pay the rent he is finally ousted out on the roof by the irate landlady. He journeys over the roofs and finally "squats" in a fine home, and the owner being away, takes possession of a room as his quarters.

He meets Barbara, the girl, who is also a roof dweller and it later develops that she is the daughter of the man who owned the fine home, but who had died and left nothing, because of the wicked influence of her step-mother. The artist, however, finds a new will in a dressing gown formerly used by the deceased father, which awards the daughter all his property and all ends happily after many complications. The picture is filled with lively touches and is adequately played by a cast that includes Lila Lee, Henry Barrows, Lillian Leighton and others.

PROGRAM READER

It is pretty hard to find rent free with the price of homes and apartments nowadays. You have to pay exorbitant rentals to live in these times. But when you come to the ———— theatre next ———— you will discover how Wallace Reid gets away with it. He lives on the roof for a time, but eventually moves beneath and finds shelter without having to pay a nickel. He will make you feel like trying the same thing—that is if you think the janitor won't catch you. Come and see the popular star in his latest picture entitled "Rent Free," a story of an artist—who whistled and hummed and talked to his dog—who painted and helped young women in distress—who never cared where his next meal was coming from or when. He found love and he found a free home. See "Rent Free."

SUGGESTIONS

This picture is quite a departure for Wallace Reid. It carries him away from his automobile romances. You might feature some snappy exploitation telling that Wallace Reid has solved the rent question—or the high cost of living. A snappy campaign in this direction would put this over. Yet Reid is so popular that he is always in demand. So you can feature his name in the incandescents or the local papers and the house is sold out as long as you play the feature. Describe the picture as a novel comedy-romance—that is excellently acted and staged. Mention that Reid shows further evidence that he is one of the best light comedians upon the stage. A prologue is suggested from the roof episodes.

"MY BOY"
(First National)

Jackie Coogan Best Bet in Heart Interest Story

A CORRECT appraisal of "My Boy" presents difficulties. A great deal depends on how solid the young Mr. Coogan has been sold with the fans, how far the "cute kid" stuff will carry him and whether or not people expect him to live up to the reputation he established in "The Kid."

Two things are apparent in connection with the picture. Without Jackie the offering would be classed as a program release and in it he is not the infant prodigy who grabbed honors from even the great Chaplin, but a stage trained child acting too much of the time.

All of which may appear to be a paradox and which may have little to do with the success of the feature with audiences.

It would seem that the producers have erred in the matter of developing this second starring vehicle for Jackie. They have selected a slender and somewhat obvious story, reminiscent of "The Kid," concerning a waif who wishes himself on an old sea captain, with a rich grandmother waiting for the fifth reel before she claims him as "my boy" and then developed it from a heart interest angle. Jackie doesn't get the opportunity to be just a "kid." He is one of those goody-goody fictional little boys that never existed in real life and he is called upon to emote more than is good for either the boy or the picture. There is little comedy presented and nothing particularly distinctive about the production.

Besides Jackie's role, that of the waif, there is only one other part of importance in the production. This, an old sea captain, is played by Claude Gillingwater introduced to film fans in "Little Lord Fauntleroy." Mr. Gillingwater is excellent in the role.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Jackie Coogan, who has endeared himself to the picture public through his appealing qualities—who has demonstrated that he is one of the most accomplished actors of the juvenile world upon the screen—Jackie Coogan comes to the ———— theatre next ———— as a star in "My Boy," a picture calculated to impress everyone with its note of heart interest, its appealing elements of pathos, humor and humanity. Jackie Coogan made a memorable impression in the Chaplin picture, "The Kid." The mute, dumb pathos he registered so excellently there has made him a star. And in "My Boy," he has a fitting vehicle for the display of his gifted talent.

It is a story which is certain to find a responsive chord in the hearts of everyone who has not forgotten their own youth. It will strike the popular fancy of the young juveniles of the land. Jackie Coogan plays his part with creditable humor and humanity. It is an inspired performance. Prominent in his support art Claude Gillingwater, the actor who created such a favorable impression in the Mary Pickford picture, "Little Lord Fauntleroy," and Mathilda Brundage, an actress gifted for the expression of character roles. The offering is well staged—there being an assortment of proper settings. Victor Heerman and Albert Austin directed.

PROGRAM READER

Jackie Coogan is everybody's boy. He is the most beloved youngster on the screen. And when you see him in "My Boy" you will take him to your hearts. You cannot help it. His appeal is irresistible. Ever since he flashed his precocious talent in the Chaplin picture "The Kid," the public has been eager to see him. So Jackie Coogan with his lovable personality—his juvenile appeal will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. You will see a picture which is marked for its tug at the heart. There is a big slice of sentiment, plenty of heart interest, a note of humor and a wealth of humanity. The little star is supported by a couple of players noted for their exceptional character work. Claude Gillingwater and Mathilda Brundage lend perfect portrayals in their support. Remember next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a Jackie Coogan picture which should be exploited for the little star's personality. Feature the fact that he is a good deal responsible for making Chaplin's picture, "The Kid," so impressive. Feature that he is the most gifted youngster on stage or screen. You might be able to feature some talented juveniles in your own theatre—who might be garbed in Jackie's identical costume. They will be able to appear at certain hours—with permission of the Juvenile Societies. A prologue can be worked out that will make your audience delighted. You can feature these youngsters in song or in dances or in imitations of Chaplin and the Coogan boy. Feature the picture as a human or heart interest story, packed with appealing qualities. A street urchin can be exploited for effective publicity. This boy can be made up to resemble Coogan.

CATCH LINES

Cinderella Theme and Local Color Offer Adequate Entertainment in Gladys Walton's Latest

GLADYS WALTON has been batting nearly 1,000 with her pictures of late. It is only natural that the law of averages should be obeyed. A "Pink Tights," or a "Short Skirts" or "High Heels" doesn't come along everyday. "The Guttersnipe," the piquant star's latest expression is not so strong in story interest, nor does it carry the characteristic touches of its forerunners. However, it does give the actress an opportunity to become Cinderella for the time being—an Irish Cinderella—and revel in incident rich in local color. The offering is quite episodic—there being little plot material. But it does charm and entertain after a fashion. And the star's following will doubtless become quite enraptured with it.

The author has written a story within a story. He has paraphrased the type of material found in one of the popular, but trashy magazines. He has poked good-natured fun at the idea and has taken it so lightly that the spectator is disarmed in pointing out any shortcomings of the offering. The locale is the Irish "ghetto"—with the heroine a true daughter of the "ould sod." Her father is a pugnacious type—a foreman in a plant. Naturally she inherits his pugilistic tendencies and uses her fists to good advantage. A soda clerk, masquerading in a rented dress suit, is a target for over-ripe tomatoes. He puts up a good fight and the heroine takes a hand or two in his defense. Thus the romance is on its way. The girl purchases a magazine and reads the type of story made famous by Bertha M. Clay or Mrs. Southworth and proceeds to live the character and identify the hero as Lord Lytton. She is a dairy-maid who enters his service. And inserts present her in a baronial mansion having the time of her life.

One can appreciate that this is merely incidental to the real theme. The hero has occasion to express his love on park benches, and the devoted sweethearts read chapters from the mushy magazine. It is all good-natured fun—this picture. It does not pretend to be anything exceptional in story or characterization. It carries the earmarks of being written expressly for the star. The denouement brings a touch of melodrama showing the heroine capturing a band of counterfeiters—which reward enables her to take her young husband on an expensive honeymoon. The local color, the atmosphere and first-rate incident—coupled with the spirited acting of the star and a cast that has been chosen for its adaptability—these are sufficient to make it adequate entertainment.—Length 5 Reels. –Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

An attractive little story of an Irish Cinderella, whose capacity for taking care of herself enabled her to win respect in her squalid neighborhood is "The Guttersnipe," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with pretty Gladys Walton as the star. In this story the heroine is represented as the daughter of a fighting father. She has occasion to aid a youth who is oppressed by the bullies of the neighborhood—because he had the courage to wear evening clothes. And so eager does she respond to the desire to help a being in distress—that the incident is enough to cement a lasting friendship that eventually culminates in marriage.

The girl is a fanciful creature who finds romance and imagination through reading colorful stories of English aristocracy in trashy magazines. She even invites the youth to read them. And together they find romance in their humble station of life. When she is successful in winning a reward for capturing a band of counterfeiters the happy couple are able to lift themselves from their environment. Miss Walton is supported by a clever company—that has been chosen for its adaptability as well as talent. The picture sparkles with local color and adequate incident.

PROGRAM READER

She lived in a squalid environment. She never had a chance to lift herself out of her station in life. Perhaps she was satisfied. Who knows? She came from fighting stock. Why not—when it is seen that her father was a pugnacious Irishman. The girl rebelled at seeing a group of bullies giving battle to a stranger. She came to his aid. And she found the lovelight in his eyes. Together they read romantic stories. He was a soda clerk, but he found time when work was over to pay his devotion. Then when she won a reward for capturing a band of criminals—well—they found happiness. See "The Guttersnipe," an appealing story of an Irish colleen who lived in the Irish "ghetto" of New York. Here next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

Gladys Walton has been having phenomenal success with her features of late. You can mention that she has endeared herself to her fans with the type of product featuring her name. Play up her past successes and mention that her newest picture gives her ample opportunity to flash her individual talent. Tell that she is quite adept at playing the role given her here. Feature the story as a sentimental and romantic sketch of an Irish lass who lifted herself out of her environment through her ability to fight for herself. Feature that it contains plenty of local color. You can stage an effective prologue. And the Walton pictures demand good treatment in this direction. The orchestra can feature Irish airs.

"LOVE, HATE AND A WOMAN"
(Arrow)

Unconvincing Melodrama—Weak Story—Good Cast

"LOVE, HATE AND A WOMAN," a story of the present, but modern only in a few respects of New York and nearby fashionable resort locale, is based upon a plot that aims at "twists," but misses fire. The staging is not up to standard, nor the direction particularly good. Photography, much above the average. Star is not at all fitted to the role, except in that it provides an opportunity for her to wear expensive clothes to advantage, with the result that it is not a picture one would recommend heartily as a superior attraction. Supporting cast, at disadvantage, seem inclined to over-act.

It has to do with a love affair, born of flirtation which runs along smoothly until a trouble-making woman, intent upon commanding the attentions of the young artist involved, and at the same time to excite her husband's jealousy, puts in an appearance. The first episode, therefore, has to do with love. It is not presented in any new fashion, nor with any particular angle, just a regular summer flirtation ending in matrimonial preparation.

The second episode, having to do with hate, enters because of the sister of the girl, in love with an artist, mistakes an identity, upon circumstantial evidence. She believes the man who ruined her dying sister, is the same as her lover of the weeks just passed, and intent upon revenge, looks for trouble and finds it.

The third episode, it would appear, is one attempting to indicate that through love or hate, a woman is a woman, and though hopeless as a case may seem, she wants in her heart to believe the man of her choice, innocent of a past.

This production bears evidence of having cost a great deal of money, having many expensive "interiors," and giving the ladies every chance to look their best. Length, 5 reels.—Lillian R. Gale.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Love, Hate and a Woman," starring the emotional actress, Grace Davison, who is supported by Ralph Kellard, Robert Frazer, Lila Peck and Julia Swayne Gordon, will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. This society drama of present day life is artistically staged and acted with genuine persuasion by a distinguished cast. The picture is full of surprises, suspense, thrills and excitement. It treats of artistic and fashionable life and has a heart interest story.

Miss Davison does the best work of her artistic career in the part of Daryl Sutherland, the young girl who has many striking adventures in society and artistic life before she finds happiness in a congenial marriage. There are such dramatic elements as jealousy—there are cross purposes—there are misunderstandings—there are suspense, thrills, excitement and action aplenty in this offering—a dramatic triumph. It is a strong story which is certain to find response everywhere.

PROGRAM READER

"Love, Hate and a Woman" entered the Garden of Eden thousands of years ago. They are still here. Go see them in the production at the ———— theatre next ————. There is much fascination in this pleasant offering. It is a picture unusually rich in atmosphere and romance. You will see the talented actress Grace Davison experiencing many adventures before she finds love and happiness. The picture has been pronounced by critics who have already reviewed it to be one of the finest stories in which the attractive star has appeared. Certainly it is well staged and acted by a competent cast that includes Ralph Kellerd and Julia Swayne Gordon.

SUGGESTIONS

For the purpose of exploiting "Love, Hate and a Woman," a number of suggestions are given here, which the enterprising exhibitor is strongly urged to adopt. This particular picture readily admits of a variety of exploitation methods—the star, the story, the artistic atmosphere of the production supplying the opportunity of playing upon the liking of the public for surprise, novelty and sensation. You can stage a prologue representing an artist's studio with some pretty model appearing in some pose before an artist at an easel. Also you have the star who is recognized as a talented actress of emotional qualities. Then Ralph Kellerd, the leading man is well known. So play him up. The title is also suggestive of plenty of ideas.

CATCH LINES

Pursuant to orders from the municipal authorities, managements of local theatres at Amarillo, Texas, moved all sign boards from the streets in the business section of the city last week.

The management of the theatres were notified by the city officials of the existence of an ordinance prohibiting the placing of sign boards on sidewalks and streets and the tacking of cards and handbills upon telephone and telegraph poles and were requested to remove them immediately. The ordinance in the future will be enforced against all persons and concerns following these methods of advertising. The ordinance, however, does not apply to signs and billboards located upon private property.

The R. D. Lewis Film Company at Dallas, Texas, has adopted a new policy as follows: All of the Lewis road men have been called in and the sales force reorganized on entirely different lines; the heavy expense of maintaining salesmen on the road will be eliminated; the exhibitors' business will be solicited exclusively through the mails and tradepapers advertising "economy, efficiency and service."

The Junior Chamber of Commerce at Tulsa, Okla., during the Harvest Festival just closed there, issued invitations to many people to come to Tulsa and to meet the noted screen star, Theda Bara. Much interest was created when Miss Bara arrivad in Tulsa as one of the three foremost attractions of the celebration.

The Enterprise Distributing Corporation at Dallas, Texas, announces that the Dallas office has secured the distribution rights that were formerly handled by the First National Exhibitors Circuit of Texas. These, it is stated, include a large number of state-right productions, Arrow comedies and features, including Curwood, Bible Stories and a number of western and outdoor pictures.

Harry Peebles will function as sales manager and L. C. Baxley as salesman for the Specialty Film Company, at Dallas, Texas, in the future. Both men are well known to the film trade of Oklahoma and Texas.

A. E. Fair, formerly president of Enterprise Distributing Corporation, succeeds Herschel Stuart as director of theatres for Southern Enterprises, Inc., with headquarters at Dallas, Texas. Mr. Stuart will have charge of the Palace theatre at Dallas until January 1, 1922, when he goes to New York with Wid Gunning, Inc.

SAN DIEGO

The Colonial theatre, the latest to join the list of local motion picture houses opened its door on Thursday evening, December 15, presenting as its first offering "Molly O," featuring Mabel Normand. The initial program included addresses by Austin Adams, a local playwright, who has written several things for Nazimova, and Mayor John L. Bacon. The symphony orchestra gave as an overture "The Colonial Song," composed by H. H. Homer, the managing director of the house. The Colonial has about 1,200 seats. Its equipment includes Proctor automatic projection machines and crystal bead screen.

Manager R. E. Hicks of the Cabrillo found the demand for seats so great for the showing of "The Sheik" that he held it over for a second week. As a special feature he presented Senor Estaban R. Grajeda, a cornetist of high ability.

Local film fans have had an opportunity to see some of their favorites in person recently, Juanita Hansen appearing on the bill at the Savoy (Pantages), a vaudeville house; Betty Ross Clarke appearing in the cast in "Nobody's Money" at the Strand, where stock is playing; while at the Broadway "Ranger Bill" Miller and Willie May Carson were presented in a vaudeville acts, as well as on the screen, in "The Fighting Ranger."

Manager Russell Rogers, who has charge of the three Whitson houses here, the Plaze, the California and the Kinema, is doing heavy display advertising in his announcements, one of his recent toplines reading "Three Local Theatres Have Corner on Big Stars This Week." The Plaza was offering Ethel Clayton and Theodore Roberts in "Sham;" the California was showing "Never Weaken," featuring Harold Lloyd, and "Hands Off," with Tom Mix; while at the Kinema was appearing "The Affairs of Anatol," with its all-star cast.

William Pearson was arrested in Chicago on the charge of being connected with the Buffalo exchange film thefts of several weeks ago. T. Shima has been arrested in Seattle; R. Kubley, in Honolulu; and Morris Taitus is now in the Erie county jail. All are alleged to be members of an international gang of film thieves. Over $40,000 worth of films were stolen recently from the United Artists, Educational and Nu-Art offices in Buffalo.

Moe Mark of the Mark-Strand inteersts was in Buffalo last week. It is reported that he has become interested with Walter Hays and Eugene Falk in the Buffalo Criterion, which Mr. Hays recently purchased from the Famous Players-Lasky Company and which will be used by I. H. Herk and Max Spiegel for burlesque purposes.

Charles H. Tarbox, former manager of the Chautauqua Institute motion picture department, has organized Film Classics, Inc., with headquarters in Fredonia, N. Y. One of Mr. Tarbox's features is "Silas Marner," which Manager Howard J. Smith of the Palace, Buffalo, presented last week.

The Buffalo First National exchange, 213 Franklin street, will move into its new headquarters in the building being erected in North Pearl street on March 1, at which time R-C Pictures will also enter the structure. Both companies must vacate on that date, as thier present building has been purchased by the Buffalo Oyster Company.

MINNEAPOLIS

H. M. Wyatt has been appointed manager of the Minneapolis Aschmann exchanges to succeed H. C. Holah who has been transferred to take charge of bookings for the Dempsey-Carpentier fight pictures in St. Louis and Chicago. Mr. Holah will make his headquarters in Chicago. Mr. Wyatt has been connected with the Aschmann office since its opening here.

Because of the large Scandinavian population in the Northwest, Minneapolis is to be made the distributing point for films produced in Sweden by the Swedish Biograph Company of Stockholm. Joseph E. Lee, a representative of the company, is in Minneapolis now perfecting plans for the organization and has opened temporary offices at the Radisson Hotel. According to Mr. Lee, the company is considering leasing a Minneapolis theatre in which to show the Swedish first run pictures. The Swedish films are to be shipped to Minneapolis for editing and final preparation.

G. E. Holcomb, former First National salesman, has joined the Associated Exhibitors' sales staff, according to Manager F. O. Peters. His entry into the film business was in 1918 when he served as salesman for Vitagraph. A year ago he went to First National.

Manager Tom Burke of Midland Films has announced the acquisition to his sales force of J. C. Wolfe who is to handle the northern Wisconsin and upper Michigan peninsula territory. Mr. Wolfe was formerly with Friedman Film Corporation.

Frederic Strief has succeeded Maurice Schweitzer as manager of the local Famous Players-Lasky exchange.

J. F. Cubberly, local manager for Associated First National celebrated his birthday the past week with a party at the West Hotel attended by thirty-three great and near-great men recruited from local film circles. The party was said to be the most brilliant ever held in Minneapolis.

CANADA

Announcement is made of the organization of the Empire Film and Press Educational Association with headquarters in Montreal, Quebec. The association has been registered as a chartered company under the laws of the Province of Quebec with Lieut. Milton F. Gregg, V.C., M.C., as president; and Capt. Charles R. Smith as vice-president.

Intimation that the Manitoba Provincial Government would abolish the privilege of exempting charity, church and patriotic organizations from payment of amusement tax on tickets for performances held under their auspices was made by Hon. Edward Brown of Winnipeg, Provincial Treasurer, to a deputation representing the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Manitoba which waited upon him a few days ago to secure information concerning proposed amendments to the Amusement Tax Act for Manitoba for 1922. Mr. Brown declared that the exemption privilege, which had worked to the disadvantage of the regular theatres, had been abused by the organizations.

Hon. Mr. Brown also announced that the Government would revise the scale of taxes for theatre admission tickets, a straight 10 per cent tax to be provided.

The important announcement was also made that the Government would do away with the rolls of tax tickets in the future. The special tickets had proved to be expensive and inconvenient for both exhibitors and theatre patrons as well as for the Government.

In order to provide an object lesson in naval warfare, the staff and employes of the Department of Naval Service, Ottawa, the Canadian capital, were granted a half-holiday on December 15 to attend a performance at Allen's Regent theatre, Ottawa, the feature of which was the British production, "The Battle of Jutland." Arrangements for the half-holiday were made by J. O. B. LeBlanc, a director of the Department.

INDIANAPOLIS

"The Sheik" has proven one of the best continuous drawing attractions ever presented in Indianapolis. Patrons stood as late as 10 o'clock every night awaiting admission. The picture probably got more "word-of-mouth" advertising than anything ever presented in a local theatre.

D. A. Coulter, publicity representative of the Ohio, talked on photoplay theatre advertising at the luncheon of the Indianapolis Advertising Club last week.

Managing Director Ralph Lieber of the Circle is working night and day to do one of the hard things of filmdom—put over two big smashes in succession. The Circle has booked Jackie Coogan's "My Boy" for Christmas week and "Molly O" for New Year's week. The Christmas week program will be augmented with a Christmas Pageant staged by the Circle chorus and the Circle corps de ballet. The weight of the Christmas week offering is being depended upon in a large measure to carry itself over, although considerable newspaper exploitation is planned and already in use. Mr. Lieber, however, hopes to make "Molly O" one of the biggest successes Indianapolis has known and if expenditure of money and effort on exploitation count for anything he is on the right road.

Are You One of the Very Few Exhibitors Who Still Persist in Thinking They Can Get Along Without the News Reel?

DO YOU KNOW that some of the biggest exhibitors in the country give the news reels credit for fifty percent of the drawing power of their program?

IN PROOF OF THESE FACTS we tell you that International News' sales have jumped in leaps and bounds in the last year and new contracts are coming in daily.

There are still a few isolated cases where exhibitors are not playing this news reel and where perhaps their patrons have not yet made a demand for it. But it will come—the germ of picture news desire is in the air, it is sweeping the entire country, and there isn't a chance that any community will escape.

DON'T let the feeling get a foothold in the minds of your people that you are depriving them of something they ought to have. "THE LITTLE MINISTER"
(Vitagraph)

Excellent Production Made From Barrie's Classic

JAMES M. BARRIE'S celebrated story (not the play) has been made into a feature production by Vitagraph, and it behooves every exhibitor to book it because of its excellent qualities. Some of those who have been showmen over a score of years will doubtless remember the three-reeler which Vitagraph made from the same story. With the advance in technical equipment—with an advance in the art of translating a story for the screen, the producers have done extremely well by this charming document which is entitled to classical honors. The lovable figure of Lady Babbie, the quaint character of Gavin Dishart, the little minister, and the picturesque natives of Thrums—these are all given life and color here.

Not even the stickler for truths will be able to find any flaw in this production. From a technical viewpoint, the offering is richly decorated. The thatched cottages, the simple interiors, the charming backgrounds—these are all caught. You become an actual participant in this fragrant story of old-world sentiment and romance. You follow the adventure of Gavin with the deepest interest, even though you have been made familiar with the plot through the story or play. It carries the deepest sort of heart interest. There is sympathy for nearly every character. And when the soldiers surround the little village in order to compel the simple weavers to obey the laws of the country, you are stimulated with desire to be with them and help them in some way. The minister tells the natives to find a way to peace. But they rebel because of the insistent demands of the "gypsy girl," Babbie, who eventually proves to be the ward of a neighborly baron.

There is rich incident offered when Gavin upbraids the wicked Rob Dow during chorch services. And you almost catch the spiritual inspiration as the young preacher finds a champion in his tormentor. The story revolves around this little circular town of Thrums. The walls are penetrated and you see a simple folk, deeply religious and eager to live their lives in their own way. It is a charming moment when Lady Babbie runs to the home of Nannie to discover whether her beloved is dead. She is betrothed to her guardian, but she willingly elopes with the minister, and they are married according to gypsy [illegible] being a gypsy camp nearby. Story by J. M. Barrie. Scenario by C. Graham Baker. Directed by David Smith. Photographed by Steven Smith.

The Vitagraph version of J. M. Barrie's quaint story, "The Little Minister," has James Morrison in the title role and Alice Calhoon as the Lady Babbie. The scenario was prepared by C. Graham Baker, who has followed the original story very closely and woven the choicest incidents into the photo-play. It is a picture of rare charm, carefully produced and thoughtfully acted.

When we first heard rumors of "The Little Minister" being brought to the screen again, we hoped that some one would have the good sense to cast James Morrison in the title role. It was left for Vitagraph to realize that he fits into the part perfectly. He has the Little Minister's stature, his sincerity and his boyishly emotional moods. He is so good we feel like shouting "We told you so!" Alice Calhoun does nicely, too, with the role of Babbie, although she lacks her roguishness and spontaneity. She is best when the necessities of the role allow her to subside and be a meek bit sad.

William McCall makes a splendid Rob Dow. He is burly, exacting and a little simple. The part of Nanny is touchingly played by Dorothea Wolbert, while Lord Rintoul, Tammas Whamond and all the other delightful characters appear in verse and look and act their parts. A word must be said for little Richard Daniels, who is seen as Micah Dow. He is a freckle-faced, snub-nosed youngster who has a world of expression in his funny little face, and he is charming every moment he is in evidence.

The whimsical Scotch story is too well known to be repeated at length. Almost every one knows the tale of the Little Minister, who forgets his dignity, his church and his responsibilities when he falls in love with the saucy Egyptian girl who turns out to be the famous Lord Rintoul's ward. It is a delightful story, full of quaint characters, quaint humor and sweet romance. It is the sort of story one can read over and over again without growing tired.

The settings are picturesque and the costumes tight, uncomfortable looking and amusing, but quite in line with the times. The picture should prove a popular attraction, for the story is worth while and the picture well made.

ALICE CALHOUN IN

THE LITTLE MINISTER
(VITAGRAPH)

This is a most delightful and interest holding picturization of James M. Barrie's famous story of the same name, presented with splendid acting, beautiful photography, and direction that will scarcely permit of improvement. Great audience picture. Directed by David Smith.

Alice Calhoun and Richard Daniels in "The Little Minister" (Vitagraph)

One of the best pictures yet produced in Vitagraph studios is "The Little Minister" with Alice Calhoun in the part of "Lady Babbie," one of the most lovable characters made known to us by the facile pen of James M. Barrie. And if the charming Miss Calhoun gives us nothing more than her "Lady Babbie" she has set a high mark for her older and more experienced screen sisters to aim at. It is undoubtedly the best work yet done by this popular young screen star, and augurs well for her future.

The entire picture is most pleasing. Barrie's famous story has been most closely adhered to in the writing of the script, and to David Smith should go great credit for his able direction. The story is woven for the most part about the humble life of the poor weavers in the little Scottish village of Thrums.

The atmosphere of the little hamlet has been maintained throughout. The quaint houses with their thatched rooves, the costuming of the characters, the Scotch mannerisms and customs portrayed on the screen promise to make this picturization one that will meet with nothing but approval from all those who enjoy clean, wholesome drama, free from the taint of the eternal triangle.

In spite of the simplicity of the Barrie story the picture has several big and tense sceues. The terrific rain storm at the gypsy camp, the wedding of "Lady Babbie" and Gavin Dishart in that same rain storm, and the river scene where the little minister rescues Lord Rintoul and Rob Dow loses his life, furnish some thrilling situations in which no opportunity for realism is lost.

The story is well cast with James Morrison as the little minister, Henry Hebert as Lord Rintoul, William McCall as Rob Dow, and Richard Daniels as his Micah Dow.

And in the latter Vitagraph has covered, or rather uncovered, a young prodigy who will well hear watching. The youngster has more freckles to the square inch than Wesley Barry ever thought of wearing, and he is a better actor. He is in several of the big scenes and portrays his important part with stage presence rare in a child. He apparently doesn't know that there is a camera within a thousand miles. His work is all business and he is a real actor, real in fact, that we can stand a lot more of little Richard Daniels.

All in all, "The Little Minister" is one of the most enjoyable screen entertainments of the season, and should prove to be a great audience picture.

SYNOPSIS

To the little Scotch village of Thrums comes the newly ordained minister, Gavin Dishart. Little Babbie, the gypsy girl, makes fun of him, but when the soldiers attack the town she is protected by him. To shield her from the soldiers he pretends she is his wife. This constitutes marriage in their country. Babbie is in reality Lady Babbie, betrothed of Lord Rintoul. The latter sets the date for their marriage, but Babbie runs away. In a terrific rain storm Lord Rintoul breaks a leg and is being carried away by the raging river. The Little Minister swims out to him and rescues him. He and Babbie confess their love and are married in the church.

Practically every essential of good photodrama is in The Little Minister. Vitagraph has selected a splendid cast, from the charming Alice Calhoun to tiny Richard Daniels.

All of the quaintness and peculiar charm of the little Scotch town of Thrums pervade the picture, and not only is this manifest in the settings and costuming, but even to the extras, there is evidence of careful picking of types.

Sir James M. Barrie's famous story has been screened with unwavering faith to the original theme and all the good fortunes that may befall an author's work picturized, have attended it. It stands out as unique in that its interest begins in the first two hundred feet and in this respect good direction and splendid editing are combined to make a motion picture that should have wide popularity.

There are thrills and there is heart interest. The love motive is delightful but never "gushy," and its climax is swift and pleasant.

The flight of "Lady Babbie" to her sweetheart, when the report comes to her that he has been killed is the beginning of a sequence in which one of the wettest rainstorms in motion picture history has been screened. There is nothing puny about this storm. The players are drenched in it, and throughout this deluge the strongest dramatic action of the story is revealed.

James Morrison is the "Little Minister." Few could so well characterize the very young dominie of the small Scotch hamlet as has Morrison. Not merely is he diminutive, but he registers the minister's gentle kindliness and [illegible] fearlessness incomparably well.

William McCall contributes a fin[illegible] in his part as "Rob Dow," and of [illegible] said he owns a better understandi[illegible] screen player than many grown ac[illegible] sciousness whatever. And whatev[illegible] he possesses already.

It is a mighty good picture.

"The Little Minister"
Vitagraph Offers Charming Production of Barrie's Famous Story, Starring Alice Calhoun

Reviewed by Mary [illegible]

Preserving much of the delightful Barrie sentiment, Vitagraph's version of "The Little Minister" will give pleasure to many who have enjoyed the story. The thousands of others, too, who have not read the book may find real entertainment in the film, as the pictured story has the appeal of the classic, the characteristics that will not only keep the old favorites but make many new ones. For the old reasons, it should succeed—it is clean and it is different.

The love story of Babbie and Gavin Dishart, interpreted with fine imagination by Alice Calhoun and James Morrison, is admirable for its purity and sincerity. The chevrons, and altogether lovable Babbie is a charming creature as played by Miss Calhoun. Possibly a stronger contrast between her standards and the environment of Gavin, the man of her and then falls in love with her, the man of grace and piety who first denounces Babbie son, however, drives home this important characterization with fervor. The old Scotch villagers are rare types. Here and there, a Barrie touch might have been added to accentuate their personal eccentricities, contributing to the comedy value of the whole.

A splendid effect at the close is the rain scene. The torrential deluge that follows immediately upon the Gypsy wedding ceremony and nearly succeeds in separating the lovers for all time, is a great melodramatic splash.

Every One a Box-Office Drawing Card

Five of the best-known players of the screen pre-determine the box office success of "White Hands"—the mighty drama of white heat passion, and the greatest story C. Gardner Sullivan ever wrote.

Thrilling fight scenes that make you edge up in your chair; a helpless woman in a squalid settlement among a band of heartless men; a villainous dive keeper; a red-blooded hero, and a toddling bit of human drift-wood to bring happiness to all.

Such a picture! And such a title for sure-fire exploitation. Man—you never had a better chance to start off the New Year with a picture that will pack 'em in and make 'em yell for more.

See it today! It's a clean-up!

The Reigning Beauty of the Screen

LUCY DORAINE in "THE LOVE SLAVE"

A tremendous drama of passion by Georges Ohnet, famous author of "The Iron Master."

A flower of the East transplanted to Paris—the ages-old clash of East and West—a mad, jealous passion that would destroy one once beloved—then prison walls that close in on another form of slavery.

A thrilling escape from a living death—freedom and peace—the re-kindling of dead fires—and a climax so powerful—so satisfying—that it brings a profound sigh of relief.

Actually filmed in the Orient—as a production "THE LOVE SLAVE" is greater than "The Sheik"—with all the lure of the East popularized by "One Arabian Night."

Mystery melodrama teeming with suspense. If they like substantial melodrama, enjoy being mystified, let "Fifty Candles" light your theatre entrance in incandescents; it is bound to ignite favorable comment.
—MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

This is an intensely interesting murder mystery, with sufficient exploitation angles to make it a fine box-office attraction. The suspense is well sustained throughout. If full advantage is taken of the many exploitation angles it can be put over big.

Class A. "Fifty Candles" is an exceptionally interesting mystery story. The story itself, quite out of the ordinary, is full of interesting incidents and well knit. This is an excellent program feature for any theatre.

If I were an exhibitor I certainly should want a copy of the Motion Picture News Booking Guide on my desk within easy reach, for like the telephone I believe the Guide will serve its purpose better than anything else I have seen. Received your Booking Guide and I believe it will be a great help to the exhibitor in bringing to his attention the great library of motion pictures that have been released by all the distributing companies. I cannot state, without a more careful examination, the actual thoroughness of this searching but the idea seems to me to be extremely worth while.

I have just received a copy of the new "Booking Guide" and it is to my mind one of the best propositions for helping the small exhibitor to arrange his play dates that has yet been issued.

Good pictures are often forgotten by the smaller exhibitor and because there has been no handy volume available for him, he booked mediocre productions offered him by some salesman visiting his office when much better product was quickly available.

My personal opinion is that your "Booking Guide" is a distinct asset to the business and in keeping with the progressive policies of the Motion Picture News in helping the business generally.

"The best film we have seen this year, and for that matter it might hold the lead in our enthusiasm for the other 364 days, because this is the almost perfect picture. The excitement is whipped to a pace which makes the spectator hang on to the handrails. We thrilled with relief and satisfaction. Barthelmess is an altogether eloquent and convincing hero. The atmosphere is real."—Heywood Broun in the New York World.

IT HAS VITALITY AND IT LIVES

"Persuasive and cumulatively exciting photoplay. It seems real. Its scenes get you. It has vitality. It lives as a motion picture. Mr. Barthelmess does the best work of his screen life, it is more finished and promising. The others of the cast are more than adequate. The story really happens to you while you are watching it."—New York Times.

MOST THRILLING FIGHT EVER!

"A regular riot of a fight without rules. Such a battle was screened at the Strand,—what I like better than anything in the realm of film. Ah, but that was a fight to set a standard of realism for many a month. Richard Barthelmess handled his role admirably."—Joseph Mulvaney in the New York American.

FAIRLY TEARS HEART IN TWO

"'Tol'able David' is more than tol'able. He is great. It is one of the really fine pictures of the year. It is more real than any picture we have ever seen. Barthelmess does the best work of his career. It is one of the most complete and sensitive character studies that have come to the screen. A thoroughly interesting and exciting tale—out of the ordinary. Action aplenty with a pathos and strength that fairly tear your heart in two. A superb bit of direction, coupled with excellent acting. The entire picture is uniformly superior, a picture with character, beauty and feeling. You can't afford to miss it."—Helen Rockwell in New York Morning Telegraph.

Motion Picture News

Will H. Hays

THE happiest augury we can conceive of for this industry in 1922 is the fact, definite we understand, that Will H. Hays is to head the new Association of producers and distributors.

We earnestly believe that none of the exceptionally prominent men considered by the Association, in fact no other individual in this broad land, is so thoroughly fitted for the unusual demands of this unusual position.

Unusual? Yes. Potentially so; and Mr. Hays is just the man to see the bigness of the job and grapple it with two fearless, experienced, swift moving and able fists.

The motion picture today, over and beyond its commercial and amusement elements—important as these are—is the greatest force, ever known, in the moulding of public opinion.

That is its overshadowing greatness. It is not merely a theatrical business. That is the fact that every producer, distributor and exhibitor must realize. That's the eternal truth!

* * *

Today the picture is in a strangle-hold with public opinion.

Not with public opinion directly, but with those who believe it is their duty to safeguard public opinion.

We mean the professional reformer—and we apologize to those whom we must also include, namely the church, its Ministerial Associations and other agencies; the school, women's clubs, civic organizations, Mother and Parent, Teachers' organizations, etc., etc.

Not all of these institutions—not all by a long shot—are seeking, with unheard of restrictions, to throttle the pictures' usefulness to Society. But it is safe to say that between the picture and its industry on the one hand, and on the other the religious and social forces of the land there exists the strangest and most unfortunate misunderstanding ever heard of.

It is almost entirely our own fault.

We are human and we have made the mistakes that result everywhere from human greed and vanity. But as an industrial group we are just as well meaning and as citizens we are just as decent as any other group of men in the world.

That is not the point.

The point is that we have always given forth a steady flood of bad publicity about ourselves and very little good publicity.

We have lied about ourselves, misrepresented ourselves. That's bad enough. But we have never made a move to defend ourselves against the lies thrown at us, inspired as they have been by malice, self-seeking or just the wild suspicions our own lies created.

We have never made one, united, constructive move to set the industry right in the public mind.

* * *

Is the public with us today?

I doubt it; assuredly it won't be if we permit many of the finest social agencies in this country to misunderstand us any longer.

Mr. Hays—and we speak from the unanimous opinion of those who know him—is dynamic and fearless. He is idealistic. He is an organizer. He is human and therefore liberal and diplomatic.

He will, we believe, shake a lot of youthful silliness and selfishness out of this industry; and he will plead our just cause before the bar and jury of public opinion.

He will work with the Exhibitor organization, and the Exhibitor organization will work with him.

We congratulate the new Association for the finest and most intelligent move this industry has ever made. And we are inclined to congratulate Mr. Hays. There are few bigger jobs to be done for this country and its public. It's a hard job but a fine one—for an idealist.

* * *

Lest Mr. Hays think we overestimate the situation confronting the picture today we give extracts here from a letter just received from an exhibitor who knows the theatre and the public about as well as any man in this industry. He is the kind of man Mr. Hays ought to meet at once. He would tell Mr. Hays practically what he tells here:

"It fell to my lot to handle much of the fight against Censorship and Sunday closing in ——— (an inland City) last fall. From this experience I realize how absolutely right you are in your editorial in the issue dated December 24th.

"It's just the simple truth that we need publicity as defined by you, and need it in large and steady doses. We are out of touch with people, we are being lied about outrageously, and we are yet doing considerable lying to our own detriment.

"At a public hearing I heard two men—one a minister—speak against pictures. One stated that in all the history of this country there had never developed a greater evil than pictures as are now being shown! The minister, with the tremelo stop wide open, said that he was a friend of pictures, probably a better friend than the men who operated the theatres, yet if he were given his choice between the saloon at its worst and pictures as are being shown today, he would welcome the saloon.

"Of course it's cheap bunk, so badly used that it could not affect even a committee of politicians. But the truth is that both these statements were actually applauded by a gallery. And when even a hand-picked gallery will applaud that sort of stuff, something is wrong—damnably wrong, if swearing is permitted. The reformer in this case overplayed his hand and was licked largely as a consequence—but that's not the question.

"We also ran into about this: 'You say the National Board of Review is good. It's located in New York, and presumably known there. But New York now has state censorship. May be they DO know the National Board of Review.' We are trying to cure that by sending speakers from the Board through the South explaining the Board's actual workings, but I understand that we are getting mighty little support from other exhibitors and distributors. Publicity is needed here."

* * *

The situation this exhibitor so clearly points out prevails to a more or less degree—generally more—in every city and section of this country. The galleries may be packed everywhere, but there's hardly one, anywhere, that would not give some applause to such a radical utterance as the above.

And as an indication of how ridiculously the picture is maligned and of the character of our opposition we refer Mr. Hays to the letter of James A. Maddox of Columbus, Ohio, printed on page 500.

And yet in the face of all this the writer gives it as his honest opinion (1) that a judicious, honest campaign of constructive publicity will sweep the public tide in favor of the picture, and (2) that there isn't a locality in the United States where it isn't possible for the exhibitor and all of his local religious and social organizations to work hand in hand, sympathetically and successfully for all concerned.

Mr. Maddox and a lot of other exhibitors are doing it.

That wide gulf of misunderstanding has got to be bridged—that's all.

It takes a good engineer to build and maintain the bridge. But it can be done and it is being done.

Adjustment—Sign of the Times

Carl Laemmle's announcement, last week, that Universal will cut rental prices so that the exhibitor may, if possible, be protected against loss, has made considerable discussion within the trade. The problem is a several-sided one. Rental cost is one side, and a big one. But always there's the matter of exhibitor effort through exploitation. One exhibitor will make money where the other loses, all things being equal except that one exhibitor knows how to sell the picture and the other doesn't. Exploitation is the leaven of this business.

Just the same the announcement is bold and sincere. Rentals must be adjusted. They are being adjusted. But the readjustment process can't be too thoroughly—if always intelligently—done.

The exhibitor must be met half way these days; and a number of home offices in New York have got to forget old standards. The Universal announcement recognizes the inevitable fact that producer, distributor and exhibitor are business partners. The concern of one is the concern of the other.

It will clear the air to have more such trade frankness.

And another problem that needs more discussion is that of theatre admission prices. They, too, in many instances, have got to come down.

Saul Rogers Explains Stand Against Proposed 30% Ad Valorem Duty

Brief Filed with Senators Shows Dangers from Foreign Retaliation

As was reported in the January 7th issue of Motion Picture News, the Senate Finance Committee held a hearing in Washington on December 27th in connection with the proposed increased duties in the Fordney Tariff bill. At this hearing several speakers representing the theatrical and motion picture industries were heard, including Saul E. Rogers, chairman of the Tariff and Taxation Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, who argued against the proposed 30 per cent ad valorem duty on foreign-made motion-pictures imported into this country.

Mr. Rogers filed with the Senate Finance Committee a brief embodying his arguments against the proposed 30 per cent ad valorem duty. The seven principal reasons for his recommendation that the present specific duty be maintained and the proposed ad valorem duty be rejected were summarized in last week's account of the Senate hearing in Motion Picture News (Page 382). In the following are submitted the more important paragraphs of Mr. Rogers' brief not already included in the News' report of January 7th:

"If the 30 per cent tariff becomes law there is no doubt that the foreign nations will retaliate by imposing equally high or higher ad valorem duties against the American product, and they will be careful to base their tariff on American valuation in order to make the tariff yield as high as possible. Bearing in mind the fact that the American film producers have practically a monopoly in the motion pictures exhibited in foreign countries, a tariff barrier raised against the American product would mean the loss of millions of dollars to this industry. The American control of the foreign market with respect to motion picture films is approximately the following:

"Great Britain, approximately 85 per cent of the films exhibited; Australia, 90 per cent of the films exhibited; South America, 95 per cent of the films exhibited; Continental Europe, 85 per cent of the films exhibited, and the Far East, 80 per cent of the films exhibited.

"At present the American market affords us an opportunity to amortize the cost of production plus a small profit, and our foreign business is practically all profit. If we are confronted with a retaliatory tariff abroad this industry will be compelled, in order to enter the foreign market under favorable conditions to either organize producing companies abroad and carry on a material part of our production abroad as foreign companies, which would throw thousands of people out of employment in this country, or the other alternative would be for us to curtail the cost of production in this country very materially in order to obtain the amortization of production and a reasonable profit in this country, knowing that we will be compelled to speculate in the foreign market for a profit. In the latter event, curtailment of salaries and discharge of a considerable number of employees throughout the entire industry will be necessary and labor employed in this industry will naturally suffer. If material curtailment in the expense of production is necessitated by such a measure it will mean that the high standard at present maintained in American production will of necessity be lowered and the present superior standard of American production, recognized throughout the world, will immediately fall, and our foreign competitors will then be in a position to easily control the entire market and force American productions into a minor position. If, on the other hand, the standard is to be maintained and we are compelled to obtain amortization of production and a profit out of the American market, it can be readily realized that the American consumer would be compelled to pay a considerably higher price for American productions.

"The fear of retaliation by the foreign countries is well founded, as will appear from the mass of press clippings which have been gathered from foreign newspapers and foreign trade periodicals, which have been submitted to this committee.

"The imposition of an ad valorem duty, however high, will not keep the foreign product out of this country, nor will the present 30 per cent ad valorem duty equalize the difference in production cost between that of the foreign market and that of the American market. If the argument of the agitators for this tariff is to be believed, then it must be presumed that a motion picture production can be made abroad for approximately one-fifth or one-third of the cost of production in this country. If that be true, then it would take a tariff of between 300 per cent and 500 per cent ad valorem, based on the foreign market cost of production, to equalize it, and it would require a duty of 100 per cent ad valorem American valuation to likewise equalize it. A 30 per cent ad valorem duty would not act as a deterrent because, if a foreign concern produced a motion picture production with merit and with the possibility of fair earnings in this country, the matter of an ad valorem duty of 50 per cent or 60 per cent will not deter the foreign producer from introducing the film into this country. It will merely mean that the profit of the importer will be somewhat diminished, but eventually a fair and reasonable profit will be made. This is particularly true in view of the fact that he is not compelled to bring his entire product or entire production into this country. He merely causes the negative film to be imported, pay his duty thereon on the basis of a fair appraisement, and then causes as many positive prints to be made from this negative as he deems necessary in order to exploit it in this country.

"From the point of view of revenue the duty will not cause any appreciable yield to the Government. This can be readily comprehended from the fact that the negative only of the production is brought into this country. However, if the duty were levied on the basis of American valuation, the appraiser would of necessity be compelled to make a fair allocation of its value at the ratio which the total value in the entire world bears to the United States. Thus the duty levied would not be on the basis of the entire value of the production, but only on the fair value of the United States rights as compared with the rights in the rest of the world. In the past two years approximately 350 foreign productions have been imported, and of that number not quite a dozen were found suitable to be released and exhibited to the American public.

"It is a matter of common knowledge among reputable importers in this country that large quantities of foreign films are lying in the Custom House in New York unreclaimed because the importers will not even pay the two or three cents per linear foot specific duty to release these films, and that periodically sales are held at the Customs House of foreign films for non-payment of duties, and that these films so sold bring insignificant prices. It is also a matter of common knowledge that hundreds of foreign films are lying idle in the vaults of importers because they know that they are unfit for release in this country, and that these films are being sent to reclamation plants to obtain the little physical salvage that is in them in the way of scrap film, and the silver that can be reclaimed from the films.

"The motion picture industry at present is in a stagnant condition. A number of large companies have closed their studios. Others have suspended business, and some companies have gone into the hands of receivers. Production has been cut down to between 35 and 40 per cent of normal, and the industry requires assistance and acceleration and a world market in order to return to normal. A tariff at this time would be nothing short of a calamity because it would absolutely destroy our foreign market."

Lusk Denies Anti-Censor Bribe Offer

Sponsor of State Censorship Repudiates Charge of Rev. Miller; Stormy Scene in Senate

ALBANY, Jan. 4 (Special).—Motion picture censorship was injected in the New York State Senate within twenty minutes after the annual session had opened today. And it was injected in a startling way by Senator James J. Walker of New York City, who asked that Rev. O. R. Miller, of this city, editor of the Reform Bulletin, be excluded from the legislative chambers, and then asked Senator Clayton R. Lusk if the allegations made in the Bulletin to the effect that he had been offered a large sum of money by motion picture interests in the hopes of changing his attitude on censorship were true.

Coming like a bolt out of a clear sky, the whole thing proved a startling feature of the opening day of the legislature. There had not been the slightest intimation that motion picture matters would receive the slightest attention for some time to come. No sooner had the session started than Senator Walker, carrying with him a copy of the Reform Bulletin, started off by saying that Rev. Mr. Miller stood discredited in the Senate records, and was marked today as a liar and a bad sport. In fact, said Senator Walker, he had gone entirely out of his mind.

With a copy of the Bulletin before him, Senator Walker then read:

"The underworld elements of the state are making frantic efforts to drive Clayton R. Lusk out of public life. He introduced a moving picture censorship bill and pushed it through the Senate, notwithstanding all the tremendous influence and money of the movie men against it. Senator Lusk has been bitterly opposed by all the wet newspapers and the movie men. The movie men were unable to buy him, although they apparently bought everything else in sight. Undoubtedly Senator Lusk could have sold out to the movie men for $100,000, or more, not to have pushed this movie censorship bill through the Senate. He knew this as well as any one, but he was not for sale."

Turning to Senator Lusk, Mr. Walker wanted to know if there was any truth to the statement which Rev. O. R. Miller had editorially made. He said that if there was, that the New York State Senate should know the name of the man or the producers who offered the bribe.

To this Senator Lusk replied:

"No one ever offered me anything to influence my vote on censorship. I was never offered anything to conduct to myself in any way other than what I did. I do not know whether I could have got $100,000, or any other amount, for conducting myself other than as I did."

Senator Walker made a motion that the sergeant-at-arms remove Rev. O. R. Miller from the room. It was finally decided after much heated debate not to put the motion at this particular time.

Today is the first time that there has ever been even the slightest intimation that motion picture interests had through money attempted to influence legislation at Albany.

It is possible that Rev. Mr. Miller, who has long been against the motion picture industry in one form or another, may be summoned before the Lieutenant-Governor, presiding officer of the Senate, and asked to explain in no indefinite way just what prompted the editorial assertions that slurred the industry.—C. L. GRANT.

An Appreciation

"I am in receipt of the 'Motion Picture News Booking Guide' and let me say here it is a long-needed want of the exhibitor, and none can afford to be without it.

"More power to Motion Picture News for providing the exhibitor with an essential article that will mean dollars in his pocket."

Films Valued at $100,000 Stolen from Vault

Motion-picture films valued at $100,000, with a booking value estimated at $5,000,000, were stolen from the vault of the Metro Pictures Corporation branch office in Seattle late Wednesday night, December 28. The list of stolen films includes a complete copy of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and a complete copy of "The Conquering Power." The latter film has not been shown in the Northwest except in the city of Portland.

The robbery is believed to have been committed by members of the international gang of film thieves who recently operated in an extensive way in various parts of the country.

The robbery was discovered by A. Bloom, assistant manager of the Metro corporation in Seattle, when he opened the office Thursday morning. The glass in the front door had been smashed and by reaching through the opening the cracksmen had turned the lock on the inside.

An examination of the vaults showed that the combination had been worked by an expert. The safe was not damaged in any way. After careful investigation on the part of private detectives and Seattle police, it was announced no clue to the identity of the thieves had been discovered.

Urges Exhibitors Keep Daily Record of Admissions Whether Taxable or Not

IN a letter to Motion Picture News this week, Edward O. Fahner of the Columbia Printing Co., Chicago, asks that wider publicity be given the changes in the new Revenue Act affecting theatre admissions and suggests to exhibitors "that they continue to keep, as in the past, a very accurate daily record of all admissions sold and issued as required by Article 61 of these Regulations, whether such admissions require a tax or not." Mr. Fahner points out especially that Section 802 has been re-enacted without changes and that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has not yet issued any rulings which would change the requirements of Regulation 43 Relating to the Tax on Admissions.

"Section 800 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1921, effective January 1st, 1922, provides for a tax of one cent on each ten cents or fraction thereof on admissions, and eliminates the tax on free admissions, and also provides THAT NO TAX SHALL BE APPLIED ON ADMISSIONS TO ANY PLACE THE AMOUNT PAID FOR WHICH IS TEN CENTS OR LESS.

"Section 800 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1921, effective January 1st, 1922, adds to exempt organizations any post of the American Legion or women's auxiliary units thereof, entertainments given exclusively for the benefit of persons in the Military or Naval forces of the United States, and for the benefit of persons who have served in such forces and are in need; any city, town, village, or other municipality maintaining a co-operative or community motion picture theatre. Also exempts exhibits, entertainments, or other pay features conducted by agricultural associations, if the proceeds are used exclusively for the improvement, maintenance, and operation of the fair.

"Section 802 of the Revenue Act of 1918, pertaining to the collection and payment of tax on admissions and dues, is re-enacted by the Revenue Act of 1921 without change.

"JOHN C. CANNON,
"Collector."

"Inclosed please find my check for $2.50 to pay for one year's subscription to your NEWS and a copy of your Booking Guide. My subscription does not expire until next April and this pays me up to April, 1923.

Just a good word for your magazine. I was a green-horn about pictures when I went into this game last May, and I have found your magazine almost invaluable to me. I hardly see how I could get along without it.

Very truly yours,

Criticism? What Difference Does It Make?

Call It an Art or an Industry, Says Rupert Hughes, But Do Not Be Bullied

"CRITICS AND THE MOTION PICTURE" was the subject of a talk delivered by Rupert Hughes at a luncheon given by Samuel Goldwyn recently in New York. Mr. Hughes' answer to the critics is simply "What difference does it make?" His talks is reprinted in part below:

"The best definition of a gentleman that I have ever seen was Beerbohm Tree's statement that 'A gentleman is a man who doesn't care whether he is a gentleman or not.' And I think that this is true of a true artist, since he is so much interested in expressing what is in his heart that he doesn't care whether he is an artist or not.

"The moving picture should not be frightened or humiliated or bullied by those critics who say that the moving pictures are not an art. One fanatic recently wrote a ferocious attack in which he made the final announcement that the moving pictures are an industry and not an art, and that the censorship could do them no harm, as they had nothing important or artistic to deliver. Even if he had known the difference or had been qualified to decide just what an art is, what difference does it make whether you call moving pictures an art, an industry, an amusement, a merchandise? The main thing is that they fascinate almost everybody. Their first duty is to make their own rules, to be moving pictures, to be pictures and to move.

"What difference does it all make? There were plenty of people who said that Shakespeare was only a commercial manager who appealed to the lowbrow public. Three centuries from now a certain kind of critic will be roasting the life out of the moving picture producers of his time and referring to today as the golden age of motion pictures, when people devoted themselves to high art of principles and wrote the great successes of the screen.

"I think that the motion pictures are doing marvellous things; that there are great geniuses at work producing, writing and acting magnificent pictures. The tide is about to turn and is already turning. A number of critics who a few years ago used the name of Charlie Chaplin as a byword of contempt are now speaking of him with reverence as the greatest artist of his time.

"I predict that in a few years there will be critics thinking themselves the most artistic of the artistic who will make fun of novels and plays and poems and essays and sculptures and paintings as cheap and clumsy devices in comparison with the magnificent charms of the motion pictures.

"Of course, these critics will be wrong and cruel and futile, but they will be no more wrong, no crueller and no more futile than these peculiar persons who despise the moving picture, and despise it because they do not understand what the moving pictures are really trying to do and really succeeding in doing.

"When I praise the motion picture as an art or whatever you want to call it, I do not mean that all pictures are good, or that I like all of them. I hate lots of them and lots of them bore me to death. But that may be my fault, not theirs.

"Many of the critics do not do the motion picture justice because they do not really know what motion pictures are all about. These critics may know something about novels and essays and poetry, but they may know nothing of the film. The man who has no acquaintance with sculpture or with music or with painting has little value as a critic. One great trouble with the motion pictures is that they are being harassed and bullied by any number of critics whose advices it would be futile to follow and whose ignorance is as profound as their own contempt. They say frankly that they don't like them and don't go to them.

"Above all things, the motion picture people should not be scared to death or driven out of their senses by the use of this terrible word 'art.' Nobody knows what art is. No two people agree on the definition. What difference does it make?

"My main feeling is, in short, that we movie people should not be afraid of what people will say of our work. We should not allow a word or a theory to drive us into anything or away from anything without some strong inner reason. Most of all, we should not be afraid of popularity and of financial success. Success is like posterity brought within our immediate vicinity. To have pleased millions of people with comedy, pathos or a well-constructed story is to have done a glorious thing. You can call it art, merchandise, trash or wooden nutmegs, but you cannot rob it of its noble mission—to cast light into dark places."

First National Survey Indicates Revival

Closing Months Showed Marked Improvement with Many Attendance Records Broken

CONSTANT improvement in the motion picture industry is shown, states First National Pictures, Inc., in making public this week a compilation of reports, following a survey of conditions in various parts of the country. The closing months of 1921 witnessed a steady increase in attendance, the company states, and there is every indication that the new year will be marked by conditions approaching normalcy.

This optimistic prospect is predicated on the success with which First National attractions have been meeting in widely separated sections of the country, according to the reports received. The breaking of box office and attendance records has again become common, and S. R. O. houses are more the rule than the exception. However, it is necessary to show good pictures to obtain these results, the company points out, as the public is "shopping" for its screen entertainment, and is willing to patronize only the best.

"The Sign on the Door," starring Norma Talmadge, leads the long list of First National attractions, which are swelling the bank accounts of the exhibitors. It broke the attendance record of the Kentucky Theatre in Louisville, Ky., where it was shown December 11 to 14, and of Thielen's Majestic in Bloomington, Ill., December 12 to 14. At the Grand, Tiffin, Ohio, it demolished all records for Sunday attendance and box office receipts, despite the fact that two religious "revivals" were in progress on December 4. The original booking of two days was extended to three and Manager R. W. Lawrence is planning to bring it back later.

At the Wonderland, Lorain, Ohio, it was reclaimed after a four-day showing by Manager August Ilg, and offered for the remainder of the week, with profitable results, and at the Kinema in Los Angeles, during its run from September 5 to 10, it did the best business of any Talmadge engagement and broke the "summer slump" by doing regular high season business, despite the most remarkable opposition in the history of that house.

"The Kid," the Chaplin six-reel classic, is still breaking records. It was shown on Sunday, November 13, at the Alcazar, Syracuse, N. Y., where it exceeded the house's attendance record by 540 paid admissions, setting a new mark for receipts also. And that, in spite of the fact that it had been shown in almost every section of the city and at most of the large theatres.

At the Liberty, Vermilion, Ohio, it was shown December 25 and 26, and broke the records for previous Christmas Day receipts. "Business was unusually good," reported Manager Charles S. Decker. The Majestic, Evansville, Ind., had capacity

Why Not Be Constructive?

Mrs. Evelyn Snow,
The Ohio Board of Censors,
Columbus, Ohio.
My Dear Mrs. Snow:

It has just come to my notice that some opposition has arisen to the showing of Bebe Daniels in "The Speed Girl." It was clearly understood by everyone who took part in this picture, and by the producers, that it was to be made for laughing purposes only, and to say that any citizen of Ohio would take it seriously, and that it would tend to cause people to have less respect for the law, is an insult to the intelligence of our people.

It has always been a mystery to me why some people who apparently want to serve the community, spend their time finding fault with trivial things when there are so many big, constructive things to be done.

I would like to take the group of "protestors" on a little trip about this city. I would like to take them to the Columbus Tuberculosis Dispensary, where we treat 1,200 people a month for tuberculosis, 500 of them children. I was at the head of the organization which built this institution and it is the finest of its kind in the United States. I would like them to see the gaunt, pale-faced children that come there for treatment, and then let them ponder over the fact that 1,000,000 children in the schools of this country have tuberculosis and 80 per cent of all tuberculosis begins in childhood.

Is there real constructive work to be done in this state, or should we busy ourselves trying to teach the censors the fine art of censoring pictures? Let the "protestors" come with me to the Godman Guild, where I have the honor to be a trustee, and see how we give poor mothers, fathers and children social service; teach them the rules of health, the girls to sew and cook, the boys useful citizenship, the foreigner the real American spirit.

Is there constructive work to be done in this community and in this state? I am thankful every day that I am able to do my part.

I hate suggestive, immoral and salacious pictures. I have fought them "tooth and toe-nail" for twelve years, and I think I have a thorough idea of the kind of pictures that have a bad influence. If "The Speed Girl" is the kind of a picture that should not be shown then I must admit that after all these years of experience with people and with pictures I am in error.

In closing, if these "protestors" really want to render the community an unselfish, constructive service that is really worth while, have them get in touch with me. Half of my time is given free to serving this community. It's a wide road I am travelling, with plenty of room.

Manager Southern Theatre,
Columbus, Ohio.

Rentals Rise—Admissions Fall

RENTALS went up for November, and theatre admissions were down—according to tax figures from the Treasury Department.

Rentals, in fact, went up about 50 per cent over September. The tax receipts were $567,055.09 in November and $315,151.16 in September.

Not only that, but rentals went up nearly 50 per cent over November 1920. The tax figures for November 1920 are $383,542.05.

Receipts from admission taxes for November totalled $6,995,338.48. In September 1921 the total was $6,066,936.09. In November 1920 the total was $7,982,248.61.

In other words, admissions went down around 10 per cent and rentals went up 50 per cent over September (as nearly as the admission tax figures apply to picture theatres).

These figures must be analyzed, however. The big jump in rentals for November is undoubtedly due to the comparatively large numbers of big pictures played that month. Theatre admissions apparently did not respond, however, in the same manner.

Despite every other point, however, it is apparent that business wasn't bad all around in November.

Joint Arbitration Board Formed in Albany, N.Y.

The film exchanges and exhibitors in the Albany (N. Y.) district have just formed what will constitute a joint board of arbitration for the adjustment of differences which may arise between the two bodies. The board will meet each Tuesday at the Pathe exchange in Albany. It is possible that later on, through an agreement with the New York and Buffalo exchanges that the board will settle matters over a widespread territory, rather than confining itself to the capital district.

Kansas Exhibitors Await Step by Music Taxers

The Kansas exhibitors are awaiting the music-tax interests to make the first move in the music-tax fight. The exhibitors confidently believe they have a two-ply move under the Kansas anti-trust law.

M. Van Praag, president of the Kansas exhibitors' organization, has advised theatre owners not to pay tax on music and await action from the opposition.

Capitol Books "His Nibs"

houses during a third run, November 15 and 16.

Charles Ray in "Two Minutes to Go" shattered the attendance and box office records of the New Alhambra, Canton, Ohio, November 23 to 26, and the attendance records of the Thielen's Majestic, Bloomington, Ill., December 5 to 7. It likewise met with sensational success at the New Royal, Findlay, Ohio, December 19 to 22.

"Excellent receipts" marked the showing of "Man-Woman-Marriage" at Thielen's Majestic, Bloomington, Ill., and at the Crescent, Pontiac, Ill., during November.

"Peck's Bay Boy" almost obliterated the attendance and box office records of the Langan, Syracuse, N. Y., December 11 to 12. It ranks second on the archives of the house. "Highly satisfactory from a box office standpoint," characterizes its showing at the Majestic, Streator, Ill., November 30 to December 1.

The best attendance record of the year 1921 at the Royal, Cincinnati, was established by "The River's End," with splendid receipts.

Hal Roach in New York on Visit to Paul Brunet

Highly encouraging reports of picture production activity arrive from the Pacific Coast with Hal Roach, who is in New York on his annual visit to Paul Brunet. Accompanying Producer Roach are Mrs. Roach, Harold Lloyd and Mildred Davis and her mother. The visit will be a brief one, Mr. Roach said, owing to pressure of work involved in keeping pace with Pathe distribution. Lloyd and Hal Roach comedies and the new Ruth Roland serial are calling upon all the resources of the Hal Roach studios, although they have been much expanded during the last year and supplied throughout with the latest and best equipment and accessories.

Allied Film Laboratories Hold New Year's Ball

The first grand ball and entertainment of the Allied Film Laboratories Association, Inc., held at the Twelfth Regiment Armory, New York city, New Year's Eve, brought out a big crowd of Allied members, employees and a host of friends and was a great success.

BUSINESS "DOS and DON'TS" on "SEEING IT THROUGH"

Build for the Future

I believe exhibitors should build now for the future. It is possible now, when your houses are not filled because of the lack of patronage, to stage special events.

Give your seats away, it doesn't cost you anything. That is, of course, provided you select the people to whom you give them.

Only recently the Victory had the poor children of the city as guests on Saturday. A total of 1,400 children were in the theatre during the day. We had filled houses, of course, with the regular Saturday trade and the children, too, yet our receipts for that day were higher than for any Saturday in recent months.

There were several reasons for this fact. One was that the mother or father of the child invited managed to scrape enough money together to come and see Johnny or Kate at the show. Another was that the general public was interested to see what those kids did at the show.

But, more than that, I count the good will the Victory gained from that stunt. It means those children, seeing our show onc,e will come back here when they have spare money to spend on a motion picture show. It means that many of them will be wage-earners within a year or two and we are cultivating right now the Victory habit.

While your houses are not filled build patronage for the years to come. The depression period offers an opportunity for the live exhibitors. Accept it for what it is and get full benefit of the opportunity.

"As to conditions in the future, I believe the first of the year will see a marked improvement in the business. Several factors have been against us here in Evansville, unemployment and extremely mild weather. With colder weather the idle men will visit the theatres more than at present.

Lieber's List of "Do's"

Advertise Like the Devil—He gets a lot of business.

Balance your program—The public is tired of the same old thing.

Deliver the goods—After you tell your patrons you have a regular entertainment.

Endeavor to Get as Much Free Advertising as Possible—Both out of doors and in the newspapers.

Grab as Many Chances for Co-operative Ads as the Papers Will Stand For—Because then you get a full page of results for one-eighth the cost.

Have as Many Permanent Exploitation Mediums as Possible—Including permanent windows for displays and cards, one-sheet boards, three-sheet boards and 24-sheet stands, mailing lists, boxes for programs in places where people congregate, etc., as this saves time and expense when you start a new campaign.

Indorse Only the Finest Pictures—As your patrons will then believe what you say about them.

Justify your advertising expense—By making your patrons read what you have to say. Remember you must first catch the eye before you can make 'em read.

Keep a Complete File of Trade Papers—So every time you have an opportunity you can read about your coming attractions and know what the other exhibitors are doing and the results they are getting at the box office.

Let Your Competitor Alone—Spend more of your time trying to make money and less time trying to figure out how you are going to put it over on your opposition, as the surest way to beat competition is to make your theatre a real success.

Make Your Lobby as Attractive as Possible—As the public is shopping for entertainment and your lobby is your sample case.

Notice All the Reviews—In the trade magazines, the fan magazines and other periodicals carrying amusement sections, and book your pictures accordingly. In other words, be sure you are right, then go ahead.

Outside Advertising Is Good—But the most compelling medium is your screen. When you advertise in your theatre your patrons have to look at it. Try to make your screen advertising attractive. If you Prepare Your Advertising With the Greatest Care—And say it quick, using as much white space as possible.

Quality in Your Advertising—Is nearly as essential as quality on your screen.

Remember That It Is Just as Bad to Make Your Program Too Long as It Is to Make It Too Short—A drawn-out program, even if the pictures are good, sometimes proves a bore.

Take Advantage of Your Stage—If you have one. Nearly every city has a choral instructor and most cities have a dance instructor, and if you can line them up with your theatre you should be able to get some real entertainment.

Undertake to Sell Your Theatre, Your Orchestra or Whatever Assets You Have—To your patrons, as well as your pictures.

Vacant Store-rooms Are Good Window Display Prospects—Watch for them.

Watch Out for the Sunday Closing Fanatics—But do nothing to start conversation along this line, as sometimes a lot of fire follows a little smoke.

"X" Is the Unknown Problem—The kind of pictures your patrons like best. Learn their likes and dislikes and give them what they want.

Zealously Guard Your Program—But loosen the strings on your ad appropriation.

Watch the Overhead Compared to Gross Business

HERE is my solution to the "Seeing It Through" problem. It is the way I am putting over a house which I have just taken over and which lost money until I applied my methods.

I can sum it up in a few words:

Watch the overhead and advertise strong. Previous to doing this, however, apply a cost finding method. Take the numerous expenses of the house and apply them to the gross each week and see whether the music appropriation is too large for the amount of business done or perhaps the advertising appropriation is too small. This is a sure fire way to analyze each item of expense and to correct it if necessary.

To Preserve Examples of Film Art for Posterity

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER has been asked by the Chicago Evening American to cooperate in a plan which the paper has for preserving examples of motion-picture art for posterity.

The newspaper purposes to hold an annual voting contest by which the best photodrama of the year will be selected for handing down to ages to come. In this way the paper expects to present one film each year to some governmental agency which will undertake to act as motion-picture librarian for our descendants. Fred McQuig, photoplay editor, is sponsoring the plan.

Mr. McQuig draws a picture of the future, 5,000 years hence, when the children of that day might engage in the study of the early celluloid literature, just as the high-school pupil of today studies Homer and Virgil. Toward such an end Mr. McQuaig asks Mr. Rothacker and other technicians of the industry to solve the problem of a celluloid photographic base which will withstand the wear of centuries.

Church and Theatre Work Together on Xmas Bill

Showing that there does exist a common ground on which the church may meet the theatre and its associated activities such as symphony concerts, Sid Grauman, managing director of the Grauman theatres, joined forces with Dr. J. Whitcomb Brougher and his parishioners of the Temple Baptist Church, Los Angeles, in presenting a regular symphony concert, "The Christmas Spirit in Music," at the Grauman Million Dollar Theatre on Christmas morning.

The keynote of the occasion was "Americanism" and "Christmas Spirit." Giving careful attention to those subjects, Mischa Guterson, conductor of the Grauman Symphony Orchestra, arranged the concert to interpret in music the ideas thus suggested.

From the stage of the theatre Dr. J. Whitcomb Brougher delivered an address on the same subjects. It was noted that his talk was as enthusiastically received as the music itself.

Notable in the entire proceedings was the appearance of the Temple Baptist Choir of one hundred voices. Accompanied by Mr. Grauman's seventy-five musicians, this chorus sang Christmas and vesper songs.

Two Incorporations in N.Y.

Two corporations were formed during the past week for the purpose of engaging in the motion picture business in New York state. These companies were the Jupiter Film Corporation, capitalized at $25,000, with H. C. Trewedi, A. H. Goodman and Jane Morgan as directors; Just Because, Inc., $40,000, A. G. Scheer, M. C. Berman, New York; M. Hicks, Mount Vernon.

Arrangements by New York Central for Convention

Following a meeting last Wednesday of the Albany Theatrical Managers' Association, President George Roberts announced that practically every arrangement had been completed for the annual convention slated for the Capital City next month. Outstanding features of the week have been the co-operation on the part of the New York Central Railroad in not only offering reduced rates to all delegates, but also in volunteering to advertise the convention and the movie ball on all its billboards within a radius of fifty miles of Albany. This means that between now and the middle of February that the ball and convention will be advertised to hundreds of thousands of travelers.

The Albany Chamber of Commerce is also doing everything to assist in making the convention the biggest possible success. During the past week a special committee was named by the Chamber of Commerce, which includes Charles M. Winchester as chairman, and is made up of bankers, manufacturers and the leading business men of the city. The committee has already started to function, and among other things will give a luncheon to the delegates.

President Roberts has also called the women together and formed a committee among the wives of Albany's managers which will be on hand to welcome all women as they reach Albany on convention week.

Arrangements have also been made for a huge electric sign which will be erected at the top of Capitol Hill, and, facing the business centre of the city, will give forth the message at night to the effect that the exhibitors are in town. The Chamber of Commerce has donated a large welcome sign, which will be placed in front of the Hotel Ten Eyck.

Exhibitors desiring to make hotel resercations should communicate with Samuel Suckno, Albany theatre, Albany, N. Y. Information as to what nights reservations should be made for, approximate price, etc., should be given in the communication to Mr. Suckno.

"Peacock Alley" in Extended Run at the Cameo

Mae Murray in her latest production, "Peacock Alley," will be held over at B. S. Moss' Cameo theatre, Forty-second street, New York city, for an indefinite run.

B. S. Moss' new theatre exquisite, the Cameo, but recently opened, is hailed as filling a long-felt want of the theatregoers of Greater New York, namely, a theatre that is devoted entirely to the perfect presentation of photoplays. This "jewel box" of a theatre also boasts of an orchestra of renowned musicians who are banded under the name of Cameo Concert Orchestra. Gerard Carbonare is the conductor.

British Seek Protection from Continental Films

WILLIAM ALEXANDER, who arrived in New York last Sunday after a six weeks' business trip abroad, reports generally improved conditions in Great Britain, France and Italy. Abroad in the interests of the Alexander Film Corporation, the distributor visited the Coast cities of the peninsula as far as Spain.

The most striking movement observed was in London, where the owners of theatres and film producers and distributors are agitating a measure to be placed before Parliament making residence in the United Kingdom obligatory for all persons who appear in films, with the penalty per capita for each non-resident in a picture made in the Kingdom or elsewhere a fine, stars to be assessed at 5 quid, or the equivalent of twenty-five dollars; principals, three quid or the equivalent of fifteen dollars, and supernumeraries or extra people at four shillings, or about one dollar. The plan is regarded by film men generally throughout England as a sure way to check the invasion of films from Germany, Italy, and France. The measure applies to American made films, but the feeling that inspired it has been provoked by the flood of pictures seeking English markets with casts, stars and principals composed chiefly of the lowest possible priced alien players.

"Conservatism Key-Note to Success" Says Crawford

"Conservatism is the keynote of success," says Roy Crawford, treasurer of Associated Exhibitors. Mr. Crawford has interests in a number of theatres in the Middle West.

"Banks and all big-going corporations follow it. There seems to me to be a great deal of waste in the moving picture business, particularly in the producing end. When this waste is eliminated and more conservatism shown in this end of the industry, greater profits will pile up both for the distributor and the producer, and it will make for easier financing for future productions.

"The producer who can meet the payments of his notes at the bank is the one who is conservative in his production cost. Likewise, the distributing organization operating on the same principles, is the one who can give the independent producer quick returns.

Bronx Exhibitors Elect Officers for 1922

At a largely attended meeting of the Bronx Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association Dec. 22 the following officers were elected for 1922: President, John J. Wittman (tenth consecutive term); vice-president, John C. Bolte (third consecutive term); executive secretary, Henry Cole (ninth consecutive term); treasurer, Henry Suchman, re-elected (second term); three-year trustee, Edward Falter; two- and one-year trustees, Morris Sussman, Isadore Rothman; sergeant-at-arms, William Wilson.

The Motion Picture Industry in Japan

AN article written by Martin G. Scott, clerk to the Trade Commissioner, Tokyo, for the December 26th issue of Commerce Reports gives an interesting account of the film industry in Japan as viewed from the trade angle.

According to Mr. Scott's article, there are in Japan at the present time about 600 theatres giving regular performances and about 2,000 giving occasional showings. Of the 600 regular houses, 50 are in Tokyo, 30 in Osaka, and the remainder scattered throughout the country. The seating capacities run from 500 to 1,800. The low admission prices in most places, however, entitle one merely to standing room. Of the 600 houses referred to above, the Nippon Katsudoshashin Kabushiki Kaisha owns or controls about 350. This is by far the largest moving picture company in the Empire. It also operates two studios with a force of 100 actors and 50 cameramen, directors, etc.

Are films popular? Mr. Scott says Tokyo's 50 houses play to over 10,000,000 people annually, while the 20 "legit" houses play to less than half that number, despite their larger seating capacities. He adds, however, that there has been "no such desertion by actors of the stage for the film as in America, probably on account of the intense pride which the Japanese actor takes in his profession." The average admission price, says Mr. Scott, is about 50 sen (25 cents).

American cameras are very popular, though French and German makes are also used. The Japanese have so far been unable to turn out a satisfactory camera. Onn the other hand, the majority of projection machines used are of a domestic make, Japanese exhibitors declaring they cannot afford the American machines, though admitting their superiority. American films practically dominate the market. The Japanese producers are following more and more the foreign style of plot with more action and less posturing.

American companies are advised by Mr. Scott to take special precautions against pirating of films, which practice seems to be quite prevalent. Mr. Scott also makes the following useful suggestions:

"Imported machines and accessories are subject to a duty of 50 per cent, and it is complained that the customs have a habit of placing their own valuations on the machines. In regard to importations, dealers here state that where discounts are allowed it is advisable that a statement signed by an official of the exporting company accompany the shipment stating the reasons for which the discount is allowed. Otherwise the customs often will not allow it. This, of course, also applies to other goods in this line.

"As a rule, individual theatres rent their films from one of the larger companies, which supply them with enough film to make up a complete bill, and programs are changed weekly. The rental charge varies widely, running from $100 to $600 per month, depending on the theatre and the class of film shown. For special films an extra charge is usually made. The programs are long. Those for the better class theatres will include two pictures of about six reels (sometimes both foreign, sometimes one, while some theatres show exclusively Japanese films), a weekly news letter, a comedy, and two or three episodes of a serial film (usually an exciting melodrama). The trust states that for a first-class foreign film they often secure $200 per week, and for individual performances from $25 to $35. The larger Japanese companies usually buy their films outright and then supply them to their different theatres. Films are dutiable at 8.25 yen per kin ($3.10 per pound), including inner packing.

Public Lectures on Censorship in N. Y. Schools

THE New York public is going to learn a lot about motion picture censorship during January and February. In the lecture rooms of many high schools, the subject will be discussed both pro and con by the most prominent advocates and opponents of legalized screen control.

Through an arrangement between the Board of Education of the City of New York and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, William A. Brady, president of the National Association, D. W. Griffith and Paul H. Cromlin, the prominent film exporter, will speak against censorship in several high schools in Brooklyn, Manhattan and the Bronx between January 12 and February 27. At each of these lectures there will be shown a model motion picture program donated, for this purpose, by producer members of the National Association.

These lectures will not take the form of debates. Although the advocates of censorship will also speak under the auspices of the Board of Education, the dates to be assigned them, however, will not conflict with the appearance of the motion-picture men.

Among the champions of censorship who will seek to justify legalized screen control are Mrs. Clarence Waterman, Canon William S. Chase and Frederick Boyd Stevenson. Joseph Levenson, secretary of the New York State Motion Picture Commission, will be another speaker.

Buffalo F.I.L.M. Club to Fight "Switching" Evil

THREE Syracuse theatres have been forced to put up deposits of $300 each as a guarantee against switching films. Representatives of the three houses appeared before the joint arbitration committee of the F. I. L. M. Club of Buffalo, pleaded guilty to the charge, it is reported, and were each forced to place the above amount, which will be forfeit if discovered switching. The club is determined to stamp out this evil and now has paid agents at work in several cities, where switching is suspected. The entire territory will be covered.

E. O. Weinberg, manager of the Mark-Strand in Buffalo, and Sidney C. Allen, manager of the Scenic theatre in Medina, N. Y., have been appointed members of the joint arbitration committee, succeeding Judge John W. Schatt of Fredonia and J. H. Michael of the Regent, Buffalo, respectively.

Plans are being discussed for a joint meeting of the Buffalo and Albany F. I. L. M. clubs to be held in Syracuse sometime this month.

A Reply to Taylor on "Expensive Music"

Editor MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

Dear Sir: In your issue of December 17th I noticed a highly interesting letter by William D. Taylor, president of the Motion Picture Directors' Association. This letter is likely to have a far-reaching effect in its appeal, but I hope managers are not going to act rashly on the advice, particularly in connection with orchestras. tras.

Orchestras of 70, 60, 50, 40, or even 30 and 20 pieces may be far too expensive items for a picture house, but the danger is likely to hit those houses using 10 or 12 pieces or even less, where the manager, taking an excuse from Mr. Taylor's letter, is going to reduce his 10-piece orchestra to eight pieces, and his eight-piece orchestra to six pieces, his six to four, and so on.

Orchestras from 10 to 18 pieces are capable of giving the picture an artistic interpretation, and it is a mistake—a great mistake—to "jew" your production to the last cent for the mere sake of gaining the pound of flesh, which you don't get in the end through false economy. Over-elaborate prologues, vaudeville stunts which are out of place, and overstocked orchestras might be well looked into. But a sufficient number of instruments to render artistic effects is absolutely necessary.

Yours truly,

LESLIE GROSSMITH,
Musical Director of Capitol Theatre,
Victoria, B. C.

Harry Reichenbach to Join Paramount's Staff

HARRY REICHENBACH, who has been handling the special exploitation and advertising for Universal's "Foolish Wives," has submitted his resignation, to take effect immediately after the opening of that picture at the Central theatre. He will immediately join Famouse Players-Lasky for special work on big pictures for that concern.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE.

The personal appearance of Rex Beach at the Roosevelt Theatre last week, in connection with the showing of "The Iron Trail," the feature picture for which he is responsible, was a real success. Mr. Beach is the first author of note to make a personal appearance in a Chicago movie house, and many persons who were not in the habit of patronizing moving picture theatres were brought into the Roosevelt to see him and, undoubtedly, will from now on be regular patrons.

"The Connecticut Yankee," which opened at the Woods Theatre the day before Christmas for an indefinite run, at seventy-five cents top price, got away to a good start and did big business during its first seven days. Observation of the people going into the theatre would indicate that the picturization of Mark Twain's famous book appeals to a higher class of picture fans than probably any feature ever shown in Chicago.

Jack O'Brien stopped off in Chicago last week for a few hours on his way to Universal City, where he will play leads for the Laemmle organization. Mr. O'Brien was rehearsing for a Frohman stage production in New York when he signed up with Universal, and within a few hours was headed west. He worked for Mr. Laemmle back in the two-reel days, and states that it is like coming back home to be connected with the Universal organization once more.

Maurice Hellman returned to Chicago from New York for the holidays and will be here for a couple of weeks before moving to New York, where he will take up his permanent residence. Mr. Hellman states that his new business arrangements are completed and that he will have an announcement of considerable interest to the trade, to make within a few days.

Carl Laemmle is back on the job again at Universal exchange, after being confined to his home for three weeks, first by his own illness and later on account of illness in his family.

A convention of Chicago and Milwaukee Famous Players-Lasky sales forces was held in Chicago last week at the call of H. W. Given, Chicago manager, to discuss matters arising from the taking over of Realart Pictures and other things pertaining to the 1922 sales campaign. While the conference was strictly a business one, those in attendance enjoyed the performance of "The Merry Widow" on Tuesday night, and a luncheon at the Stratford Hotel on Wednesday. Those who participated in the meeting included the following from the Chicago office: H. W. Given, manager; Otto Bolle, sales manager; Neal Agnew, assistant sales manager; and salesmen Wolfberg, O'Brien, Wolff, Goldberg, Chapman, Carmichael, Jacob O'Connor, Rockabrand, Zink, Stover, Washburn, Petaria, Rowley; (Messrs. Petaria and Rowley formerly were connected with Realart and have been taken into the Paramount organization at Chicago), and Head Booker William Hamm. Those from the Milwaukee office included Al Bernstein, branch manager; Milton Hirsch, sales manager; Rob Gary, exploiter, and Salesmen Reisman, Oldfield and Roderick.

W. R. Sheehan, of Fox Film Corporation, spent last week in Chicago, making his headquarters at the local exchange where a meeting of central west Fox exchange managers was held. Mr. Sheehan is optimistic over the 1922 outlook and stated that Fox now has seven or eight big features completed in addition to those already announced, and that four or five more important pictures are in the course of production. The big Fox specials in Mr. Sheehan's opinion, will do much to get the public back in the motion picture habit and will be an aid to the theatre men in getting back to normal.

An election held at Springfield, Missouri, last week, resulted in the defeat of Sunday opening by 6,082 votes against 3,166 favorable to keeping the movies open on the first day of the week.

The Colonial Theatre, of Gillespie, Illinois, formerly owned by F. W. Stehline, has been taken over by Oscar Wesley, of Benld. Mr. Wesley recently disposed of his Wesley Theatre, at Benld, to the owners of the opposition house.

District Manager Shirley, of Metro, was made very happy over the token of good will which came to him from the branch managers in his territory on Christmas. It was a very handsome gold watch which Mr. Shirley is observed to consult every few minutes.

T. J. Denton has been promoted from the service department of Universal's Chicago exchange to salesmen and will cover northwestern Illinois. His promotion is in line with the policy of District Manager Stern to advance men from the ranks of the organization, rather than going outside for new recruits, which is a big factor in the fine esprit de corps shown by the local exchange staff.

Harry McDonald, of Wid Gunning, Inc., was in Chicago this week conferring with Manager Sid Goldman, of the local exchange. Herschel Stuart, a new addition to the staff of the company, joined Mr. McDonald here and Wid Gunning himself arrived from the west coast, where he spent Christmas with his family, and tarried in Chicago for a couple of days. Messrs. McDonald and Stuart accompanied Mr. Gunning back to the New York office.

The rights to the Dempsey-Willard fight pictures for Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin have been acquired by Clyde E. Elliott Amusement Enterprises, and Mr. Elliott will handle the distribution of the pictures in Illinois and intends state righting the other territory. Elliott is also handling "The Lady of the Dugout," with which Al Jennings is making personal appearances.

Lee Herz announces that during 1922 Interstate Film Service will distribute short subjects only, comedies, serials, two-reel westerns, etc., eliminating features. He states that it will be his aim to offer only the best in short reelers to exhibitors.

First National's Chicago exchange has added H. P. Joslyn, recently connected with a Chicago advertising agency, to its staff as director of publicity and exploitation. Mr. Joslyn will be prepared to give exhibitors service in putting over features released through First National in this territory.

Joe Friedman, of Celebrated Players, had added three new series of short subjects to his list of releases. They are twenty-six Joe Rock single-reel comedies, to be released every other week; Funny Face Comedies and Marcus Cartoons, one a month: Out of the Inkwell series of comedies, one a month. Mr. Friedman prides himself on being a judge of short subjects and declares that exhibitors will do well with these fun makers.

H. E. Boswell, who recently was covering Illinois territory for Realart, is now on the staff of Manager L. Gallas, of Chicago's Robertson-Cole exchange and will cover the same territory.

The New Era and Blackstone picture exchanges will hereafter be located at 804 S. Wabash avenue, where they have taken quarters with the Chicago Reelcraft Exchange.

Corrington & Sons opened their new 900-seat Clintonia Theatre, at Clinton, Illinois, last Monday. It is one of the most beautiful and best equipped theatres in Illinois, and is a real monument to the enterprise of its owners. The Corrington policy will be to have a short Orpheum program of vaudeville with pictures on Monday and Tuesday, and during the remainder of the week the biggest feature pictures will be run at the Clintonia. An orchestra of seven pieces will be an added attraction at this house. Corrington & Sons recently purchased the "K" Theatre from Manager Suddith and now controls two out of the three houses in Clinton.

Board & Sons are rushing the finishing touches on the 1100-seat house which they plan to open in Hoopeston, Illinois, about February 1st. This is another one of the small town theatres which is a real credit to the town and its proprietors, as it is of beautiful design and the equipment is up to date and modern in every respect.

A meeting of the exhibitors' organizations of Chicago was scheduled to take place at Schaefer's projection room Wednesday to take action on the operators' wage scale. All exhibitors were invited to take part in the discussion.

Bert Lytell came to Jones, Linick & Schaefer's Rialto Theatre the first week of the new year to appear in person and made a hit with the large audiences at this house. He is one of the few picture stars who is seasoned to the speaking stage, as well as the movies, having been leading man in stock some years ago, and having had a wide theatrical experience. The Rialto engagement was his only appearance here, as he returned to the coast immediately thereafter to make some new feature pictures for Metro.

Ben Garretson is back in town after several months spent in New York, and is receiving a warm welcome from his numerous friends. He is acting as advertising and publicity director for "The Connecticut Yankee" during its showing at the Woods Theatre, and it is reported may remain in Chicago after its run ends.

D. O. Reese, of Celebrated, was in town over New Year's and reports that exhibitors in his territory are optimistic over the outlook for 1922 business, and that the abolition of the five per cent film tax also is having a cheering influence on the owners of both large and small theatres in country districts.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The Little Minister—

Splendid picture. Fine entertainment. As good as the original stage production. Huge crowds all week, both afternoon and evening. (Middle West.)

Business was only fair on this Betty Compson production. Buster Keaton in "The Boat" drew in most of the patrons. (East.)

Drew splendidly. Receipts fine. (East.)

Rent Free—

Out of Wally Reid's line. Fair business. Special comedy helped this. (Middle West.)

Call of the North—

This went over in great shape. Capacity houses all week. (West.)

The Bonnie Brier Bush—

Artistically an excellent picture, but has not very much commercial value. (East.)

Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford—

Advance publicity aided this one greatly. A good attendance for a week's run. (Middle West.)

A Prince There Was—

Picture drew splendidly although personally I did not think it up to advance notices. However the patrons are the real critics. (Middle West.)

Conquest of Canaan—

This picture went over very well and business was right good, as it should have been during the holiday season. There was nothing extraordinary about the plot, but Mr. Meighan is always interesting to our fans. (South.)

Don't Tell Everything—

ASSOCIATED FIRST NATIONAL

Molly O—

As good as "Mickey." Good houses for a three weeks' run. (Middle West.)

Fine attraction. Paid well. (East.)

Tol'able David—

Artistic picture but very gloomy. Doesn't leave one with good taste in the mouth. Too gloomy even though excellently done. (Middle West.)

A fine picture on which we had good business. (West.)

The Lotus Eater—

Light picture. John Barrymore did better in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." (Middle West.)

Hail, the Woman—

This was a fairly good picture and there is no criticism to be offered. (South.)

Went over great. A real picture, one which the public is looking for. (Middle West.)

The Wonderful Thing—

Was a right wonderful picture. Pleased well, comment favorable, business good. (South.)

Infamous Miss Revell—

Mediocre picture. Business not very good. (East.)

HODKINSON

Rip Van Winkle—

A real box office "gem." Did a great business for the first week. (Middle West.)

Very good entertainment. Good box office puller. (West.)

Good picturization of the famous story. A fair box office value. (Middle West.)

Well attended performances throughout the week. Great specialty. (East.)

Partners of the Night—

Excellent box office attraction. Audiences enjoyed it immensely. (East.)

UNIVERSAL

A Parisian Scandal—

A live wire production, good for our kind of house which caters to transients. (Middle West.)

Good entertainment and good business. (West.)

Cheated Hearts—

Fairly good feature. Average box office receipts. (West.)

No Woman Knows—

As good as "Humoresque." Fine business all week. (West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

Little Lord Fauntleroy—

Couldn't manage the crowds. Big success. Everyone delighted with the picture. Appeals to old and young alike. Mary Pickford hasn't been so popular of late, but this picture brings her back. (Middle West.)

Mary Pickford is popular here and recent publicity about her created additional interest in the picture, which did a good week's business. (Middle West.)

Picture did not draw as well as other Pickford features. Critics here roasted it for what they termed "mushy flavor" and this kept many away.

Very good business during first seven days of two week run. Everybody commented favorably on the entertaining qualities of the picture. (East.)

The Iron Trail—

The name of Rex Beach, author, was played up with this picture, which did a pretty good business. (Middle West.)

The Three Musketeers—

A fine production. Business fair on second run. (West.)

FOX

Trailin'—

Virile as all Mix pictures are. Drew capacity houses all week. (Middle West.)

Great production! Large box office value. (West.)

Thunderclap—

As thrilling a melodrama as ever filmed. Business good. (Middle West.)

Over the Hill—

Capacity for first week and being held for seven days more. (East.)

A Connecticut Yankee—

Running swell in second week. Crowded houses. (East.)

GOLDWYN

For Those We Love—

Betty Compson and Lon Chaney are popular here. The picture drew well for a week's run. (Middle West.)

Doubling for Romeo—

A wonderful production on which we had big business. (West.)

SELZNICK

The Man of Stone—

Pleased, both as regards audience and receipts. (East.)

A Man's Home—

Good picture and business good considering the week before Christmas. (East.)

A Pair of Silk Stockings—

METRO

Fighting Mad—

A fine picture, but business not so good. Patrons not inclined toward Westerns. (West.)

Morals of Marcus—

Good picture and good business. (West.)

REALART

The Speed Girl—

Very good. Bebe put this over splendidly and the picture made a right good showing. (South.)

The Snob—

Average both as to quality of picture and business value. (West.)

VITAGRAPH

Son of Wallingford—

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS

A Sailor-Made Man—

Fine picture and good business. (West.)

STATE RIGHTS

School Days—

Wonderful show. Broke all matinee records. Couldn't take care of all the matinee patrons. Evenings capacity, but not so big as matinees. Probably because there was no school, it being Christmas vacation. (Middle West.)

The Parish Priest—

Good audience picture. Played to consistently good business all week. Holding it over for a second week. (Middle West.)

Intrigue—

Only fair picture, but the fact that Pola Negri was the star packed the houses. (East.)

Why Girls Leave Home—

Jammed them in for a week and for the first time in years, held over for four days more. (East.)

The Masked Avenger—

Birth of a Race—

This one went over big and done a fine business. House filled to capacity each performance. (West.)

A picture of the lobby display on "Marooned Hearts" which C. H. Amos, manager of the Strand theatre, Spartansburg, S. C., recently used

Amos Originates Unusually Attractive Lobby Display

One of the most attractive and appropriate lobby displays yet conceived by Manager C. H. Amos of the Strand theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., was that used in exploiting "Marooned Hearts" recently. A large mirror was placed on a kitchen table, so as to afford a replica of a small lake of clear water. Mosses obtained from a nearby stream were placed along the edges of the mirror, to produce the banks of the miniature lake. In the center of the mirror was placed moss and several species of tiny plants that thrive in or near lakes.

Added realism was given the lake by placing small shells at intervals along the mossy banks and on the tiny island in the center of the lake. A small yacht was moored in a corner of the lake.

On the island Manager Amos deposited two small dolls, secured from a local five-and-ten-cent store. The female doll's eyes were made to droop demurely as the male of the species assumed a posture obviously that of a bashful swain.

Atlanta Lobby Display Is Attractive

FOR a second run of "When Lights Are Low," Manager W. T. Murray of the Alamo No. 2, Atlanta, masked the front of his theatre in a black drop, two gold painted dragons' heads touching at the top, forming a sort of arch across the top and the sides of the theatre.

There were several beautiful silk Chinese lanterns, of yellow, with flowers painted on them, hanging in the lobby, and, guarding the entrance and the exit, were two cut-outs, from twenty-four sheets, of the star, in Chinese dress.

"Hoosier-Arabian" for Indianapolis "Sheik" Showing

Among the exploitations mediums which D. A. Coulter, of the Ohio theatre, Indianapolis, utilized for his showing of "The Sheik" were cut-outs and banners on the local street cars, a "Hoosier-Arabian" working on the streets, who distributed 5,000 small cards on which was Rudolph Valentino's picture.

Baltimore Theatre Goes Washington Stunt One Better

The Century theatre, Baltimore, went Loew's Columbia, Washington, one better for "Ladies Must Live."

The Century tied up with the Baltimore "Sun" for a sale on papers for the benefit of the Babies' Milk Fund. The newsgirls were members of Ernie Young's Century Roof chorus. The fair dames piled into one of the Sun's circulation department trucks and were hauled from one important intersection to another.

When they debarked, they did not disperse, but stuck together and made a mass attack upon the pedestrians. This was better than one girl to a block or some similar distribution. They caught the flowing crowd and amidst screams, giggles and chorine banter attracted a lot of attention.

This was a variation of the stunt pulled a week ago in Washington, when twenty-five unemployed girls sold papers on the plea that "Ladies Must Live."

"White Oak" Prologue Faithful to Old West

Decidedly reminiscent of the first act of "The Girl of the Golden West" and characteristic of the West of the period of both the play and the picture was Sid Grauman's prologue for "White Oak," playing recently at Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles.

With a score of artists participating, many of them prominent operatic stars, the act was typical of the era in American history which the picture portrayed. Opening with a rugged Westerner sawing a tune from a nondescript fiddle, the prologue was given zest when two pistol shots were heard in the wings and a ramshackle stagecoach, drawn by four horses, thundered across the far end of the set, halting at the entrance of the "dance hall," where the locale was laid. Out of the coach came a trio of operatic stars who were supposed to sing at the "town theatre" that night. At the pleadings of the dance hall girls and the Western gunmen who had been sitting at the tables imbibing freely of alleged liquors, the singers consented to give several numbers. These included solo and trio selections. At this juncture one of the natives who had been listening, seemingly charmed by these cultured evidences of the polished outside world, asserted his provincial pride and asked the singers as a return courtesy if they desired to witness the exhibition of talents by home products. This they wished.

Costumed as the dance hall Chinese waiter, a boy toe dancer executed a fantastic Oriental dance. Then followed several numbers of Jeannette Rogers, brilliant flutist.

As a two-fisted man, favorite of the Westerners, William F. Myers, said to possess one of the deepest voices in the world, sang rumbling refrains. The dance hall, in which the action transpired, was rigged with primitive Western "appointments" such as bearskins, antlers, Indian blankets and the like.

SmallTown ExhibitorUses Some Large Display Ads

Large newspaper displays featured the opening of a small but exceedingly effective publicity campaign for the recent run of "Over the Hill" by the management of the Rialto theatre, Beatrice, Neb.

Quarter-page advertisements were used in the dailies for an entire week prior to the opening. Simultaneously the leading newspaper consented to run a "Famous Women" contest with a few cash prizes and a number of free tickets to see the production as the awards to successful contestants. Each day there was printed the picture of some woman famous in American history, as posed by Mary Carr. The best essays on the life and work of that woman were awarded the prizes.

Arrangements were made with several of the leading stores in the town for the distribution of large circus heralds, wrapped with all goods sold.

"Queen of Sheba" Campaign Stirs Monterey Fans

To exploit "Queen of Sheba," the management of the Monterey theatre, Monterey, Cal., depended on originality in window designs, billboard display and street car and automobile advertising.

It is the boast of the management that every downtown store in Monterey carried some form of publicity for "Queen of Sheba," either in attractive window exhibitions, in canvas banners in the interiors or in large heralds which were wrapped in each package sent out of the store.

The street car publicity consisted of plastering the cars, for days in advance of the opening of the production, with large canvas signs announcing the picture and the theatre at which it would be shown. In localities where the trolleys did not run, two large automobile trucks were decorated with gigantic signs and drives through the streets.

Every available billboard, regardless of size, was utilized in further publicizing the week's program. And an attractive lobby display capped off the exploitation campaign.

Johnson's Prologue for "The Idol Dancer"

Seldom if ever has a more striking or bizarre prologue been arranged for any picture than that which Manager Herbert M. Johnson staged for the presentation of "The Idol Dancer" at the Luna theatre, Lafayette, Ind.

The subtle and aromatic fragrance of burning incense greeted the spectator upon his entrance to the theatre and a glimpse of the stage disclosed the bluish and delicate vapor rising from two tall Egyptian vases placed in the forefront and upon each side of the platform. In the rear of the stage was a concealed booth, covered by a dark plush curtain.

In the meantime were heard the deep-throated notes of the huge pipe organ in that weird and fantastic music reminiscent of the South Sea Isles and two large blacks, clad and made up to represent the historic Nubians, marched solemnly into view and drew aside the plush curtain, behind which was revealed a gruesome idol.

Then the organist struck up a lively and barbaric melody and a dancer in costume made her appearance and offered a quaintly savage interpretation of the "idol dance." Then the blacks again dropped the curtain before the idol and the picture began. Throughout thte entire presentation the atmosphere was preserved by the penetrating incense fumes and special musical numbers, while in the scenes which suggested it tom-toms were sounded offstage.

Teaser Lobby Display Works Like Charm

A sixteen foot row boat borrowed from a local sporting gods store was placed in the Queen lobby... In the boat was placed a gril's hat and a man's coat. A neatly lettered card bore this message. "A boat—a girl's hat—a man's coat drifted in with the tide. May McAvoy explains the mystery in 'Everything For Sales."

It was a teaser display and succeeded in arousing the interest of every person who passed the theatre.

"Cup of Life" Lobby Display Artistic

A display that was artistic principally because of its utter simplicity was used in the lobby of the Strand theatre, Spartansburg, S. C., by Manager Charles H. Amos in putting across the "Cup of Life." Directly in front of the ticket booth was placed a remarkable cut-out of a loving cup. This was made of heavy cardboard and was about as tall as the average man. At its base was placed a basket of chrysanthemums, flowers indigenous to the Orient and therefore appropriate for use in the lobby display for this picture.

The cup was covered with silver tinsel and was held in place by silver cords suspended from the ceiling and from both sides of the loby. On the cords that hung from the ceiling were fastened small photographs of Hobert Bosworth, Niles Welch, Madge Bellamy and Tully Marshall, and just above the cup were placed silver letters spelling "The Cup of Life."

Two silhouette figures on the huge cup attracted universal attention, a small flashlight placed directly behind them making the figures stand out in bold relief.

Hearne Builds Another Fine Lobby Display

ON the opposite page is a cut showing a picture of the lobby display which Noble Hearne manager of the Frolic theatre, San Francisco originated for "Conflict."

The artificial rocks were constructed of paper mache, the pine trees are direct from the forest and the water fall is real.

The picture of Priscilla Dean is from a three sheet, mounted in the usual way. And Mr. Hearne says that the whole display is more simple and inexpensive than it seems and that also he will be glad to give the complete working details for constructing a duplicate to any exhibitor who will write for them. That's reciprocity for you.

The "Conflict" display is illustrated in the cuts appearing on the opposite page.

"Snow Storm" Astounds Academy of Music Patrons

PEOPLE who went to the William Fox Academy of Music, New York last week found themselves in the midst of what seemed to be an honest to goodness snow storm.

This effect of snow falling not only about the Christmas tree on the stage but everywhere in the auditorium is gained by the use for the first time in New York of an electric lighting machine especially designed for the purpose. Intended primarily to delight the children, the management has found that this special feature also appeals to the grown-ups.

Dee Robinson Host to 18,000 Kiddies

The present did not come entirely from Mr. Robinson, the employees of the five theatres donating their services for the occasion.

A complete corps of chaperones was on hand, the chief of police had two special police at each theatre and an extra traffic cop downtown to safeguard the youngsters who crossed the streets. The five pictures secured were "Little Women," "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," "The Cruise of the Make Believe," "Little Miss Hoover" and "The Little Pirate."

Two lobby displays, one for "The Cup of Life" the other for "Love," recently used by C. H. Amos, manager of the Strand theatre, Spartansburg, S. C.

"Castle Door" Advertises "Man's Home"

A "castle door" especially designed for the engagement and a remarkable representation of the real thing had a place at each side of the Capitol lobby entrance. The ornamentation in pseudo-iron filagree work was especially effective. The "Man's Home" inscription was done in letters sawed from wood, dipped in dye to give them the proper antique appearance, and then tacked to the door.

New One for "Foolish Age"

Carrier and Blue Mouse Theatre Pulls Some Good Stuff at Seattle

"JIMMIE" CARRIER, R-C Pictures exploiteer, and John Hamrick, manager of the Blue Mouse theatre, Seattle, did some clever advertising for "The Foolish Age" recently.

For practically a week before the picture began at the Blue Mouse, newspapers carried large black-bordered advertisements entitled "We Are Mad." The body of the advertisement went on to explain the numerous merits of "The Foolish Age" and stated that it was such a high quality picture that no Seattle theatres would book it to be shown at regular prices.

It requested any church or other organization that would be willing to show it on a percentage basis to get in touch with the R-C Corporation immediately. The ad was signed by the R-C Pictures Corporation.

A day or so before the Blue Mouse showing began, the title of the advertisement was changed to "We Are Glad" and the story went on to tell that the Blue Mouse theatre had booked "The Foolish Age" to be shown at regular prices during the coming week. This series of ads was also signed by the R-C Corporation.

Many calls were received at the exchange from representatives of clubs and societies that agreed to sell tickets on a 20 per cent. commission basis. A satisfactory volume of sales was made on that arrangement, and 40 per cent. of the tickets so purchased were not used, thus giving the theatre a margin of profit above the commission. Considerable publicity followed this angle of exploitation.

Another novel idea was to print 10,000 ten-name blanks, announcing the showing of the picture, with the dates. Spaces were provided for ten signatures with addresses. Children were offered a free ticket for each sheets they presented with ten signatures. Six thousand of the sheets were returned, giving the material for a fine mailing list. The reaction of this publicity was felt strongly at the box office.

Lost Key Stunt

One hundred and fifty old keys were purchased at a very low cost. To these were attached tags with this text on one side: "If found, kindly return and receive reward." On the other side was written by hand: "Doris May, 1421 Fifth Avenue." This was the theatre address. These keys were distributed about the city. All but twenty were returned. The reward in each case was a free ticket to any performance of "The Foolish Age." The passes were marked and doormen were instructed to note how many paid admissions accompanied the passes. The total was 125 passes presented, with 160 paid admissions accompanying them.

Unemployed members of the American Legion were engaged to stick "Doris May Trail" signs on all highways and at all traffic posts, cautioning motorists to "Follow the Doris May Trail." The arrows pointed toward the Blue Mouse theatre. The text on those signs at gas service tanks and garages read: "Fill your gas tank here and follow the Doris May Trail to 'The Foolish Age' at the Blue Mouse theatre."

The usual newspaper space was taken and the full complement of billboards was used. The week proved a most profitable one—a real Christmas harvest for the theatre at a very low exploitation cost.

Another Exhibitor Makes Capital of Picture's Title

"THE Ten Dollar Raise" which has lent itself to scores of contests as an exploitation medium, received the same treatment from Stanley Chambers manager of the Palace theatre, Wichita Kansas.

Mr. Chambers hooked up with the Wichita Beacon in putting over the idea.

Consequently on the day the picture was announced, The Beacon carried on its front page, a two-column, six-inch, black-faced box, telling how The Beacon would give away fifty dollars to the writers of the five best letters answering the question: "What would ou do if you got a ten-dollar raise?" It was explained that the picture of such a name was appearing at the Palace. It appeared to be a little publicity and general-good-time stunt put on by the paper. In reality the Palace was furnishing the money for the winners. The motion picture editor of The Beacon was to act as the Judge in the contest.

A week was the time allotted for the answers. No one was barred, about the only rule laid down was a limit of 100 words for each essay.

And as usual the stunt went over like wild fire.

Expensive Oriental Decorations Used for Theatre Lobby

In connection with the showing of "Dawn of the East," the Princess theatre, one of the most beautiful houses in Denver, produced a striking effect by decorating the front rotunda with a number of Oriental rugs and tapestries.

These Oriental decorations were of brilliant red silk and satin, hand embroidered, and are valued at approximately $25,000. They are the property of a wealthy Chinese resident of Denver, and it is said their appearance under a very unusual arrangement of Oriental lighting in colors beggared description.

The general color motif of all the signs and special paintings was taken from the suggestion of the Realart press book on "Dawn of the East," black and yellow predominating.

Motorcycle Knights Interest Toledo Shoppers

STRAIGHT through the Christmas shopping crowds of Toledo, O., dashed the motor-cycled knights of King Arthur, heralded by a bugler and despatched by Doc. Horater, manager of the Alhambra Theatre, in exploitation of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court." Twelve riders, bearing banners and large board shields formed the ballyhoo.

By special arrangements with the Chief of Police, the motored parade was given the right of way on the down-town streets, thus preventing any delays or interruptions which would detract from the general impression of speed.

The motorcyclists were obtained through newspaper advertisements, which were displayed not as classified ads, but in the regular space allotted to motion picture announcements.

Thus two purposes were accomplished simultaneously. Not only did the ads attract the necessary men for the parade, but it also announced to the public that "A Connecticut Yankee" was at the Alhambra Theatre.

A suitable lobby front was used by Mr. Horater, and this, in conjunction with the parade, caused much favorable comment and drew much revenue from those who otherwise might have stepped up to a competitor's box-office.

Mr. Horater's motor-cycle knights are shown in a cut of the layout on the opposite page.

Police Help Advertise Kaliska's Show

When Manager Jack Kaliska, of the Forsyth theatre, Atlanta, played "Bucking the Tiger," he never counted on the police as aiding him in his exploitation, yet that is exactly what they did.

The central decoration of the lobby was an enormous roulette wheel, just like the roulette wheel of history and fiction, except that in the centre of the wheel was a cut-out of the star of the picture. This wheel revolved by electricity, being worked by the doorman. The back of the wheel was towards the doorman, and the current was worked in such a manner that nobody could tell on what number it would stop. So early in the afternoon on opening day two gay young men-about-town, on their way to dinner, discovered the wheel and welcomed it joyously. They started gambling, betting on the number on which the wheel would stop, and they were joined by one or two more convivial souls, so that within an hour the four had utterly forgotten where they were and were laying their bets with an enthusiasm only accounted for by the fact that Atlanta to gamblers is a "blue-law" town. A blue-coated minion of the law strolled by—and ten minutes later the patrol wagon was clanging its way to headquarters with four prominent young men. Of course, the papers got the story, and because of the prominence of the men they realized, for a wonder, that it was a real and not a publicity stunt. All of which aided the exploitation immeasurably.

Elaborate Lobby Display at Howard Theatre, Atlanta

The lobby of the Howard theatre, Atlanta, was turned into on Arabian's tent for the showing of "The Sheik."

The big columns were wrapped in Arabian draperies of red, green, yellow and orange. The box office was masked by curtains and simulated an opening at the back of the tent. There were couches, small tabourets, Arabian weapons hung on the tent-walls, a big bowl of sweetmeats beside the biggest couch, and, at one side, a life-sized cut-out of the Sheik himself, draped in real clothes, so that the appearance was almost startlingly life-like.

The prologue which Musical Conductor Leide staged for the picture was as effective as the front of the theatre. This prologue was suggested by the jacket of the book itself—which shows the Sheik kidnapping the girl. The curtains parted on a harem drop, and revealed a girl clad as an Arabian dancer. She danced, and at the climax of her dance the harem drop back of her vanishes, the light is transferred to the back of the stage, revealing a man dressed as the Sheik and mounted on a beautiful white horse. The man swoops from the saddle, catches the girl up in his arms and rides off with her.

Effective Lobby Front Made from Cut-Outs

A lobby front made up entirely of cut-outs from 24-sheets was used by the Empress theatre, Shenandoah, Iowa, during the recent presentation of "Over the Hill."

Large figures of the various characters in the picture were cut out of the posters and pasted to thick cardboard. These were attached to the walls of the lobby and also suspended in an original manner from the ceiling. Over the box office was placed a large sign in red letters announcing "This Way 'Over the Hill.'"

A special showing of the feature was held and twenty-five of the town's leading clergymen, teachers and society people attended. Their written praise of the production was used in the advertisements in Shenandoah's two newspapers.

Smith Stages Effective Prologue Number

WHEN "One Arabian Night" was given its Los Angeles showing at the Kinema on December 1, Edward A. Smith, managing director, staged one of the most effective prologues ever seen at that theatre.

The curtains opened on a scene illustrating a balcony in a palace. The audience gained a perspective as of sitting at an elevation, looking down upon the scene. The effect was gained by Smith by means of lighting and proper arranging of shadows. Briefly the prologue portrayed a young Prince entertained by three dancing girls. A singer arrives. Her voice accompanies the dancing. The The Prince motions the dancers to stop. He takes the singer into his arms—she is a new inspiration. Crash of cymbals. His old favorite, enraged, dances into the scene. She upraids the Prince because of his infatuation. She dances and dancing pleads with him to return to her. There is a battle between song and dance for the affection of the man. The dancer triumphs. The singer slowly disappears, her song trailing sadly. The dancer holds the stage with her frenzy of gladness. The curtains close as she throws herself into the Prince's arms. The dancing girls arise and wait on the couple.

Plasters City with "Over the Hill" Paper

Manager S. Cornish of the Sun theatre, Faribault, Minn., decided that in order successfully to exploit "Over the Hill" during a recent run, it would be necessary to plaster the small town with posters and window displays. Accordingly he devised the following plan:

At his own expense he contracted for the painting of fifteen window placards, each pertaining to some commodity sold by a local merchant. The placards were then shown to the merchants, who were asked to decorate an "Over the Hill" window. In some instances the cards offered free tickets and in others they merely tied up with the merchandise in the displays, which ranged from groceries and meats to electrical appliances and shoes.

Manager Cornish used several hundred one-sheets and a number of 24-sheets at scattered positions throughout the town and the roads leading in from adjacent counties. With a few newspaper announcements the exploitation was complete.

New Slant to the Mystery Girl Idea

In exploiting "The Girl in the Taxi" W. E. Drumbar, manager of the Strand theatre, Knoxville, Tenn., used the limousine idea with a mysterious lady inside described a number of times in these columns, but he added some special features of his own that gave the stunt added value.

Mr. Dunbar employed a local girl for his "mystery woman" but did not use a mask. Instead the art of make-up and the truth of "What a difference a little hair will make" was demonstrated.

The girl was a blonde, but with the aid of a hairdresser was transformed into a brunette. The news spread that "Miss Mystery" was at the hairdresser's and the traffic squad had to be called to clear out the sidewalk.

Knock-out "Sheik" Window

THE knock-out of "The Sheik" windows to date was the drug-store tieup in Topeka, Kansas, executed by Ray Jones of the Orpheum Theatre.

Shears cut-out all the little Arabs and horses from the Paramount posters and there was as many persons in the paper caravans as there were in the picture.

Stripped tents, and sand on the bottom completed the scheme. The drug store also added a perfume display with a cleverly worded card: The illustration below shows the dindow display which Mr. Jones originated.

TERRITORIAL SALES AND PURCHASES

In the Independent Field

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

Five Territories Sold on "School Days"

FIVE of the biggest state right buyers in the country have purchased the latest Warner Brothers production, Gus Edwards' "School Days," featuring Wesley Barry, it is announced.

Louis Berman, of the Independent Film Corporation, Philadelphia, has taken over eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware, District of Columbia, southern New Jersey and Virginia. The First National Exchange, Pittsburgh, has purchased the exclusive territorial rights to eastern Pennsylvania and West Virginia. Skirboll Brothers, Cleveland, have acquired the state of Ohio. J. L. Friedman of the Celebrated Players Film Corp., Chicago, has purchased the rights to northern Illinois and Indiana, and E. G. Tunstall, of Minneapolis, has bought the rights to Wisconsin, Minnesota, and North and South Dakota.

These five deals are said to be merely the forerunner of a number of other negotiations that are being consummated by Harry M. Warner.

James L. McGee Resigns from Selig Forces

One of the real pioneers of motion pictures in Los Angeles, James L. McGee, manager of the Selig studio and Zoo for many years, has resigned from all business activities to enjoy life at his Laughlin Park home.

Mr. McGee has been with Col. William N. Selig for fourteen years. He has never been connected with any other company. When that adventurous band of Selig pioneers invaded Los Angeles, March 23, 1909, to establish a studio at the corner of Eighth and Olive streets, "Jim" McGee was on the job.

Weiss Bible Pictures to Run in Five Cities

Louis Weiss, vice President of Artclass Pictures Corporation, announced this week that arrangements are now being completed for the presentation of the film production of the Old Testament in five key cities throughout the country simultaneously. Representatives of the organization are now in the cities in question negotiating for the leading legitimate theatre in each city.

Arrow Sells Big Special

"Ten Nights in a Barroom" Sold for New England After Premiere

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, President of Arrow Film Corporation, announces that the super-production "Ten Nights in a Barroom," produced by the Blazed Trail Productions, Inc., from the scenario of L. Case Russell, has been disposed of for New England to S. H. Bunce, well known exchange man, who will distribute through the Lightning Photoplay Corporation of New England.

Dr. Shallenberger states that the highest price ever paid for a State Rights production, with one exception, was paid for "Ten Nights in a Barroom" by Mr. Bunce, the only other picture ever sold for more money in New England territory was "A Birth of a Nation," and exchangemen and exhibitors who have been watching Arrow's tryout of this production in Rhode Island predict that "Ten Nights in a Barroom" will prove as big a success and perhaps exceed in gross rentals.

It will be recalled that when "Arrow" determined to ascertain box-office value of this attraction, they quietly slipped out to Providence and arranged to play the picture in three B. F. Keith's theatres. —B. F. Keith's Victory, Providence, R. I., B. F. Keith's Bijou, Woonsocket, R I., B. F Keith's Bijou, Pawtucket, R I.

Nothing was said to the trade when Arrow's exploitation representative went out and put the picture over with the result that it is now history. Every record held in each of the three houses was smashed by a wide margin. The word rapidly spread throughout New England with the result that exhibitors and exchangemen from all over New England territory flocked to Providence to see the actual demonstration of the tremendous box-office pulling power of this famous old drama. In the worst season of the year, the holiday season, with the most unfavorable weather conditions, this picture held an unbroken line every day of its presentation at all three theatres. People stood in the wind and rain, in the snow and slush for hours at a time, seeking to gain admittance and even in the face of the strongest opposition that competing theatres could offer.

Mr. Bunce, in the face of the strongest competition, closed a contract whereby he would secure the distribution rights for New England territory and he is now actively engaged in arranging for its presentation in Boston. Arrow states that one of the foremost of Boston's out-of-town theatres has been secured for an indefinite run, starting early in January.

"Jungle Goddess" Interests

Inquiries from Buyers Follow Initial Announcement of Release

A VERITABLE avalanche of inquiries is said to have descended upon the offices of the Export & Import Film Co., Inc., following their announcement of the placing of Col. Selig's new animal-jungle serial, "The Jungle Goddess," upon the independent market.

It is evidenced by the nature of these letters that Colonel Selig's reputation has created an exhibitor demand for his product, so much so, states an official of the Export & Import Film Company, that many of the biggest exchangemen are already making arrangements to come to New York to view the serial.

Colonel Selig's previous serials, "Miracles of the Jungle" and "The Lost City," are admitted to have set a high mark in animal chapter-pictures. Their success is unquestioned, due mainly to the skill of Col. Selig in making jungle pictures. Building on the experience gained with the aforementioned pictures, Colonel Selig, in cooperation with the Export & Import Film Company, last July began planning a new serial in which the new ideas which came to him after the other two animal-jungle serials had been completed were to be incorporated.

Colonel Selig realized the shortcomings of serials in general and also noticed that serial audiences are becoming more discriminate. This is largely due to the fact that the better class serials are now booking in the higher class photoplay houses and that the first-run house using serials is no longer an uncommon occurrence.

In making "The Jungle Goddess" all of these conditions were provided for. The censorship question was also carefully studied to eliminate the possibility of costly changes after the release.

C. B. C. Will Offer New Comedy Series

As its first acquisition for the new year, and because of the belief of the company officials that the coming year will see one of the biggest demands for good "short-stuff" ever recorded, the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation announces that it has secured for distribution a new series of two-reel comedies.

While no definite announcement is made yet of the exact nature of these comedies, it is hinted at that they will be in the nature of a big surprise and treat for the Independent Market—containing the names of at least two nationally known comic stars, and that each of these comedies will be of the highest type and funniest mirth-provoking calibre possible.

Eight comedies on the series are now practically ready for release, and more definite announcements are held up only pending the decision upon the general series name, and the preparation of "paper" and other accessories of distribution.

Excellent Lithographs for Russell Picture

An unusually fine line of lithographs have been produced by the American Show Print Company for Russell Productions, Inc., for use in advertising the Russell classic, "Shadows of Conscience."

The illustrations are taken from actual stills of the play and reflect the tone of the picture, giving the exhibitors and the public alike a chance to quickly grasp the style and character of this feature subject.

There are six styles of lithographs, of which there is one 24-sheet, two 3-sheets, one 6-sheets and two 1-sheets, done in five and six colors.

The sale possibilities of the paper are evidenced from the fact that the Pioneer Corporation, as well as the Liberty Theatre Corporation, of which George Levy is the head, have placed orders for thousand sheet lots of all style of the "Shadows" paper.

Fourth Williams Picture Is Announced

The fourth production of the Big Boy Williams Series, released by Aywon Film Corporation, is now ready for release. The title is "Across the Border." It is said to be an absorbing, suspense sustaining story, the scene of whose action is laid at the point where the four states, Utah, Colorado, Arizona and New Mexico meet.

Russell Clark Selling "The Two Orphans"

GRATIFYING activity in the independent field is the word that comes from the Russell Clark Syndicate, Inc., which reports that the Edison-Films-Torino attraction presented by Frank Vallee, "The Two Orphans," after a mere formal announcement only, has not only created widespread interest, but that First National Exchanges, Inc., has acquired the territory of New York and Greater New York, and Turner & Dahnken that of California. First National Exchanges, Inc., has also acquired the Sascha production Lucy Doraine in "The Love Slave," presented by Herz Film Corporation, for the same territory, and four Margery Wilson productions in which Margery Wilson is starred. The first of these to be released is "The Offenders." Others in production in the order named are "Miss Paul Revere," "Insinuation," and "Woman's Woman."

Chimpanzee to Star in Warner Bros. Comedies

Jack and Sam Warner, at the west coast studios of Warner Brothers, have purchased a chimpanzee to play in the new series of Monty Banks comedies now being produced under the personal supervision of Jack Warner, it is announced. They have named the chimpanzee "Bozo." After "Bozo" proves his worth as an actor, it is planned to make him a screen luminary, in a series of thirteen two reel comedies with a supporting cast including a number of talented youngsters and a group of animals.

Joe Weil Publicizing "The Jungle Goddess"

Joe Weil, of the Joe Weil Service, has been engaged by the Export & Import Film Company, Inc., to conduct their campaign on the new fifteen episode animal-jungle serial, "The Jungle Goddess," which Col. Wm. N. Selig has produced for this company and which is being placed on the independent market.

Under his arrangement with the Export & Import Film Company he will drop all other work to concentrate his efforts in putting "The Jungle Goddess" over in a bigger

Second Neal Hart Release Announced

Neal Hart's second release of the new five-reel feature series is now in the cutting, and William Steiner Productions have started on the third one. "Tangled Trails," the first release, has gone over big and the franchise holders are pleased, most of whom have ordered extra prints.

His second release is entitled "Rangeland," and is a thrilling story of the Texas cattle ranges.

Better Independent Films

Russell Clark Believes Improved Standard Stabilizes Market

THE greatly improved standard of independent offerings, in the opinion of Russell Clark, vice-president and general manager of the Russell Clark Syndicate, Inc., has already stabilized the market to such an extent that prospects were never brighter than they are for the new year so lately ushered in. As proof of his assertion Mr. Clark said: "If you compare only the independent offerings with those of a few seasons ago you will get only half of the story and less than half of the truth. You should also compare the standing of the independents in the industry to-day with their relative position of say two years back, Then only will you realize to the full the advance that has been made. I do not mean that there are better men in the field—not at all—because many of the same men went through the period of which I speak—a time, it seemed, when every man's hand appeared to be against them, and when apparently they were welcome nowhere. Yet those same men to-day rank with the foremost in the industry; in fact the word "independent" is no longer a term of reproach.

"You may be sure," continued Mr. Clark, "that this pleasing state of affairs didn't just happen. If there were ever independent producers and distributors who deserved ill-treatment, it is the clean and progressive element that has driven them out. Conditions generally the past year have helped us greatly. Splendid productions have been obtainable for the independents with ready cash, and other circumstances well known to all have made the exhibitors more eager to examine and to book our productions than in the old days we ever dared hope for. In the case of my own firm, we are setting a pace in releasing in the independent field four new specially reduced features, made, I mean, for the purpose. I refer to the Margery Wilson Productions, in all of which Miss Wilson is starred. The first, 'The Offenders,' has just been announced, and we have in production to be released in the order named, 'Miss Paul Revere,' 'Insinuation,' and 'Woman's Woman.' We have just released a Sascha picture called 'The Love Slave,' in which Lucy Doraine stars. The reception accorded the foregoing and also my third present release, the Edison - Film - Torino attraction, 'The Two Orphans,' is, to my mind, all the evidence needed that good pictures are to be had for cash, that they are welcomed by exhibitors, and in consequence we are preparing elaborate props and exploitation material for all our productions in anticipation of an extraordinarily successful year."

Release Date for Series

"Sherlock Holmes" Stories to Be Ready Jan. 30, States Alexander

JANUARY 30th, 1922, is release date set for the first of the "Sherlock Holmes" series, entitled "The Man with the Twisted Lip." There will be one release every two weeks thereafter in the following order: "The Beryl Coronet," "The Resident Patient," "The Devil's Foot," "The Dying Detective," "A Case of Identity," "Scandal," "In Bohemia," "The Noble Bachelor," "The Yellow Face," "Redheaded League," "Copper Beeches," "Empty House," "Tiger of San Pedro," "Priory School" and "Solitary Cyclist."

Great enthusiasm is being shown by all exhibitors for this forthcoming release, it is stated. The Co-operative Film Exchange of San Francisco and Los Angeles are ready to release the first four subjects in January with the first run accounts numbering the biggest theatres in their district and they were compelled to cancel the bookings in view of the fact that the series would not be ready until the schedule date. The reason for the delay in the release date of the first subject was occasioned by the fact that the art work in conjunction with the titling was delayed.

It is the intention of the Alexander Film Corporation to secure the best art work obtainable in conjunction with the titles.

The McClure Syndicate of New York are rapidly placing the subjects in short story form in various newspapers in the United States. The following is a list of newspapers who have contracted for the "Adventures of Sherlock Holmes" short stories:

"The Four Seasons" Has Universal Appeal

Harry J. Shepard, of the Kineto Company of America, was discussing this week "The Four Seasons" and the many inquiries that have been made about it from persons in all walks of life. "A very unusual question about 'The Four Seasons'," he said, "is to ask just what it is in this picture which gives it such a human appeal; which creates in so many different types of persons a genuine sense of satisfaction; helps them to take away something from viewing that picture which they did not have before they saw it.

"The logical answer, as I see it, is that 'The Four Seasons' speaks the universal language. It is a pictorial account of something with which everyone is dimly familiar, yet something we never have seen in its continuity. 'The Four Seasons' tells the story of a whole year of Nature."

Manheimer Sees More Interest in Serials

That the renewal of interest in serials is not due to any change in the taste of the public, but that present business conditions have enabled the exhibitor to measure the drawing power of different kinds of pictures, and the serial has thus been brought back into its own, is the conclusion of E. S. Manheimer who, as General Manager of Photoplay Serials Corporation, is experiencing exceptional success in the distribution of the new Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber serial, "The Mysterious Pearl."

"Just as there has been no let-up in the use of continued stories in the magazine and newspaper field," says Mr. Manheimer, "there has been no change in the attitude of the story-loving public toward the chaptered photoplay. It would seem plausible that present conditions are responsible for the definite growth of interest in the serial during the past few months; that, now that the public is shopping, exhibitors again have a chance to note the increase in business which follows the showing of a serial."

Rialto Reports Many Comedy Sales

Lou Rogers, president of the Rialto Productions, Inc., reports a number of sales on the Funny Face Comedies and Marcus Cartoons for territorial rights. Harry Chanas, Standard Film Service Company has closed for his four offices, namely Cleveland, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh and Detroit. Joe Friedman of the Celebrated Players Film Corp., closed for Chicago and Milwaukee offices. Marion Kohn of the Federated Film Distributors, Inc., has closed for San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Neva Gerber in the Arrow-Ben Wilson drama, "The Price of Youth," heads a very strong cast which includes Spottiswood Aiken, Jack Pratt and many others prominent on the silver sheet.

Territory Sold on "Love Slave"

Russell Clark Names Buyers with First Announcement

WITH the first trade press announcement of the release by the Russell Clark Syndicate, Inc., of the Sascha production, Lucy Doraine in "The Love Slave," presented by Herz Film Corporation, comes the announcement that the following territory has already been sold: To First National Exchanges, Inc., New York, and Greater New York; to Turner & Dahnken, California.

At least twenty per cent of the total, it is estimated, will have been contracted for by the date of this publication, the statement having come from Mr. Russell. Clark, who has been giving his personal attention to the flood of inquiries which have already reached his offices. The fact, in Mr. Clark's opinion, is due to both the timeliness of the picture and to the extremely favorable reception accorded the star, Lucy Doraine, in her first release in this country—"Good and Evil."

Of this production, also made by Sascha, it was said by many reviewers that it launched not only an extraordinarily beautiful woman, but one whose emotional work was far above what we are accustomed to. That her latest vehicle is worthy of her talents is said by those who have seen "The Love Slave" to be putting it mildly. As Kora, a beautiful Arabian slave girl, rescued from a cruel Kurd master by a young Parisian traveller, George Harnet, who later takes her to Paris, Mlle. Doraine is said to make the most of her opportunity to convince her audiences that the Oriental temperament as displayed in affairs of the heart is a fiery and tempestuous element that requires real histrionic fire to portray. The element of timeliness, according to Mr. Clark, counts strongly in the independent field, which was quickly attracted to "The Love Slave" by the fact that its release was concurrent with the popular Oriental subjects, "One Arabian Night," and "The Sheik." In justice to its producers and sponsors it may be stated that "The Love Slave" was produced before either of the others, and that the similarity of theme, that of a passionate love affair between a man and woman of different race, was accidental and not premeditated. The East against West story has given the producers of "The Love Slave" an opportunity to film authentic Oriental scenes in Old Damascus mentioned so frequently in the Bible, and in the Arabian desert, atmosphere being supplied not only by the scenery, the streets, mosques, bazaars, markets and desert encampments, but by the natives themselves in picturesque costumes, an environment into which the exotic beauty of Mlle. Doraine is said to fit as if she were born to it.

Delay in issuing "The Love Slave" press book and exploitation material, now completed, is said by Mr. Clark to be due largely to the elaborate campaign for which some of the foregoing conditions gave opportunity; the fullest advantage having been taken of the rich and warmly colorful Oriental scenes, as well as the elaborate sets and surroundings of those scenes which are laid on the Continent, in Paris and in Trieste, Italy.

The story of "The Love Slave" is from the pen of Georges Ohnet, the celebrated French novelist, best known in this country, perhaps, by "The Iron Master," which became a stage classic as the vehicle for a number of years of the well-known and popular English stars, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Kendal, and later a screen production in which the late Nat Goodwin was starred, it being among the first of the stage plays to be so adapted.

New Joan Film Release Ready

"Nine Points of the Law" for Immediate Distribution

JOAN Film Sales Co., Inc., announces that the distribution of its new picture "Nine Points of The Law" will begin immediately in the Independent field. Although they were asked to hold this picture back until later in the season, the Joan officials decided that right now was the proper time to give exhibitors throughout the entire country a chance to make some money for themselves now when it is most needed.

From those who have seen the picture in the past few days have come words of praise for its box office appeal, not alone from the point of its entertainment value and its power as an audience picture but because of the powerful box office title that offers no end of strong arm exploitation stunts, states Joan.

"Exhibitors," states Joan Film, "have come to realize that now of all times in the history of the business, good titles are absolutely necessary, more so, perhaps, than at any former period for the industry has never before passed thru such a stage as now.

"Full advantage of the power of the title has been taken by the staff of Joan in the preparation of herculean business bringing aids, ideas, suggestions and exploitation stunts for theatres.

Joan realizes the tremendous importance of helping the exhibitor sell the picture to his public. State Rights men and Independent Exchange men everywhere have come to acknowledge Joan's exploitation and advertising for exhibitors as the character of matter that puts pictures across.

"In Nine Points Of The Law," exhibitors have boundless opportunities to use stunts that local conditions will enable them to make use of in connection with the mass of ideas, suggestions and exploitation stunts prepared, illustrated and described in the press book."

Trade papers praise of this picture is of the wholesome kind. The Moving Picture World said: "Well acted, well directed, tells its story in a way that holds the interest." The Motion Picture News said: "There is no doubt that the interest of the audience will be held throughout. . . . suspense is admirable"... two separate threads of story cleverly worked together . . . type of picture which is ever in demand".

Burr's Novelty Review Continues Popular

Burr's Novel Reviews continue to hold a high place in the motion picture field, according to recent announcement. At the conclusion of a long picture, especially if it is a drama where one is held at high tension, a short reel with three or four different subjects never fails to rest the audience and have it wish for more. The pen and ink comics by J. J. McManus never fail to create joyous outbursts of laughter. These subjects are favorites with the young folks, especially the kiddies, who never let a comedy situation pass without notice.

The slow motion scenes usually pertain to athletic stunts, which the modern American boy and girl would not miss for anything in the world. It is only natural that every young woman is interested in the fashions of the day. She wants to see the latest dress creations, the smartest hats and the nattiest sport cloth. In Burr's Novelty Review such are features.

Two Episodes of Warner Serial Ready

The first two episodes of the Warner Brothers serial production, "Shadows of the Jungle," being produced at the west coast studios of the Warner organization under the direction of Sam and Jack Warner, have been completed and are ready for the state rights market, according to a recent announcement.

"Shadows of the Jungle" costars Grace Darmond and Phil McCullough. The locale is laid in the wilds of Africa, and over 1,500 animals belonging to Al G. Barnes, a well known circus man, are being used in the production.

Palmer Offices Opened in N. Y. and Chicago

As a result of the recent trip East of Roy L. Manker, vice President and General Manager, and Samuel M. Warmbath, treasurer, of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation, from which they just returned, the scope of the service rendered by the Corporation has been considerably widened. Palmer offices have been established at 332 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago, and at 527 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The New York office is in charge of Frances White Elijah, of Santa Barbara, Cal. In addition to branch bureaus of its department of education which will be maintained at the Chicago and New York establishments, there wil also be conducted subordinate offices of the Photoplay Sales Department.

Hoxie Series Is Sold for Michigan

Critics Call New Mix Picture His Best

"Sky High," the Fox picture featuring Tom Mix, which is scheduled for release January 22, affords the star a perfect vehicle for the performance of astounding feats, according to several trade paper critics.

A few of the reviews follow, in part: Wid's Daily, under the caption "Mix's Best Picture, with the Grand Canyon for a Background," says: 'Tom Mix's current production is the best he has ever offered and one of the finest stunt pictures ever seen." Motion Picture News: "There is probably no doubt that every exhibitor and patron thought that Tom Mix had reached the peak of his pictures, but Mix has shown in his latest release that he is a figure to be reckoned with. 'Sky High' is well named and before you know it you are in for a pictorial treat which is positively amazing in its scenic scope." Moving Picture World "'Sky High' appropriately describes this latest Tom Mix feature, as it ranks with his other successes." Exhibitors' Trade Review "Mr. Mix is at his best. Mix is seen in what is probably his best picture to date."

South America Good Market in 1922

John L. Day, South American representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation returned to New York on December 23 from a stay of several months in Brazil and Argentina in the interests of the foreign department under the direction of E. E. Shauer. Considerable time was devoted to the Paramount offices in Rio de Janeiro, Peliculas D'Luxo Da America Do Sul, where extensive arrangements were made for increased distribution facilities during the coming year.

"Despite the low position of Brazilian exchange, the motion picture industry has enjoyed good business during the last few months," said Mr. Day. "The outlook for 1922 business is much more cheerful. There is a firm belief that Brazil's exchange position will be considerably improved during the coming months, and this will have a most beneficial effect upon the motion picture industry. Despite the efforts of foreign producers to gain a strong foothold in Brazil, the highest grade American pictures continue to hold first place and cannot be displaced in the estimation of the critical public. During 1922, as in the past, Brazil should continue to be one of the greatest markets for American pictures in the Southern hemisphere."

Fred Stone in "Billy Jim"

R-C Sets Release for January 29; Based on Jackson Gregory's Story

R-C. Pictures announces for release on January 29th, Fred Stone in "Billy Jim," which introduces the comedian in the sort of role to which he can best lend his peculiar talents as an entertainer. The story was written by Jackson Gregory, noted writer of Western tales.

Stone appears in this production as a rollicking, good humored cowpuncher who romps through life with a song on his lips and good cheer in his heart. It is a thoroughly Western picture with a colorful Western setting and atmosphere, but Stone invests the character of "Billy Jim" with infectious humor and the laughs tumble out one after another in swift succession.

There is an interesting element of romance in the picture, too, which is built about "Billy Jim's" pursuit of wealthy neighbor's daughter, and his courtship of her. There are many laugh-provoking incidents in his strange wooing.

Under the direction of Frank Borzage, who, it will be remembered, directed "Humoresque," the plot of the story has been developed splendidly. Some of the most beautiful Western scenery ever converted to the screen is used as settings for "Billy Jim." Many of the scenes were taken at Banff, in the Canadian Rockies, and are simply overwhelming in their grandeur and beauty.

"Billy Jim" is an Andrew J. Callaghan Production. Jackson Gregory's story was adapted to the screen by Frank Howard Clark, and the cast includes, besides Fred Stone, Millicent Fisher, George Hernandez, William Bletcher, Marian Skinner and Frank Thorne.

Aids for "Pathe Playlets"

Each Issue of Series of Fifteen to Have New Set of Selling-Aids

EVERY possible assistance will be rendered exhibitors by Pathe Exchange, Inc., in "putting over" the series of three-reel "Pathe Playlets," the first of which will be Frank Keenan's "The Midnight Stage," set for release on January 29th.

An entirely new complement of selling-aids will be issued on each of the series of fifteen. The exploitation department of Pathe is preparing an elaborate campaign book, containing material on each of the fifteen productions. Special press stories will be included on each picture.

One, three, and six sheets have been ordered for each attraction of the series, and star cuts will be available on all the leading players. Lobby displays, a slide and five black and white photographs, will complete the exploitation material.

Immediate success is due these "Pathe Playlets" if the response meeting Pathe's initial announcement of their release is to be accepted as a criterion.

The remarkable casts assembled for each of the "Pathe Playlets" appeal greatly to the exhibitor, for each of the series contains one or more names, that appear to-day in electric lights in front of the finest theatres in the country.

The return of Irene Castle to vaudeville, at a salary reputed to be $3,000, a record-breaking figure for the variety houses, serves to again establish the popularity of this star who will appear in several of the "Pathe Playlets." Another prominent figure in the film world to-day and who appears in the "Pathe Playlets" is Helene Chadwick.

A scene from "The Wall Flower," Rupert Hughes's latest picture for release through Goldwyn

"Quo Vadis" Is Listed as "Greatest Film"

"Quo Vadis," the famous Italian spectacular film, released in its 1922 form through Wid Gunning, Inc., has just received the honor of being named "the world's greatest motion picture," by the editors of The Book of Knowledge, the world-known publication, millions of copies of which have been sold.

In the edition of The Book of Knowledge just issued, there is a special article devoted to "Quo Vadis," on page 5142 of Volume 16. It reads, in part:

"One of the most wonderful motion pictures ever produced is 'Quo Vadis,' a film based upon a book written by the famous Polish author, Henri Sienkiewicz. It is in eight reels, and the most striking scene is a group of early Christian martyrs in the vast arena of the Coliseum about to be devoured by the wild beasts.

"The lions are first seen massed together at one end of the great amphitheatre. In the next picture they advance slowly and stealthily, and suddenly Christians and lions mingle in a heap on the ground, while the beasts seem fairly to rend their prey. This scene is so real that it is almost impossible to believe it is not actually happening."

No More Daytime Noise at United Studios

Through an innovation just put into effect by M. C. Levee, President of United Studios, the carpenters and set-builders at United will work hereafter at nights, thus eliminating the daytime noises that hamper production and affect the work of the directors and players.

The new plan will enable the carpenters to carry on their work without interruption and will do away with the lost motion caused by their enforced cessation of activities when the director blows his whistle for "quiet" before he begins a rehearsal of the taking of a scene.

Strong Cast in "Handle With Care"

The Al and Ray Rockett production, "Handle with Care," which is scheduled for release by Associated Exhibitors on January 22nd, has no less than seven well known screen players in the cast,. Grace Darmond is said to have been afforded a splendid opportunity to display her beauty in the latest fashions. Patsy Ruth Miller, who plays the ingenue, appears to great advantage, and the male members of the cast are well chosen for depicting various types and personalities. Prominent among them are Harry Meyers, Jimmy Morrison, William Austin, Landers Stevens and William Courtleigh.

"Bride's Play" Due on Broadway

"THE Bride's Play," starring Marion Davies, will have its first New York screening at the Rialto Theatre, beginning Sunday, January 8th. "The Bride's Play" is Miss Davies' first picture after "Enchantment" in which she was accorded much praise.

In "The Bride's Play" made by Cosmopolitan Productions and released by Paramount, Miss Davies has a vehicle that is not only gorgeous in settings and quality of story, but one that presents her at her best as an actress of charm, vivacity, winsomeness and appeal. Embroidered into its tapestry-like texture are many of the quaintest and most whimsical of Irish legends and customs.

The story was written by Donn Byrne for Hearst's Magazine. Mr. Byrne also wrote "The Woman God Changed," a Cosmopolitan Production, that has enjoyed great success. Mr. Byrne is of Irish extraction and spent several years in Ireland, studying ancient folklore and the customs of the present-day inhabitants so that he knows whereof he speaks when he writes of the Emerald Isle. Mildred Considine, who has more than one hundred screen plays to her credit, wrote the scenario.

George W. Terwilliger, noted as a critic and scenario writer as well as a director, directed "The Bride's Play," infusing into the production the delicate imagery and rich imaginative touches of Donn Byrne. Ably seconding the director was Ira H. Morgan, cameraman, who proves in the production his thorough knowledge of the technique of the camera.

The title of the picture is that of an ancient ceremony at Irish weddings. After the wedding ritual, the men guests form a circle and the bride goes from one to another, asking each: "Are you the one I love best?" Of course each guest, unless he is looking for trouble, says "No." When she reaches her husband and puts the query, it is his cue to say: "Yes, I am the one you love best," and fold her in his arms.

The Mediaevel wedding scene in "The Bride's Play," a new Cosmopolitan production and a Paramount picture. Marion Davies is starred

There are two wedding ceremonies in "The Bride's Play," each in the same chapel which setting, by the way, is one of Joseph Urban's finest creations. One wedding is seen in a mediaeval interlude which is rich in pomp and pageantry. The second is a modern nuptials. In both instances Miss Davies is the bride. The star plays two parts—that of Aileen Barrett, a modern, mischievous, sprightly and lovable Irish girl of to-day and that of Enid of Cashel, a radiant maid of the Twelfth Century. In the latter role Miss Davies is seen in her own blonde tresses.

Much of the action centres about an ancient castle which is one of the most majestic ever built for the screen, and is, moreover, notable for the remarkable detail of its carving, fretwork and other details. The costumes, the churchly implements and the knights' armor are as authentic as patient study and contemporary knowledge can make them.

This same care and superb effect are shown in the costumes. All of the splendor of the Golden Age of Gil Blas is reflected in the mediaeval wedding gown worn by Miss Davies. The gown was discovered by the star in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, in New York City, in a treasured fabric depicting the marriage of Jeanne, Queen of Navarre, to Phillip V, King of France.

Elaborate Owen Moore Picture

THE Selznick Company has been sending out statements to the effect that their new picture starring Owen Moore, now being completed, is the biggest production which they have ever made. When it is recalled that there have been a number of Owen Moore pictures made by the Selznick Company—and all of them of the program variety in so far as cost of production is concerned—there is considerable curiosity as to just what this new production is to be. William Faversham in "The Sin That Was His," for which a complete "Canadian village" was built in Fort Lee, N. J., and a number of other Selznick Pictures are remembered as "big" pictures from the production standpoint. It is a natural query as to just how a forthcoming release starring Owen Moore, whose forte is farce comedy, is to surpass all previous Selznick studio efforts.

Exhibitors who have been playing the Selznick product for some time and are acquainted with the Selznick sales plan will recall that during the season 1920-21 the Owen Moore releases were sold as star series, just the same as Selznick releases starring Elaine Hammerstein, Eugene O'Brien and Conway Tearle. For the season 1921-22, however, the Owen Moore pictures are being sold individually, making them specials in a sense, and making it possible to vary them greatly as to their nature and the cost of production of each release.

It is in taking advantage of these new conditions surrounding the Owen Moore pictures that the Selznick Company are producing the biggest picture of their career with Owen Moore as a star.

Henry Lehrman, widely known director and producer who has had his own releases through big distributing organizations, joined the Selznick organization under a special arrangement with Vice-President Myron Selznick to turn out the big Owen Moore picture which is listed as a Henry Lehrman Production. The story is by Mr. Lehrman and he and Mr. Moore spent many weeks on it before the first camera work was done. A cast of unusual excellence was engaged to support the star, some of the members having been brought on from the Pacific Coast. Pauline Garon, prominent in the "Lilies of the Field" success now on Broadway, is Mr. Moore's leading woman. Robert Cain, Tom Wilson, Frank Wunderlee, Togo Yammamoto, Adolf Millar, and Nita Naldi are also in the company.

No permanent title for the production has yet been selected. The story is of the same general farce nature as others which Mr. Moore has done with so much success, notably "The Poor Simp," "The Chicken in the Case," and "A Divorce of Convenience." It is filled to overflowing with novelty, however, and it is said that few pictures ever made before have had so great a variety of action and location.

"Why Men Forget" Set for February Issue

Scheduled for release during February is "Why Men Forget," presented by R-C Pictures, which promises to the reviewers and the photoplay-going public something new in the form of screen productions. The play, "Why Men Forget," is adapted from the novel "Demos," by George Gissing, an English writer.

A fine cast was engaged by Director Clift to produce "Why Men Forget." Milton Rosmer, in the leading role, that of Richard Mutimer, has gone from success to success on the British stage and screen, but in "Why Men Forget" he has outstripped all his former efforts.

The cast also includes Miss Haidee Wright, who is described as having a wonderful gift for unforced pathos. She is a natural screen mother and one of the most likeable characters that ever appeared on a screen. Gerald McCarthy, who has a large following in Great Britain and Continental Europe, has a role that gives him opportunity to display his histrionic talents to the best advantage. Others in the cast are Vivian Gibson, Evelyn Brent, Irene Foster, Bettina Campbell, Daisy Campbell, Olaf Hytton, James C. Butt, Leonard Robson, Warwick Ward, George Travers and Thomas E. Montague-Thacker.

Frisco Judge Praises Gunning Release

Judge Thomas F. Graham of San Francisco gave an unsolicited testimonial to the interest and value of "What Do Men Want?" when that Lois Weber production was shown by Wid Gunning, Inc., at the Tivoli theatre, San Francisco, recently.

In a letter written by Judge Graham to William A. Crank, manager of the San Francisco office, whose guest he was at the showing, Judge Graham said the picture had a convincing quality and that the theme of the play was true to life. He also pointed out that the play had particular appeal to young married people.

Requests Extra Days on "The Beggar Maid"

The Strand Theatre in Camden, N. J., one of the foremost in the Stanley circuit, having originally booked "The Beggar Maid," released by Hodkinson, for a three-day engagement, has made a request for three additional days on the same subject, according to advices received at the Hodkinson home office from Sales Manager Gebhardt of the Hodkinson Philadelphia branch.

Christie, "Heavy" and Dancer Marry

Victor Rodman, chief "heavy" of the Christie company, and Dagmar Dahlgren, a classical dancer who has appeared in Christie comedies, were married recently in Los Angeles. The two became acquainted when they were playing in "A Pair of Sixes," a late Educational-Christie release.

On the left the famous Monte Carlo set used in "Foolish Wives," and in the center and right are two action scenes from Eric Von Stroheim's gigantic creation for Universal, which will open in New York on January 11th

Cosmopolitan Manager to Tour Country

Hal Hodes, sales manager of Cosmopolitan Productions, left New York on January 3rd for an extended trip through the United States for the purpose of getting into direct touch with those who distribute and those who exhibit the product of International Film Service Co., Inc.

Mr. Hodes' itinerary will take him to the following cities: Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Omaha, Denver, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Dallas, New Orleans, Atlanta and Charlotte.

Hodkinson Specials in Big Newark House

During the past week six Hodkinson released productions were booked by the Shubert New York Office for their leading Newark theatre, the Rialto. The productions are "A Certain Rich Man," "The Face of the World," "The Mysterious Rider," "Fifty Candles," "Cameron of the Royal Mounted" and "Jane Eyre."

Each of these productions has been booked for a week's run. The engagement begins with "A Certain Rich Man" for the week of January 9th, and may run in successive engagements until the schedule is exhausted.

"Physical Counterpart" in Role of Lincoln

Heralded by Universal Film as "almost an exact physical counterpart" of Abraham Lincoln, Joel Day, a player of modest reputation, is introduced in the role of the great Emancipator in Universal's new serial, "In the Days of Buffalo Bill." Mr. Acord is the star of this production, and Edward Laemmle is the director. Mr. Laemmle is said to have been most fortunate in his selection of Mr. Day as the latter's interpretation of the important role is stated to be remarkable and to take rank with the acting of Elmer Grandon, Logan Paul, Joseph Hennerberry, and Frank McGlynn.

Laemmle Makes Unusual Offer

FOLLOWING his announcement in the advertising pages of last week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS that he will cut rental prices to any exhibitor who can show that he is operating his theatre at a loss, Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Film, in a supplementary statement issued this week from the Universal home-office, repeats his offer, adding that it is his conviction that "everyone in the moving-picture business should be given a fighting chance" and that towards this end he "will meet the exhibitor half-way." Mr. Laemmle's statement, addressed to the exhibitor, follows:

"Prove to me that you are actually operating at a loss and I will authorize Universal's nearest representative to cut film rentals enough to enable you to at least break even!

"This offer does not apply to any exhibitor who is breaking even or making a profit.

"It is intended only to prevent theatre failures.

"Every producer in the business knows that some of you are losing money. For a long time your complaints were taken with a grain of salt, because some of you complain all the time, even when you are cleaning up, just to hammer rental prices down.

"But there is no denying now that your complaints, in many cases, are justified and true.

"Therefore, regardless of whether you are now using Universal pictures or whether you have never used them, you can get them at a price which will stop your losses the instant you prove to our representative that there is a loss.

"The best houses in the country have discovered the amazing improvement in Universal pictures. They know we have improved our stories, they know we use the best settings in the world. They finally realize that we have the best photography and the cleverest lighting. And what's more—

"We've cut 'the waste from thousands to hundreds, from hundreds to dollars and from dollars to pennies. We can make better pictures than anybody else for less money than anybody else—and we're doing it every day!

"Never in the history of the industry did any company produce such a steady supply of excellent pictures. Never were such fine pictures sold on such a close margin of profit.

"You never needed Universal more than you need it today. And today it makes the bona fide offer outlined above. If other companies follow suit, so much the better. But if they don't, Universal stands back of the proposition with every bit of its resources.

"The only exception I make is our million dollar picture, 'Foolish Wives.' I'm going to get every dollar I can for that production because I've got to. You need no diagram to show you why.

"I don't believe any exhibitor will begrudge paying record prices for the first real million-dollar picture in history. Some of the biggest showmen have offered me their theatres on my own terms as an appreciation of what 'Foolish Wives' will mean to the whole moving-picture art.

"But outside of that one picture, I say again: Show the nearest Universal representative your books. Prove to him that you are in bad shape during these present times, and I will authorize him to make a deal that will pull you out of your hole and at least let you live.

"Understand clearly, the Universal company, although the strongest in the business today, is feeling the terrific pressure of the present times. We are in exactly the same boat as many of you are in. Times are tough. But we are probably better able to finance ourselves through troublous times than you are. That is why I take upon myself the burden of this offer.

"I mean this from the bottom of my heart, and there is not one single string to my offer!

"My cards are on the table.

"Shoot!"

Arliss Vehicle Is Titled

"The Ruling Passion" Chosen for Adaptation of Derr Biggers' Story

AFTER much consideration George Arliss, star in the highly successful film version of "Disraeli," and officials of Distinctive Productions, Inc., have decided on "The Ruling Passion" as the title for the new Arliss picture, which has been completed and is now being assembled and titled for an early release, the exact date not yet having been determined.

"The Ruling Passion" is a screen adaptation of a short story by Earl Derr Biggers, published in the Saturday Evening Post under the title "Idle Hands." This original title was set aside for the reason that there already is a film by that name.

In this new picture Mr. Arliss will be seen in a role entirely different from anything he has ever presented either on the speaking stage or on the screen. "The Ruling Passion" is a comedy drama, wherein Mr. Arliss stars as a benevolent philanthropist, who resumes business life after making a fortune and retiring and finds therein the key to health and greater contentment than he had known since success first crowned his early efforts. The role is said to be filled with delicious and delicate humor, every shade of which is brought out by Mr. Arliss' inimitable genius.

The scenario of "The Ruling Passion" is the work of Forrest Halsey, with the direction of Harmon Weight. The photography is by Harry A. Fischbeck, while Clark Robinson acted as art director.

With Mr. Arliss in the cast of "The Ruling Passion" are Doris Kenyon, Edward Burns, Ida Darling, J. W. Johnston, Ernest Hilliard, Harold Walridge and Brian Darley.

Gunning Month Drive Opens

Early Sales Reports Presage Record Bookings

WID GUNNING Month has gotten off to a flying start that bids fair to make it a record-breaker, according to sales reports from all the Wid Gunning, Inc., exchanges which have already been received at the home offices of the organization.

Using as their motto, "Start the New Year Right—Wid Gunning Month—January, 1922," the members of the sales force in the field have gone out and are exceeding even their own best previous efforts in corralling exhibitors to sign up for the series of big specials which the Gunning company is offering for release during the present season.

As an additional incentive to the members of the force to smash all standing figures, Wid Gunning announces a sales competition between the various exchanges, with substantial money prizes to the four branches which turn in the greatest amount of cash film-rental collections during the month of January, in proportion to its office percentage.

There will be $2,000 in prizes, according to the announcement from the Gunning offices. To the office which stands at the head of the honor roll at the end of the month, a prize of $1,000 will be awarded. The runner-up among the offices will get $500; third prize will be $300; and fourth, $200. In case of a tie each of the offices so tied will be given the full award designated for the position they occupy in the race.

The keenest sort of competition is already in evidence, and each office is going about the task of getting new business with all its wits sharpened, and its energies working overtime. One of the features of the contest is the fact, the announcement states, that the smaller offices have just as much of a chance to get in the prize-winning class as the big fellows.

"We have given many reasons why the exhibitor should play with this organization," said Wid Gunning, in making his announcement of the Gunning Month program. "The most important of all these is the fact that this organization takes the exhibitor's dollar and divides it between the man who is actually selling and exploiting the film and the man who has made the film, with the big end of the Dollar to the man who made the film, this money being available then for the making of better films for the future."

Mr. Gunning paid a tribute to the members of the organization's sales staff and to the branch managers. He stated that many of the salesmen had walked right into the theatres where the exhibitor had filled all his playing dates months in advance, and had been given play dates for Gunning products, because of their industry in going after the exhibitor and because of the outstanding quality of the Gunning releases.

According to the reports thus far received from the exchanges, the big Gunning specials have reached the height of their stride for January. "What Do Men Want?" the big Lois Weber spectacle, is reported as breaking house record after house record wherever shown.

"Our Mutual Friend" is winning a host of friends both among the lovers of Dickens' stories and those who are partial to good melodramatic pictures, with plot and a leaven of humor. It is being endorsed by schools, critics and the public generally, everywhere, as "the perfect movie."

"The Blot," another Lois Weber production, is reported as among the popular leaders, while "Quo Vadis," in a brand-new dress, is crowding as many theatres as it did in its spectacular premiere years ago. "The Girl from God's Country," the Nell Shipman picture of the North Woods, "Good and Evil," the Continental spectacle featuring Lucy Doraine, and "The Old Oaken Bucket," the great human-interest picture, are all being booked by both big and little houses, it is reported by the Gunning offices.

New Hodkinson Release

"At the Sign of the Jack o'Lantern" Will Be Issued in January

"AT the Sign of the Jack O'Lantern," a Renco Film Production directed by Lloyd Ingraham, is the next picture scheduled for release by the W. W. Hopkinson Corporation, according to an announcement from the Hodkinson Home Office this week. This is the second Renco production to be released by Hodkinson, the first having been "Lavender and Old Lace," by Myrtle Reed. "At the Sign of the Jack O'Lantern" is also a Myrtle Reed story.

The exploitation possibilities of "At the Sign of the Jack O'Lantern" has prompted the Hodkinson advertising department to issue an unusually comprehensive plan book, which is now in the course of completion and will be ready at the time the production is released. Unique and unusually novel lobby displays and prologues are suggested with detailed descriptions for their use and adoption. Two pages of the book are devoted to illustrated exploitation stunts. The book will also contain a specially prepared four-page broadside insert showing samples of one-column, two-column and quarter-page newspaper advertisements.

"At the Sign of the Jack O'Lantern" is a comedy-drama based on the trials and tribulations of a man who is literally "bothered to death" by his relatives.

The cast which Director Ingraham has selected is an unusual appealing one and includes such well-known and talented players as Betty Ross Clark, Earl Schenck, Wade Boteler, Victor Potel, Clara Clark Ward, Monty Collins, William Cortwright, Mrs. Raymond Hatton, Newton Hall and Zella Ingraham.

The release date has been moved ahead from late in March to early in January.

Neilan's "Penrod" Finished

Special Prelude Dedicates Production to American Boyhood

WITH the completion of a special prelude in which historic American youths are portrayed, Marshall Neilan has just finished his picturization of Booth Tarkington's "Penrod" with "Freckles" Barry in the title role. In the prelude Mr. Neilan in keeping with the story of "Penrod" introduces George Washington and Abraham Lincoln with a fitting dedication to the greatest institution of its kind in generations past, present and to come—the American Boy.

"In portraying Tarkington's story," said the producer, "I have not attempted to detract or improve upon it. To try to cut Tarkington in this type of story would be just as foolish as to attempt to out Shakespeare in his particular field."

Mr. Neilan's selection of "Freckles" Barry for the part of "Penrod" has met with the author's hearty approval, it is stated. For the part of "Penrod's" father and mother, the producer offers Tully Marshall and Claire McDowell. In order to get the exact persons for other characters Neilan has had to look to the courtesy of his brother producers for such little stars as "Sunshine Sammy," Hal Roach's darkie, and "Baby Peggy" Montgomery, the two-year-old Century comedy actress. Marjorie Daw, John Harron, Gordon Griffith and other equally known players comprise the supporting cast of some forty players.

Collaborating with Mr. Neilan in the direction of this film was Frank O'Connor, prominent Lasky director. Lucita Squier adapted the story to the screen and David Kesson, the nineteen-year-old camera wizard was in charge of the photography.

Under Mr. Neilan's direction, D. J. Grey, film editor, is now cutting and assembling the picture, the advance print of which will be shipped to Associated First National Pictures, the distributors, within the coming week.

"Behold the Man" Makes Dramatic Story

"Behold the Man," Pathe's beautiful hand colored story of the life of Christ, received a notable tribute from James Dean, film critic of the Newspaper Enterprise Association, recently. Mr. Dean, after proving that the Bible, judged from a literary standpoint alone, contained much dramatic material, spoke of the various film versions which had been made. Many of them, he said, failed because they did not emphasize the dramatic phases of the Bible. In this class he placed "The Life of Our Saviour," the Pathe film before it was revised and re-edited. In its present form, under the title of "Behold the Man," states Mr. Dean, the picture is a work of rare dramatic merit, whereas before it embraced too much of the historical and religious detail of Jesus' life.

Mr. Dean was inadvertently misquoted in a recent issue of the Motion Picture News, making it appear as if he was not heartily in favor of "Behold the Man" in its present form. His criticism of "Behold the Man" was one of highest praise and commendation.

Wm. Cabanne to Film Big Snow Scenes

William Christy Cabanne, who is making "Beyond the Rainbow," an R-C picture, for release early in March, will complete the work on the interiors at the Sixty-first street studio, New York, during the week of January 1, and will then take the principals who appear in the big snow scenes to Lake Placid for that work. He expects to make those shots on or shortly after January 5, and will begin cutting and assembling immediately upon the completion of that work.

Lloyd Ingraham Joins Universal's Staff

Lloyd Ingraham has been engaged to direct Gladys Walton at Universal City. He will begin production immediately with the famous little flapper star on "Second Hand Rose," a clever comedy drama adapted from the popular song of that name by A. P. Younger.

Ingraham began his directorial career with Universal eight years ago. Recently he has done excellent work with Louis B. Mayer, Thomas Ince and Carter de Haven.

Big Thrill Aids New Semon Comedy

Larry Semon has been doing his utmost to make his new Vitagraph comedy one of the best in his career, according to reports from the West Coast studio where the picture is nearing completion. For the big thrill in the comedy there is the blowing up of a locomotive, tender and box car, with some attending comedy results. The locomotive and tender runs into the box car supposed to be loaded with T. N. T. The scene is said to be one of the most dangerous and costly ever introduced in a comedy.

"Jutland" Film Hand Painted

Educational Coloring 200 Feet; Prints Are Imported from England

GEORGE A. SKINNER, vice-president and manager of production of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has just returned from Providence, Rhode Island, where he has been supervising work on prints of "The Battle of Jutland," the film reproduction of that great battle which Educational is preparing for early release. As soon as the prints are completed, Educational will release the picture as a special.

Approximately two hundred feet of the picture illustrates gun fire and the burning of the unfortunate ships that went to the bottom in this terrific naval conflict. Each frame in this part of the picture has to be painted by hand to give the stirring effect of battle which so thrilled the audiences at the Rialto Theatre in New York, where the picture had the only showing it has been given so far in this country.

The tedious work of coloring these frames is being done at the laboratory of the Coronet Films Corporation at Providence, where much work has been done on Educational's pedagogical subjects, such as "The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes" and "The Crater of Mt. Katmai."

A considerable part of the picture, "The Battle of Jutland," presents "shots" of British vessels that took part in the battle. The negative of these "shots" is the property of the British Admiralty, and is in the possession of the vessels pictured. Prints of this part of the picture, therefore, had to be imported from London. Part of these prints have already arrived and the rest are on the way, so that the complete prints of "The Battle of Jutland" are expected to be ready in a very short time.

The first complete print made with the new titles that have been written to substitute for the titles used in the British presentations, is expected to be completed for the showing of the picture at the Naval Academy at Annapolis and at the Marine Barracks at Washington.

Universal Serial Is Started

"The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe" Under Way at Universal City

WITH the continuities, sets and production held up merely for the selection of a star, word has just come from Universal City that production of "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe" has been started. This is the third of its new educational-historical series. The first one, "Winners of the West," is just finishing its course of 18 episodes. No serial in the history of the Universal has made such a startling record as "Winners of the West." Its promise of a new and nobler era in the motion picture serial field is being carried on by the second of the series, "With Stanley in Africa," the first episode of which will be released on January 23.

It had been the intention when Eddie Polo was still with the Universal to star him in "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe," and all preparations were made to start the serial by the 15th of December. However, events so shaped themselves as to make it necessary to begin production on the fourth of the series, "In the Days of Buffalo Bill," starring Art Acord, first. In the meantime, Universal considered a number of available stars suitable to play the part of Robinson Crusoe.

This problem was solved by Mr. Julius Stern, the newly elected second vice-president of Universal. One of the objects of his recent trip to 1600 Broadway was the selection of a serial star for "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe." This search culminated in the engagement of Jack O'Brien, who has all of the physical characteristics required and who has had enough experience in the serial, "Bride 13," to weather the arduous role mapped out for him.

Goldwyn Finds Big Demand

Last Season Products Still Going Strong in Many Parts of Country

THAT Goldwyn chose wisely in making selections for its fourth year product is evidenced by the fact that last season's pictures are still in great demand in every section of the country, declares the Goldwyn home office. These pictures, it will be recalled, were made with the idea of presenting wide variety of types of stories.

Mrs. Rinehart's delightful story of prep school life, "It's A Great Life," has met with unusual success in every part of the country. The humorous aspect of adolescents trying to act like grown folks is universal; and every audience has responded to it. Mrs. Burt's "The Branding Iron," the first photoplay that this talented novelist and screen writer had produced, has held its public by the stern realities of its plot and through its uncompromising presentation of its crude characters. Rex Beach's "The North Wind's Malice," with the talented Vera Gordon in the role of a Jewish mother, is another North Woods picture that has won its audiences and is still finding new markets.

Perhaps the most discussed picture of the year was "The Penalty" by Gouverneur Morris, which presented Lon Chaney in the role of a legless monster of the underworld. This bitter portrait aroused many controversies; but the picture was so powerful that it is still one of the most sought after melodramas in the Goldwyn list. Another melodrama that has met wide approval is the Reginald Barker production of "Godless Men." It is a strong story of a fearless man and his worthless son, presented without sentimentality.

In the field of rollicking farce, Rupert Hughes showed his deftness in "Hold Our Horses," in which Tom Moore gave an admirable impersonation of a ditch digger who rose to heights he never dreamed of in his digging days.

One of the most gratifying incidents in connection with the Goldwyn Fourth Year product is the increasing vitality of "Earthbound," the Basil King photodrama which sought for its theme a dramatic probing of the land beyond.

Another Goldwyn photoplay that will always be remembered and is still as much in demand as the latest Goldwyn picture is "Madame X," starring Pauline Frederick.

Cast for New Beach Story

Betty Blythe Female Lead in Next for United Artists Release

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made of the completion of the cast for the second Rex Beach film production for United Artist release. Miss Betty Blythe was selected for the leading feminine role, that of a Sicilian countess. Thurston Hall, who was the "heavy" in Mr. Beach's preceding picture, "The Iron Trail," is again cast as the foil for the hero. In the forthcoming production, however, Mr. Hall will portray a more smooth and suave villain than in the former Beach feature, a part however, in which he is a past master. In this role he will bring to the screen much of the fine characterization seen in the Broadway stage play, "The Broken Wing."

Arthur Lucy, well-known on the speaking stage and on the screen, has been cast for the quaint comedy role. He will be best remembered by the public for his work in support of William Collier.

Robert Elliott was selected for the straight lead opposite Betty Blythe, while Gladys Hulette was given the ingenue role. Other parts are taken by Florence Auer, Macey Harlem, Effingham Pinto, Henry Leone and Walter James.

The story from which the new picture is being made, is practically an original one by Mr. Beach. Kenneth Webb is directing the film, under personal supervision of Whitman Bennett, who has arranged to take the entire company of players down to New Orleans on January 14, in which locality most of the exterior scenes will be made in the exact locale called for in Mr. Beach's story.

Following the rule for all his United Artists releases, Mr. Bennett insists that the background for every scene be correct in every detail. After having the studio sets designed by experts, the exterior work will be done in the environment and on the actual location described in the script.

The story of the new Beach feature opens in Sicily, where the action takes place in interior settings, and then shifts to New Orleans where the Italian quarter figures prominently in the scene embellishment.

Realistic Snow Scene in New Mermaid

An artistic bit of work of which the technical department of Hamilton-White Comedies, Inc., may justly feel proud, is in evidence on one of the stages on which scenes are being made for the latest Mermaid Comedy featuring Lloyd Hamilton, which will be released by Educational in the near future.

A large portion of the stage has been made to represent a small New England village in midwinter. Hamilton's trip to this town and his difficulties along the way give the picture its title of "En Route." Snow is piled high about the village buildings and trees which were hauled for many miles have been arranged in the background, apparently laden down with snow. Massive "props" were required for other scenes in this picture, which promises to be one of the most elaborate productions of the series of six pictures featuring Hamilton

First reproductions from Paramount's mammoth 30-reel spectacle, "The Mistress of the World," a UFA production directed by Joseph May, which will be released in four successive chapters in as many weeks beginning March 5. Mia May is featured in the leading role in this production, the theme of which is the search for the long-lost treasure of the Queen of Sheba

Vitagraph Production Plans

Jose on West Coast; Rights to Booth Tarkington Novel Bought

INTENTLY absorbed in production plans for 1922, President Albert E. Smith of Vitagraph has been in close touch with West Coast production conditions since his arrival in Hollywood a few weeks ago from New York. Together with W. S. Smith, manager of the West Coast Vitagraph studios, the company president has well under way the schedule which marks the closing of 1921 and which will usher in the New Year.

Among the announcements made this week by Mr. Smith was the item that Edward Jose has arrived from Vitagraph's Brooklyn studios. Mr. Jose arrived in Los Angeles just before Christmas, having completed the work of many months on "The Prodigal Judge," starring Jean Paige.

Mr. Jose is to assume direction of Earle Williams in a new type of story for Mr. Williams, "The Man from Downing Street." Another item of news from the West Coast is to the effect that Alice Calhoun, who starred in the Vitagraph production "The Little Minister," will remain on the West Coast and start immediately upon a picture entitled "Angelface." David Smith will continue to direct her.

President Smith announced this week that he had purchased the rights to the novel, "The Magnificent Ambersons," by Booth Tarkington. "The Magnificent Ambersons" will be one of the early Vitagraph specials of 1922. Star and director have not as yet been determined. An Irish story also has been decided upon for one of the 1922 specials.

William Duncan and his co-star Edith Johnson, have just commenced camera work on "Man Hunters," a story of the Alaskan Northwest. During 1922 Duncan is scheduled to produce eight pictures of a dramatic nature. Larry Semon, Vitagraph's comedy king, is in the midst of his latest comedy which is being hinged upon events that originate in a theatre. Jimmy Aubrey is just putting the finishing touches on his latest two-reel comedy.

Mr. Smith is now perfecting plans and completing negotiations which will enable him to make another announcement concerning increased Vitagraph productions during the early stages of 1922. Vitagraph's president reiterates the fact that the company will continue to produce pictures based on the quality of cleanliness and wholesomeness.

Pathe Releases Due Jan. 15

"Bashful Lover," Starring Ernest Truex, Included in the Schedule

ANOTHER well-balanced schedule of short subject features and one serial episode has been arranged by Pathe for release the week of January 15th. Included in the schedule is "The Bashful Lover," the third two-reel comedy starring Ernest Truex, who has scored a tremendous hit at the Harris Theatre in New York this season in "Six-Cylinder Love." Julia Mills plays opposite the star in this offering, and a carefully selected cast of players, including a ballet of classic dancers, appear in his support.

"A Strange Message" is the third episode of the new Pathe serial, "White Eagle," starring Ruth Roland. Miss Roland is aided in the episode by Earl Metcalfe, Virginia Ainsworth, Otto Lederer, Harry Girard, Bud Osborne—and five hundred Indians and cowpunchers help keep the action going at a break-neck rate of speed.

"The Non-Stop Kid" is the current re-issued one-reel comedy starring Harold Lloyd. "Loose Change" is the title of the latest Hal Roach comedy, presenting a satire on plays of crookdom. For the offering, the funniest players from the staff of the Roach comedians were chosen, including "Sunshine Sammy," Paul Parrott, Ethel Broadhurst, George Rowe, Mark Jones and a galaxy of "second story" men.

"The Dog and the Flea" is the newest animated cartoon of the series of "Aesop's Film Fables." Pathe Review No. 138 presents a series of interesting and entertaining subjects. "The Devil's Fool" shows views of one of Nature's natural wonders in Bermuda; "Two Men and a Pickle" is a slow-motion study in facial expression; "The Little Mountaineers" presents views in the vicinity of Vonga, Portugal; "A Bare-Hand Alligator Hunt" is an exciting adventure sale of the Florida Everglades; and "The Holy City, Today" is a Pathecolor presentation showing places of interest in Jerusalem, Palestine.

Releasing "Hail the Women"

Ince Special Direct to Exhibitors Through First National

"HAIL the Woman," the Thomas H. Ince special production which is to be released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., will go direct to the exhibitors of the country instead of playing in legitimate theatres in the key cities.

There has been incessant inquiry ever since "Hail the Woman" was first screened from exhibitors to find out whether Mr. Ince would follow his custom and release this picture to the motion picture theatres of the country or to legitimate houses.

The first booking of "Hail the Woman" was at Balaban & Katz's magnificent Chicago theatre, where the picture played the week before Christmas. The Chicago is Balaban & Katz's first venture into big theatre presentation in downtown Chicago.

Exhibitors in some territories took advantage of the Christmas appeal of "Hail the Woman" to present the production during Christmas week. Among the houses which played the Ince special commencing Christmas day were the Palace at Wichita, Kan., the Grand at Topeka, Kan., and the A. H. Blank theatres of Des Moines, Burlington Decorah, Davenport and Fort Dodge, Iowa.

The first general presentation of "Hail the Woman" in big theatres will occur the week of January 14 when play dates have been set for Rubin & Finklestein's two big twin city theatres, the Capitol, St. Paul and the State theatre of Minneapolis, the Grand of Greenville, Miss., and the Palace of Mandan, N. D. New Year's week bookings include the Auditorium of Dayton and the Majestic of Columbus, O., Garrick, Duluth and Grand, Northfield, Minn.

Other big bookings already listed at the First National home office on "Hail the Woman" include: Strand Emporia, Kans., State, Hibbing, Minn., Alamo Louisville; Princess, Minneapolis; and Skorus Bros., and New Grand Central and West End Lyric theatres, St. Louis, the latter of which will play the last week in January.

The New York date for "Hail the Woman" has not been set, but it probably will have a run in January at one of the big Broadway theatres.

"Over the Hill" Totals Record Revenue

"Over the Hill," the William Fox special production, which ran one solid year on Broadway, has created another fine record. According to an announcement made by Fox Film Corporation, the picture's revenue has totaled more than $2,500,000 since its release to the large first-run houses in the key cities of the United States alone.

These statistics were compiled for the several months up to December 15, 1921.

Canadian Opening for Kipling Picture

Rudyard Kipling's "Without Benefit of Clergy," released by Pathe, is registering a sensational success in Canada, according to all reports coming from the Dominion. This touching story of India had its premier last month in Toronto, and led the motion picture critic of the Toronto World, to place it in the same class with "The Four Horsemen" and "The Old Nest."

To Film "When Knighthood Was in Flower"

"WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER," one of the most widely read novels in the English language, and, when put into a play, one of the most popular ever produced, will be made into a film, starring Marion Davies, of Cosmopolitan Productions. Work will begin on the new picture at the Jackson Avenue studios in a short time. Announcement of the screening of this superb story by Charles Major will be of great interest to both the lovers of history and literature as the love story of Mary Tudor, the fascinating sister of King Henry the Eighth, and Charles Brandon is one of the world's greatest romances. Robert G. Vignola will be the director.

Syndicated Serial Publicizes "Man's Home"

When the publicity department of the Selznick organization was preparing exploitation aids for "A Man's Home" an unusual experiment was tried in the preparation of a serial story, written by Anna Steese Richardson, co-author of the play on which the screen drama was founded. The serial was cast in mat form and offered in four installments to 300 daily papers scattered through every state in the Union.

The "Man's Home" serial was declared to be as well written and as engaging as any of the stories that are regularly syndicated to dailies, and when editors read the advance proofs acceptances were immediately forthcoming. The Selznick publicity department declared that nearly one-third of the paper to which the serial was offered accepted the proposition, the Cleveland Daily News being the first paper to print the novelization.

Pollard Completes His 100th Production

December 15th was a day of special import at the Hal Roach Studios, Culver City, Cal. The reason: "Snub" Pollard on that date completed his one hundredth comedy for release by Pathe. There was no time off for jubilation, however. The star's method of signalizing the event was to start without delay his one hundredth and first comedy production.

Earle Williams Starts on New Production

Earle Williams has begun a new Vitagraph production at the Hollywood studios under the direction of Edward Jose who has gone to the West Coast expressly for that purpose. It is called "The Man from Downing Street," and was written especially for the Vitagraph star by Clyde Westover, Lottie Horner and Florine Williams.

In "The Man From Downing Street," Mr. Williams plays the role of an East Indian prince.

"Back Pay" Release Jan. 8

Cosmopolitan's Fannie Hurst Picture is Scheduled by Paramount

THE Cosmopolitan production, "Back Pay," by Fannie Hurst, author of "Humoresque," is the feature scheduled for release by Paramount January 8.

For this production, the justly celebrated "Humoresque" trio again collaborated, for not only is the picture an adaptation of a Fannie Hurst story but Frances Marion wrote the scenario and Franke Borzage directed. Chester Lyons was responsible for the photography.

Seena Owen has the leading role. In "The Woman God Changed" Miss Owen portrayed a woman who from the start was bad and who gradually came, through hard experience, to see the light of righteousness and clean living. In "Back Pay" she is first seen as an unsophisticated country girl. Later she is plunged into the vortex of New York's wildest life, but is finally redeemed through her love for her country sweetheart.

Playing opposite Miss Owen is Matt Moore, well remembered for his work in "Straight is the Way" and "The Passionate Pilgrim." He plays the plain, straightforward country boy who loves Hester, the heroine.

Outdoor scenes of rare beauty are said to be a notable feature of the picture. For the rural scenes Director Borzage took the company to the Delaware Water Gap in Pennsylvania, one of the scenic wonders of America, and the gorgeous mountains, the peaceful river and lakes that abound in that region are said to form wonderful backgrounds.

J. Barney Sherry, Ethel Duray, Charles Craig and Jerry Sinclair have the prominent supporting roles.

Fox Distribution in Orient

Middle East Films, Ltd., to Distribute William Fox Product

FOX productions will be distributed throughout the entire Orient, with the exception of Japan, by the Middle East Films, Ltd., is an announcement made early this week by Fox Film Corporation. Negotiations with the Oriental distributing agency were consummated through Joseph Fisher, an official of the concern, and the arrangements will open an avenue whereby millions of fans will be enabled to witness Fox pictures.

The importance of this announcement is realized only when it is understood that distribution of films in the Orient has been greatly limited, due to many conflicting forces. By the agreement with the Middle East Films, Ltd., hundreds of theatres in China, the Malay Peninsula, Manchuria and other countries will be in a position to contract for Fox production.

According to Fisher, William Farnum and Tom Mix, the celebrated Fox stars, are the most popular screen artists with the inhabitants of those remote portions of the world. Picture patrons there are especially fond of speedy action.

Censorship is more strict in the Orient than it is here, states Mr. Fisher. It is almost impossible to get a serial approved, for instance. Mr. Fisher tells us, however, that he has found the censors ready and willing to co-operate in most every case and that the officials of his company are working with them in harmony. In the Dutch Indies the censor boards are made up of citizens of standing who volunteer for the work, but have absolute authority. But in the British possessions the official censor is appointed by the Government.

Lloyd Comedy Well Liked

New York Critics in High Praise; Heads Symphony Short-Subject Bill

"A SAILOR - MADE MAN," Harold Lloyd's latest comedy vehicle for Associated Exhibitors, received special and favorable notice from the critics of the New York dailies during its showing on the Christmas week program of the Capitol Theatre, New York City. Advance information from various other territories throughout the country report the same cordial reception for the new Lloyd subject. The Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles, has given the comedy the leading position on a short-subject bill similar to the one which this house recently conducted with Lloyd's "Never Weaken" in the featured position.

Exhibitors booking "A Sailor-Made Man" are going in strong for the exploitation of this subject. The Marcus Loew organization, for example, ordered 30,000 of the novelty sailor-hats for use in their theatres of Greater New York. This hat is cut out from a flat sheet of cardboard, and joined at the side and top. On the up-turned brim is printed HAROLD LLOYD IN "A SAILOR - MADE MAN," with space left for the theatre's own imprint.

In commenting upon the Christmas week program of the Capitol Theatre, New York newspapers lay particular emphasis upon the Harold Lloyd feature, "A Sailor-Made Man."

Bd. of Review Endorses Five Fox Pictures

FIVE FOX productions are in the list of forty-seven motion pictures which the National Committee of the National Board of Review considers, from the viewpoint of entertainment, to be the "finest year's group since photodrama was created." This fact appears in a special December bulletin.

The Fox pictures are "Over the Hill" and "A Connecticut Yankee In King Arthur's Court," the two super-productions which have enjoyed extended runs on Broadway, New York City, and the first of which ran there for a solid year; "Sky High," starring Tom Mix, and to be released in January; "Jackie," with Shirley Mason, and "Trailin'," Tom Mix's current release.

Viola Dana Unit Films Lumber Camp Scenes

For this Harry Beaumont production, the entire unit of players moved to Shaver Lake, a lumber camp high in the mountains near Fresno, Cal. During the making of the big scenes of the picture, Miss Dana and her mother spent a week in one of the log cottages.

Both the story and the scenario of "Daphne's Disposition" are by Rex Taylor. William Lawrence plays opposite Miss Dana. The cast also includes Arthur Rankin, Hardee Kirkland, Myrtle Rochelle, Knute Drickson, Elsa Lorimer, Snitz Edwards, Colin Kenny, Bradley Ward, and "Broken Nose" Murphy.

Strong Cast to Support Priscilla Dean

Another strong cast is being assembled to support Priscilla Dean in her new Universal production, "That Lass o' Lowrie." Wallace Beery will play the role of the heroine's father. The second man to be selected for the cast is Fred Kohler. Beatrice Burnham and Katherine McGuire will appear in important feminine roles.

Baby Peggy on Rivoli's Christmas Program

Another success was scored by Baby Peggy and Brownie, the Century wonder dog, when "Chums" was selected as one of three comedy successes of the year to be part of the Rivoli Theatre Christmas week program. Baby Peggy's next release will be "Circus Clowns."

Well-Known London Actress in Wm. Fox Role

Rosalind Layte, well known on the London stage, is making her American debut with William Farnum in "Man's Weakness," a big picture now being directed by Herbert Brenon for William Fox.

"The Foolish Age" Has Los Angeles Opening

LOS ANGELES had its "one wild foolish week," at Loew's New State theatre did record-breaking business when Doris May's first Hunt Stromberg production, "The Foolish Age," an R-C picture, was given its Los Angeles premiere last week.

Preceded by a publicity exploitation campaign which heralded the advent of Doris May as a star in her own right, and enhanced by presentation music and features, "The Foolish Age" won the plaudits of both public and critics, the leading Los Angeles reviews summarizing it as "a delightful and refreshing comedy that establishes a new record for outbursts of laughter."

On the opening night, Sunday, December 19, waiting lines that extended for a block and a half on Broadway and West Seventh street bore testimony to the interest assumed by the film capital in the first Doris May picture bearing the R-C Pictures trademark.

Colleen Moore Scores as Comedienne

When the Goldwyn production of Rupert Hughes's photoplay, "The Wall Flower," is released, exhibitors will discover that a new comedienne of remarkable talent has been found in Colleen Moore, declares a statement from the Goldwyn offices. The picture was made from a short story by Rupert Hughes that appeared in Collier's. Mr. Hughes also did the continuity and directed the picture.

When this first Goldwyn picture in which Miss Moore has appeared is released, a new type of comedienne will have been added to the roster of artists that have become famous overnight, it is declared. The Goldwyn company feels sanguine that Miss Moore's performance will meet all the tests that critics apply to a rising young artiste.

A scene from Sir Gilbert Parker's story, "The Lane That Had No Turning," with Agnes Ayres and Theodore Kosloff, a Paramount picture

Veiller-Lytell Picture Nearing Completion

"Sherlock Brown," a comedy-drama written and directed by Bayard Veiller, is the title of Bert Lytell's latest Metro special photoplay. It is now nearing completion at the Hollywood studios of the company. Lytell plays the role of Sherlock Brown, a detective.

Ora Carew is the leading woman in the cast, which numbers among its list of players Sylvia Breamer, De Witt Jennings, Theodore Von Eltz, Wilton Taylor, Hardee Kirkland, George Barnum and George Kuwa. Lenore Coffee, of the Metro scenario department in Hollywood, adapted Mr. Veiller's story to the screen.

Myron Selznick Active During European Trip

THE home offices of the Selznick Corporation are in daily communication by cable with Vice President Myron Selznick, in charge of production for the company, who is at present in Europe on a business trip. There is every indication that important announcements by the Selznick company will follow the return of Mr. Selznick to New York within the next two or three weeks.

Metro Stars on Personal Appearance Tour

BERT LYTELL and Viola Dana, Metro stars, are about to embark on a "get-acquainted" tour of the the United States that will take one player or the other into practically every big city in the country.

When it was decided that a vacation of probably six weeks would be made possible through a readjustment of film schedules, both Mr. Lytell and Miss Dana decided to make use of this period to make their transcontinental dash. Although the dates of their appearances have not yet been settled, it is proposed that each start at the West Coast and zigzag to the Atlantic, stopping at the most important cities en route.

"Censor-Proof" Films Win Tribute

A remarkable compliment to Cosmopolitan Productions is paid by Royal A. Baker, censor of amusements of Detroit, Mich. In a letter to Hal Hodes, sales manager of the organization, Mr. Baker, who, besides being censor, is a lieutenant of detectives, congratulates the corporation "for choosing plays of such a nature that the censors need not worry."

Hodkinson Pictures Get Chicago First Runs

Seven Hodkinson released productions have been booked for Barbee's Loop theatre in Chicago, to be shown at the rate of two a month, according to an announcement from the Hodkinson home office in New York this week. They are "The Mysterious Rider," "Rip Van Winkle," "Jane Eyre," "Cameron of the Royal Mounted," "Fifty Candle," "French Heels" and "The Light in the Clearing."

More than 100 recently released productions are still waiting for first-run showings in the downtown section of Chicago, it is said, and the booking of six Hodkinson productions for immediate showings in Chicago is interpreted as a special tribute to the worthiness of the Hodkinson product.

Monroe Salisbury Making New Picture

Monroe Salisbury will have two leading women in his latest production, "The Great Alone," which Jacques Jaccard is directing for the West Coast Films Corporation at the Pacific Studios in San Mateo, California.

The two leads for whom the star braves untold perils in the drama are Miss Draga, a 15 year old blonde, and Lura Anson, late of Lasky productions. Producer Security will handle the releasing arrangements.

"Disraeli" Endorsed by Various Classes

From representatives of various classes there continue to come unsolicited and unqualified indorsements of George Arliss and his film version of "Disraeli," his first picture for United Artists.

Adolph Steiner, rabbi, of Salt Lake City, Utah, writes: "The production is superb. It inspires loyalty and the highest type of service to one's government. Disraeli's love for his wife teaches that real success can only come to one by the aid of true happiness in the home. Every man and woman should see this marvelous play and I am sure that they will learn a lesson of priceless worth."

"The 'Disraeli' picture is a masterpiece," says George Emory Fellows, head of the Department of History and Political Science, University of Utah. "As one familiar with the history of Disraeli, I would say I do not see how the spirit of the time and transactions could be better shown," he declares.

Old Favorites Support Elaine Hammerstein

The cast supporting Elaine Hammerstein, in "Why Announce Your Marriage?" to be released by Select Pictures Corporation January 30, will comprise an assemblage of old favorites. Niles Welch, Florence Billings, Frank Currier and Arthur Housman form a mixed foursome of players well known to "fans."

"Why Announce Your Marriage?" will be the third picture in which Niles Welch has appeared as Miss Hammerstein's leading man.

Two scenes from the forthcoming George Arliss picture, "The Ruling Passion," to be released by United Artists

Late Reviews of Latest Pictures

"Orphans of the Storm"

(D. W. Griffith)

THE Griffith of the spectacle has returned to the screen. The standard bearer of the celluloid drama who flashed his genius in "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," and "Hearts of the World," has again demonstrated that he has no superior as a painter of rich and panoramic canvases. His versatility is not confined entirely to sweeping scenes, for he can become the intimate artist at will. His "Orphans of the Storm," founded upon the play of Kate Claxton's "The Two Orphans," is a stirring spectacle. But even though he feasts the eye with truly eloquent scenes, he is at the same time able to draw the spectator right into the heart of intimate emotional drama. Such is Griffith's power as a dramatist. A picturesque panoramic view will be followed by delightfully intimate by-play or a mere sketching to enrich the pattern and give it a complete color scheme harmoniously arranged.

Griffith has shown here that he can put on a costume picture and make it vibrate with life and color. Form is everything to him. He will be accurate always. It has been suggested that American's cannot put on moving epochs of history as they pertain to the European continent—that we are unable to catch the psychology of the times. But after all, isn't it merely a question of accepting the foreign ideas because the German, or Frenchman or Italian is better acquainted with the subject? Must we absorb centuries of culture before we are able to accomplish anything worth while? Mr. Griffith disproves this theory as far as the screen is concerned. The stickler for accuracy cannot heap censure upon him. He has drawn his design only after the most painstaking research—if we are to believe the data printed on the program. And when the subject takes form and color we are compelled to believe that everything is as authentic as research can make it. So much for accuracy.

The director has plunged into the French Revolution, relying for much of his detail upon Carlyle. While this momentous period was merely suggested in the spoken play, "The Two Orphans," here it is revealed with all its pomp and ceremony, its stark tragedy, its vivid kaleidoscope of frenzied life. The Revolution draws the two orphans who carry on the drama proper—draws them into a seething maelstrom of disaster. The spectacle is never a thing apart from the intimate story of these beloved characters. From the time when the babies are rescued from the steps of Notre Dame and grow into young womanhood—the one stricken with blindness, the other caring for her sister with tender devotion—to the day that they leave for Paris in order that the sightless one may recover her vision—their lives are filled with stirring chapters, some of which are tinctured with deep pathos, others charged with happiness. They are guileless little creatures. The one who can see is coveted by an aristocrat and she is torn from her adopted sister to please his vanity. Thus romance is born. It happens that another aristocrat, a friend of the common people, rescues her and places her in a safe retreat. It is here that Danton,—the thundering orator, who with Robespierre presided over the destinies of the French after the fall of Louis XVI—is protected. And when her life is pledged to the guillotine along with that of her lover because she violated a law regarding the harboring of aristocrats—it is Danton who argues and pleads and rides to their rescue.

Here is the Griffith of the climax. One expects a sweeping, soaring finish to his pictures. "The Birth of a Nation" had it. So did "Intolerance" and "Way Down East." If the effect gained here is not so richly emotional as found in the last-mentioned play—it is because the thrilling scenes are not exactly heightened with suspense. Griffith resorts to his familiar execution—the switching of the camera—which is to show the figures in distress balancing each other with their storms of distress. Danton rides like a demon and the convict carts jog over the road. With the outcome anticipated the event is so compelling that one is quite overpowered at the skill with which it is executed. There are other scenes highly eloquent.

The storming of the Bastile, the raging mobs drunk with a newfound freedom, the battle in the square, the intimate scenes revealing the tragedy of the orphans—and that impressive moment when Henriette hears the blind girl's voice and is prevented from reaching her—these are color and dramatic scenes which embellish this canvas. The lawn fetes are magnificent. Here is an old world atmosphere splendidly created. The richness in the lives of the aristocrats is revealed in all its mad orgy, dress and carelessness of waste. The settings, while not so suggestive of breadth and space as some of Lubitsch's, are in keeping with the drama and the period.

It is the interpretation that the picture fails to approach the German conception of the Revolution. Lillian and Dorothy Gish as the orphans, give appealing performances—wistfulness and naivete being charmingly expressed. Joseph Schildkraut, as the young aristocrat, carries on the role as if to the manner born. But Monte Blue's study of Danton comes too closely upon Emil Jannings' interpretation and suffers as a consequence. He acts with authority, but loses something in spontaneity. Sidney Herbert as Robespierre suggests the wily politician of history. Lucille La Verne as an old hag, Sheldon Lewis as her son, and Leslie King as the commoner who becomes the leader of the Tribunal, give emphatically vivid performances. Creighton Hale contributes a humorous touch in highly creditable fashion. The array of extras certainly provide a picturesque background. The director has employed his fused color scheme at times. This touch with the other richly photographic mediums, such as the close-up and the long shot and the soft focus, serve to feast the eye with their appealing effects.—LAURENCE REID.

"Once Upon a Time"

(Henry Bollman-State Rights)

HERE is a feature difficult to classify. Sponsored by Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, the daughter of William Jennings Bryan, it reflects ambition upon her part to find a niche in screen expression. It is a feature which cannot be taken too lightly even though it assumes an amateurish dressing in most every particular. Certainly anyone who has something to say to the screen public should be allowed to say it. And when Mrs. Owen has mastered the technical angles of production and assembled a group of players thoroughly grounded in the art of film expression—she is certain to be heard from some day.

"Once Upon a Time" is a fanciful Arabian Nights story which carries the familiar intricate pattern—but which is too complicated for an assembly of amateurs to interpret in the proper spirit. Mrs. Owen has acted in the capacity of director, and while she has staged the picture in creditable fashion—still the wealth of Florida scenery as found at Cocoanut Grove does not offer many directorial barriers to leap. A huge estate, dotted with lagoons and flowerbeds—and the Cocoanut Grove itself make a charming setting. Against it the Community Players residing there at the winter colony are colorfully garbed and for amateurs, fulfill the demands of their roles in fairly adequate fashion. They are self-conscious, but a continuation of their services will remedy this fault.

The story is told principally through a great wealth of subtitles. Were the continuity more compact or if the action told the plot, the subject would strike a higher average.

This will doubtless get over in certain localities. Any exhibitor catering to society cliques should find it worthy of booking. Certainly it contains plenty of charming exteriors. Mrs. Owen should be encouraged to keep at the task. The big success may be found in some later picture.—Length, 4,700 Feet.—LAURENCE REID.

"Determination"

THE long advertised product of the United States Picture Corporation—namely, "Determination," has reached the screen. And though it has been exploited extensively there need be no fear on the part of the exhibitor that it has been inflated too highly. At the Maryland theatre in Cumberland, crowds literally stampeded themselves to view the feature and when they made their exit they registered satisfaction over its meritorious qualities. The outstanding highlight of the production is the element of action, which while melodramatic to the core is sufficient to score anywhere. Any exhibitor who wants to furnish his patrons with plenty of action need look no further than "Determination."

The direction of the offering has been intrusted to James W. Martin, who has endowed it with a production highly artistic. A competent and well balanced cast interprets this vital story—a cast that includes Al. Lincoln, Corinne Uzzell, Irene Tams, Maurice Costello, Walter Bingham, Barnard Randall, Gene Burnell, Mabel Adams, Bryon Russell and many others. Each is typical of the character impersonated. Mr. Lincoln in the dual role of John Morton, the English mission worker, and as James Melvale, his twin brother, brings forth a characterization equal to any ever seen on the screen. Mr. Costello acts with authority the part of the detective from Scotland Yard. The actors portraying the "dope" characters from London's Whitechapel are also clever. If the Cumberland patronage is any criterion the picture is certain to find success everywhere.—Length, 11,500 Feet.—Reviewed by John E. Barrett, Cumberland, Md.

New York Has Innovation in Superfine Small House

No Expense Spared in Perfecting 600 Seat Theatre for City's Busiest District

The Cameo Theatre, under the direction of B. S. Moss, in and adjoining the famous Bush Terminal Building at 130 West 42nd Street, just east of Broadway and one of the busiest corners in Manhattan, is unique among theatres devoted to the motion picture in its exclusive intimacy, its artistic luxury, its perfection of appointments, and its atmosphere of the smart drawing room. The Cameo is to theatres what the Petit Trianon is to royal palaces—an exquisite structure so superbly original in the artistry of its design that it may well stand for years as the finest example of aristocracy in the theatre. Irving T. Bush, who designed the Bush Terminal Building, an epoch-making creation in the world of International business, worked with B. S. Moss in making the Cameo the ideal motion picture theatre where in clubhouse comfort amid surroundings of chaste elegance one could view perfect projection of great pictures worthy of the house and the exacting clientele to which it will cater. The Cameo is revolutionary in many ways. Occupying one of the finest sites in New York and built, decorated and furnished regardless of expense it nevertheless seats but 600 people on a single floor, the first and only consideration having been the maximum of comfort, beauty and efficiency regardless of capacity.

The wide aisles, the efficiency regardless of capacity, the unusual space betwen seat rows so that patrons can walk to their seats comfortably in any part of the house without stumbling over earlier arrivals, the faultless taste of the rich decorations and furnishings, the orchestra of symphony artists, the scientific illumination, ventilation, heating and cooling, the correct pitch of floor and aisles, the admirable sight lines that draw the vision without effort to the screen which reflects a mellow projection freed of every element of eye-strain. The Cameo represents the results of many years experience with mition picture presentment by Mr. Moss and his painstaking study of all the many problems involved. It is supremely comfortable, beautiful, and smart in the highest sense of the word.

The usual marquee extends across the front and we pass under it into the vestibule which has a high base of black and gold marble and a paneled wainscot of Botticino marble running up to the underside of the cornice. The cornice and ceiling is of ornamental plaster in the decoration of which the tones of the marble wainscoting have been recalled. Thru glazed doors we enter the lobby where the cold tones of the vestibule have been changed for slightly warmer ones. The marble base here is of Rosato with pilasters and panels of Sienna marble in which a creamy color predominates and above this is the cornice and a vaulted ceiling with penetrations over the panels. The body color of the ceiling is of the same general tone of the Sienna though somewhat cooler. The lobby is 70 feet long and in the eleven panels on either side wall are set alternately gold display frames and mirrors 9 feet high. The ornamentation is in polychrome and gold leaf. The blue in the cornice is of a

Local 306 Holds Enthusiastic Election

The annual election of I.A.T.S.E. and Moving Picture Operators Local 306 was held on Wednesday, December 28th, at Mansion Hall, 57 St. Mark's Place, New York City, with practically the full attendance of close to 1000 members present. Samuel Kaplan was re-elected to the office of President for the ensuing year which will make the fifth consecutive term he will serve the body as chief executive officer.

Kaplan's re-election was unanimous, was effected amid scenes of wildest enthusiasm and with him were returned to office the entire ticket which he sponsored. The office about which centered a hard fought contest was that of Business Agent for the New York district, Samuel Goldfarb in the final balloting being declared elected over David Chaney, his opponent for the important post.

Following announcement of the victors of what is considered one of the bitterest campaigns waged in many years in New York's operator circles, President Kaplan addressed the men. He reviewed the work of the past administration which is practically the same personnel which is to continue. He thanked the men for the opportunity provided by his re-election for the continuance of plans drafted by him and placed in operation during the past year for their betterment.

"It is conceded on every side," said Mr. Kaplan, "that an equal condition of harmony between exhibitors and operators of Greater New York has never before existed and it is my earnest intention to foster and improve on the advances we have made. I can only interpret my re-election to express approval of my work during the past years.

"Operators have rallied to my support on every important occasion and to a man like myself whose heart is in the work of improving not only conditions for the men but their efficiency as well this is the very best sort of encouragement.

"We all have begun to realize the value of the work of the educational committee and this must go on with renewed vigor. It has been said too often that the only time the operators as a body come to the attention of the organized exhibitors is when the operators are seeking more money. The school sessions every second and fourth Wednesday of the month are a direct contradiction to this malicious statement and I have had assurance from the exhibitor body that the work we are doing to increase efficiency of our operators by keeping abreast of new developments is appreciated by the exhibitors and is being duplicated by other locals."

Officers of Local 306 for the year 1922 are as follows: Samuel Kaplan, President; Richard Weiss, Vice-President; Abraham Horowitz, Recording Secretary; Harry I. Sherman, Financial Secretary, M. Lewis, Treasurer; Samuel Goldfarb, Business Agent, N. Y. Dist., and Simon Terr, Business Agent, Brooklyn Dist.

Cooperstown House Opens

Erected at a cost of $60,000, Smalley's Theater opened at Cooperstown, N. Y., recently. The house, located on Main street, has a seating capacity of 850. It is one of the most modernly equipped houses in that section of New York state. The outside measurements of the Smalley Theatre are 46x140.

The building was constructed of hollow tile and tapestry brick under the direction of Architect J. C. Cummings. Road shows, moving pictures and vaudeville will be run. Gordon-heating system is used in the house. All parts of the theatre are connected by intercommunicating phones. Simplex machines project the picture to a Gold Fibre screen at a distance of 104 feet. The theatre has its own power and lighting plant at the rear of the main building. The theatre is owned and operated by William Smalley.

Impress upon your helpers the religion of politeness, as a theatre will ofttimes have a stigma cast upon it in the manner in which its helpers act on duty.

Avoid placing obstructions in the exits, and above all use extreme care in handling inflammable films; also be sure to have a reliable fire extinguisher in the operating room.

England's Finest Is Simplex Equipped

J. Frank Brockliss, Ltd., 167 Wardour St., London, W. I. England, exclusive distributors of Simplex Projectors for England, Ireland and Scotland advise that the new $2,000,000 Regent Theatre, Brighton, England, which was reviewed in these columns in the issue dated December 31st, is equipped with three of the latest type "S" Simplex Projectors which project a 21 ft. 6 inch wide picture at a distance of one hundred and thirty feet.

Mr. Brockliss also calls our attention to the fact that Brighton is the nearest seaside resort to London, being but a distance of fifty miles away and connected by a one-hour express train service. It is called "London-by-the-Sea" and many London business men live there. "I should be inclined to call it the English Atlantic City," quotes Mr. Brockliss in his letter.

J. Frank Brockliss, Ltd., have for many years been distributors of Simplex Projectors and during that time have installed many hundreds of Simplex Projectors in various theatres throughout the United Kingdom. The installation of Simplex Projectors in England's finest theatre in face of the heavy competition of the many types of projectors offered to the English exhibitors speaks volumes for J. Frank Brockliss, Ltd. and the Simplex Projectors.

The seating capacity of the Regent Theatre is 2,500

Open Tuxedo Theatre Detroit

The new Tuxedo theatre, situated on the border line between the cities of Detroit, Mich., and Highland Park and one of the largest and finest vaudeville and motion picture theatres in that section, was opened to the public recently, with Thomas H. Ealand in charge as general manager for J. M. Leasia. Harry Silverman is the owner and builder of the theatre, Maurice J. Finckel, architect and engineer and Max Goldberg the decorator.

The building, work upon which started early in the spring of 1921, is of brick with terra cotta trimmings and is of concrete and steel construction throughout. The lobby entrance, which is on Hamilton Boulevard, is 18 feet wide and 40 feet long, emptying into a foyer about 20 feet wide across the back. The exits are by way of Tuxedo avenue, Hamilton Boulevard and through a court and an alley.

The size of the auditorium is 80 by 100 feet, with ceilings 50 feet high. There are four aisles and three rows of seats. The seating capacity of the lower floor is 1,800 and the balcony 600. The auditorium has an incline of about 10 feet from front to back.

The stage is 20 feet deep, with an opening of 26 feet; 40 feet wide and 70 feet high, to permit the handling of all size drops. The dressing rooms are all on one side and off the stage. They are 10 in number and will permit the handling of large legitimate productions.

Three tiers of boxes are found on each side of the stage, with grill work above on each side to permit escape of organ sound.

The theatre building itself is separate from the store and apartment building, being divided by a court 20 feet wide. A lobby connects the two buildings. The outside dimensions of the theatre are 80 by 120 feet, with a height of 50 feet, graduating to the stage height of 70 feet.

All interior woodwork is in mahogany finish and all ornnamental work in plaster. The color scheme and general design is carried out in Italian Rennaisance period effect, with old rose drapes and ivory gray panels. There are drinking fountains on the first floor and mezzanine.

The ticket office is situated in the center of the lobby, with two windows. The manager's office is off the foyer. There are no posts found in the auditorium.

Stairways on both sides of the rear lead to the mezzanine, where is located lounging rooms. The entrance to the balcony is through the mezzanine. The balcony is divided, with the front for mezzanine seats.

The lighting system is indirect.

The theatre and building cost $500,000. Besides the theatre there is a 21 apartment building and seven stores.

Max Goldberg handled the decorations; Heywood brothers the seats; the J. L. Hudson Co., the carpets and draperies, the Russell Ventilating Co., the washed air ventilating system and steam heat; the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Co., installed the projection equipment, two Simplex machines; Max Rubin is the projection engineer; Howell and Sewell the lighting effects and Detroit Structural Steel Co., the steel work.

Blue Mouse Opens in Portland

Taking over an old-fashioned second-run theatre and within the short space of one month transforming it into one of the prettiest theatres in Portland, Oregon, is by no means an easy task, yet that is what John Hamrick, well-known theatrical man of the Northwest did in Portland recently when he took over the Globe theatre at Eleventh and Washington street and opened it up recently as the Blue Mouse. Mr. Hamrick is also owner of the Blue Mouse Theatre in Seattle.

Mr. Hamrick and the workmen with whom he surrounded himself has so transformed the old Globe Theatre that barely a trace of it remains. They have applied the artistic touch and have achieved thereby a comfortable, cozy and charmingly beautiful motion picture theatre.

Records were broken by the Western Theatre Equipment Company of Seattle in order to get the theatre opened on time. From all parts of the East, chairs, carpets, machines and screens were rushed in order to have the doors of Hamricks new theatre thrown open to the public on November 28th.

One of the pretty novel effects that is used in the new Blue Mouse Theatre in Portland is a sunken garden effect on the stage which is made up of pretty painted sets, gilded artificial flowers with colored border lights and numerous spot lights. It is used in the overture with the Blue Mouse Symphonic orchestra, with the lights changing and creating a different color scheme during the course of the overture.

If your theatre has steps in any part, it will be found beneficial to apply some of the many safety treads on the market, so people will not fall when descending or ascending.

EASTMAN FILM CEMENT

Cut where you will, splice with Eastman Film Cement and for all practical purposes the reel's original resistance to strain both in projection and re-wind is restored. The splice is secure against break or buckle.

Eastman-made and Eastman-tested as the presence of this seal on the container testifies:

Eastman Film Cement is the only cement that may be used successfully with either Regular or Safety film. It may be obtained in 1 oz. and 16 oz. bottles, and gallon containers.

National Anti-Misframe League Forum

Motion Picture News, New York City.
Dear Sirs:

Enclosed photograph of myself of which put in the National Anti Misframe League Forum of which I am a member, No. 1273.

I received your letter a few weeks ago stating of sending in some ideas of my work. I am very sorry to disappoint you in the columns of the form as I have been very discouraged this past summer of being out of employment on account of these theatres closing this past summer on account of the hot weather here. When they reopened, a new management took these theatres over and did not hire us old fellows back, so it made it pretty hot for us all here.

I do wish to state that we have one of the oldest men in the history of the operating game that worked over 20 years straight at this one business here in Oswego, N. Y. No doubt there are other men but a very few of them that reach this limit of time in my opinion.

Wishing you a happy new year, I am,

Respectfully,
GEORGE E. BOARDWAY,
Operator No. 1273; 181 East 6th St., Oswego, N. Y.

Dear Editor:

I am sending a list of my tools that I have gotten together in my work. I have spent about nine years in getting these tools together, many of which are of my own design and make, and some of which are my own inventions. I have been on the road rebuilding and repairing and installing projection equipments, electrical and otherwise. I have had ten years experience with practically all modern projectors. Also electrical equipment including Mercury Arc Rectifiers, G. E. and Westinghouse, G. E., Hertner, Wagner, Westinghouse and many other motor generating sets.

Below is a list of my tools.

1. Oil cans, small and medium, 1 each.
2. Sprocket puller, R & D, 1.
3. Taper pin remover, R & D, 1.
4. Pinion gear installers and removers for Simplex & Powers flywheels, 6.
5. Mandrell, for truing fiber motor pulley disc, Simplex.
6. Punches, 1 centre, 2 prick, 6 taper pin punches, 4 brass p.
7. Drill combination hand and breast, two speed best.
8. Drill bits, 35 assorted round shank, all sizes.
9. Tweezers hand (for handling small screws), 2 pairs.
10. Screw drivers, assorted, from smallest to 1 inch width, 35 in number, also offset.
11. V block, 1, for removing taper pins from gears.
12. Tape measure, steel, small, 1.
13. Calipers, small, inside and outside, 1 pair each.
14. Caliper rule, 1, small.
15. Files, assorted, 6, 8, 10 and 12-inch flat, 6 and 8 round, 6-in. 3-cornered, 2.
16. File, handle, one metal.
17. Wrenches, 2 Simplex acentric bushing wrenches, 1⅜ inch flat, 1 adjustable.
18. Dividers, one medium pair.
19. Taps, inside, two for inside threading.
20. Shears for cutting film, 2 pairs, small and medium.
21. Snips, tinners, small, 1 pair.
22. Snips, end snips for biting taper pins off, 1 pair.
23. Instrument for removing grit from condensers.
24. Taper pin remover and installer, Powers & Simplex intermittent sprocket, the best on the market (Henry M. Alsman, Inventor), one pair.
25. Pliers, 1 8-in. Tineman 2 comb. carbon, 1 gas, 1 long nose.
26. Chisel, cold, one medium.
27. Rule, mechanics graduated, one.
28. File cleaner, one.
29. Hack saw, adjustible and 4 blades.
30. Mallet, one rawhide, small.
31. Hammers, machine ball pin, 1 small, 1 medium, 1 Rurting (small).
32. Conutator, stone, small, one for grinding commutators.
33. Speed indicator for testing speed of machine, one.
34. Brush, one, small, for dusting carbon dust of lamps.
35. Extension cord 15 feet for emergency purposes.
36. Emery wheel, 1, small.
37. Vise, small, bench.
38. Anvil, small, 5 pounds, one.

I hope some other of the fellows will take about repairs.

Yours truly,
HENRY M. ALSMAN,
Backusberg Ave., Mayfield, Ky.

NATIONAL ANTI-MISFRAME LEAGUE PLEDGE

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

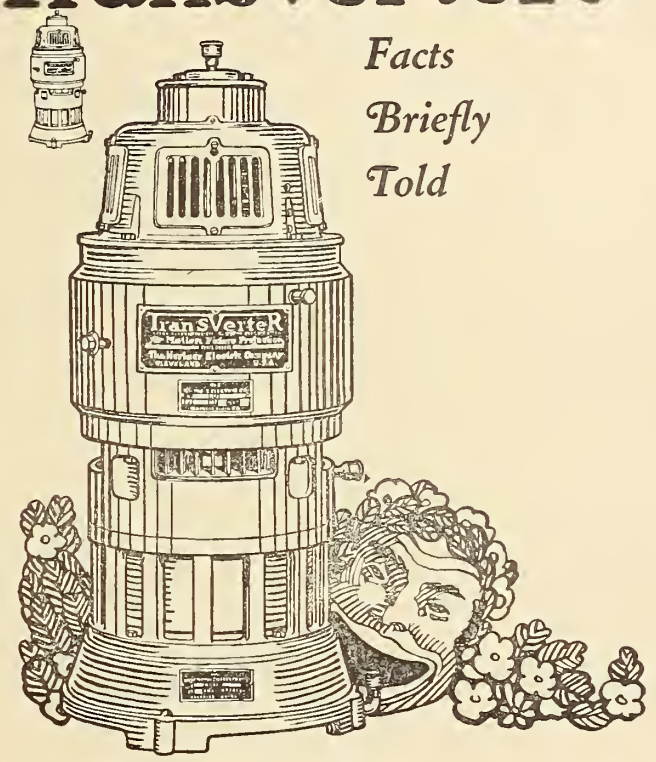
Reserved Seat Tickets for BIG PICTURES

There are a great many really big productions available today by exhibitors. These are productions that in the past would have been road shows, either not playing your town or playing the opposition combination house. You can give these special productions the proper presentation right in your own theatre. The secret is RESERVED SEATS. "The Birth of a Nation," "'Way Down East," "The Four Horsemen," "Over the Hill," "The Old Nest," and many other unusually big pictures must be played with reserved seats. They are too long for a grind show. They must be presented at advanced prices, and be put on in real showmanship manner. Are you able to handle the big pictures? The Reserved seat policy will make for success.



Advise us your seating capacity and we will be glad to quote you prices and send you samples.

beautiful shade which occurs again over the display frame in combination with gold which as carried out gives a very sriking effect. At the ticket office window is set a specially designed bronze grille. The lighting fixtures are of crystal consisting of both chandeliers and brackets, all beautifully designed, which illuminate the lobby most brilliantly.

Again thru glazed doors, we pass into the foyer which is quite subdued after the brilliancy and playfulness of the lobby and prepares one, as it were, for the transition from the outside world to the theatre.

Above a marble base, a paneled wainscot of black walnut runs up to the top of the doors, surmounted by a heavy capping. The inner filet of the moulding in the panels is striped in dull gold. There is a coffered ceiling, the beams and cornice are of walnut with the plaster ornamentations in the panels of polychrome, an antiquated green forming the background in general with some orange elsewhere and with dull gold for the high lights in both ceiling and cornice. The wall space between wainscoting and cornice is paneled and of a warm stone color. The room is 15 by 23 feet in size and the floor is covered with a handsome rug permitting a margin of the marble floor to show around the edges.

A handsome chandelier and concealed lights in a cove around the walls furnish the lighting. The room is further embellished with some antique furniture comprising a console table with marble top and mirror over it, an interesting old Italian table and several chairs of the same style.

The ticket taker's box is also a piece of antique furniture which has been adapted to this purpose.

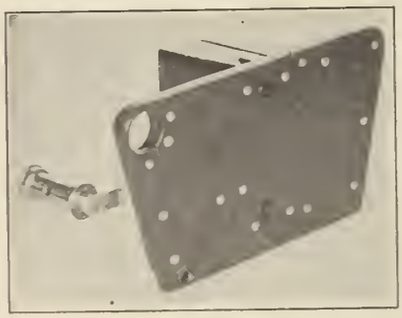
The auditorium is about 45 feet wide by 85 feet long and has a seating capacity of about 600. The central feature of the ceiling is a large dome elaborately decorated, with the surface elsewhere divided into panels in which is set plaster ornamentation with bands of ornament enclosing these and the whole richly designed in the Adams style. The standing rail at the rear of the house is of Sienna marble and a Sienna marble wainscot about 3½ feet high runs around the walls, and above this, twin pilasters occur at intervals supporting the cornice. There are large moulded panels in the broad surfaces betwen the pairs of pilasters and small panels between the pilasters themselves.

The treatment of the auditorium is mainly cafe-au-lait and gold. The cafe-au-lait tone is given by this color which appears in the large panels of the walls and in some of the background of the ceiling. The stiles and rails of these wall panels are of a cool gray to give contrast to the warm tones of the cafe-au-lait of the panels and the cream of the pilasters. Some slate color is also introduced in the ceiling in some of the backgrounds of the panels for contrast and to give a little sparkle to the work. All of the ornamentations of the ceiling, side walls and the cornice together with the panel mouldings are of gold except the small panels between the pilasters which are in polychrome. The front of the platform where the soloists will appear is of marble and there is a proscenium arch with a gold decorated frame around it, and a silk damask curtain of old rose trimmed with gold fringe and tassels filling the opening. This same kind of material is used to drape two large openings at either side of the stage which serve as exits to a lobby leading to 41st Street. There are two other curtains upon the stage, one of pearl gray appliqued with pink roses and iridescent blue leaves which have been imported and have never been used in this country before. The other curtain back of this is in effect "cloth of gold" with gold galloons and fringe. These curtains are to be used as a background for those appearing upon the stage.

The auditorium is agreeably lighted by a large magnificent crystal chandelier suspended from the dome, and twelve crystal side wall brackets. The entire auditorium is carpeted and handsome chairs upholstered in old rose are in perfect harmony with the scheme of decoration and other equipment.

A four manual organ produced by a manufacturer who has a reputation for making the finest of instruments has been installed and an adequate space has been provided for an orchestra which will be made up of selected artists. A staircase at the rear of the auditorium leads up to a mezzanine where are located the ladies' and gentlemen's retiring rooms with their appointments in keeping with the rest of the house.

Michigan's Largest Theatre



The opening of the New Capitol theatre, Detroit, the largest photoplay house in Michigan, has been definitely set for not later than January 7th. George W. Trendle, general manager of the Kunsky Enterprises, is now working on the opening program. Admission prices will be slightly higher than at the Adams or Madison but the entertainment will be of a higher class and there will be an enlarged orchestra. Tom Moule will supervise the new house assisted by Howard O. Pierce on advertising, exploitation and presentation.—HEFFERMAN.

Latest Springfield House Attractive in Appearance and Modern in Equipment

Jefferson Theatre Has Unusual Seating Arrangement; Accommodates 1,000 Persons on One Floor

Substantial in size, attractive in appearance and modern in equipment, the new Jefferson theatre at Main street and Jefferson avenue, Springfield, Mass., opened recently the latest addition to the list of motion picture houses in that city and central Massachusetts. While built to especially cater to residents of Springfield's North End, it is so located that it is but little removed from the central business section of the city.

The house has seating accommodations for 1,000, all on one floor, without the sign of a post to obscure the screen view. The concrete floor is built saucer shaped and with a pitch so that every seat in the house commands a clear and unobstructed view of the screen and stage. The aisles are unusually wide and the space between the rows of seats unusually ample, making it convenient to get in and out of the seats, which are themselves roomy and comfortable. The first row nearest the stage is 30 feet distant from the screen, so that those occupying seats in the front rows will not have the feeling that they are too near the pictures.

The ceiling is of a substantial height, giving the interior a large and airy appearance, this being added to by the absence of posts and pillars. The main color scheme is old rose, with blue and gold trimmings, all of artistic design, the entire effect being unusually bright and cheerful, but in no sense garish. Chandeliers of unique design in old gold shed a soft and soothing lighting and give just the right touch of harmony to the rest of the color scheme. The lobby, with women's rest rooms on the right and men's room on the left, as the visitor enters, are finished in colors harmonizing with those of the main theatre.

A member of the audience looking back to see whence the films are being projected to the screen will see but a slight aperture in the rear wall. In the rear of that, however, is the operating room, with two motion picture machines, claimed to represent equipment as modern as any house of its kind in the country. Motion picture men and state inspectors have pronounced them the last word in equipment of its kind. They will be in charge of two expert operators. Louis Cohn, proprietor of the theatre, will be active in its management.—AGARD.

Davidson Now with Independent Supply

Frank Davidson, who for many years has been in charge of projection at the Buffalo Mark-Strand and who is now operating the Buffalo branch of the Independent Movie Supply Company in north Pearl street, has been elected president of the Moving Picture Operators Local Union, 233.

Other new officers are: Paul Graf, vice-president; Elmer J. Bugman, recording secretary; M. J. Ostrowsky, treasurer; D. L. Martin, business manager and financial secretary; George Weil, sergeant-at-arms.

The new trustees are William Melgier, W. B. Wilson and Harold Potter, Bert Shipley and Fred Vester have been appointed delegates to the Central Council. Louis Bernstein and Bert Ryde have been elected to the executive board. M. J. Ostrowsky will represent the union at the national convention. The new officers will be installed Dec. 28 in the union headquarters, Palace Theatre Building, 327 Main street.—TAYLOR.

Falls Equipment Co. Sell Bellevue

The Falls Equipment Co., of Niagara Falls, N. Y., were successful in obtaining the order for two Power's G. E. high intensity outfits in the Bellevue theatre, Buffalo. This concern represents the Power's machine through the Independent Movie Supply Co., of New York, distributor. Credit for this sale was given to another concern through a misunderstanding on the part of the NEWS Buffalo correspondent.

Rosenbaum Buys More Theatre Interests

The Rosenbaum interests of Florence, Ala., have recently bought out all holdings of Southern Enterprises at Sheffield and Tuscumbia, and now control all the theatres in the Tri-Cities group. The new houses added are the Strand at Sheffield, and the Pastime and Strand at Tuscumbia—the latter house being one of the handsomest and most elaborate in the whole state.

The new company will be known as the North Alabama Enterprises, L. Rosenbaum, president and active manager; Miss Pearl Hollis, executive secretary. New capital has been admitted to the company, with the idea of building larger houses in the Tri-Cities.—Hutson.

Rebuilds Theatre Destroyed by Fire

The Plaza Theatre of Waterloo, Iowa, which was recently destroyed by fire, is being rebuilt and when finished will be one of the best houses in the middle west and will be under the management of Schultz, Davis & Co. The opening is to be held during January.

South-Western Theatres Change Hands

Lawrence Wagoner of Tulsa, Oklahoma, has purchased the Majestic Theatre at Wetuompka, Oklahoma, from Curtis L. Hughey.

Music and the Picture

Why Do We Need Music with Pictures?

Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld Comments on William D. Taylor's "Too Much Music" Article

EXPRESSION of disapproval of the overwhelming quantity of music and of the atmospheric prologue on the programs of better class theatres by the Motion Picture Directors' Association recently made public through a trade paper article by William D. Taylor has led Motion Picture News to seek the opinion of an authority on the presentation of the photoplay—Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, director of the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion theatres, New York.

Mr. Riesenfeld has been the leading figure in pictures-and-music for the past six years. He has seen motion picture presentation develop and knows its possibilities and its pitfalls from experience. And in pointing out where the exhibitor faces dangers in the elaboration of the music side of the program, he is giving support to Mr. Taylor's protest.

"The whole purpose of music with pictures was originally to satisfy the ear so that the eye could give its attention to the screen," explained Mr. Riesenfeld. "It was a sort of opiate, nothing more. That was the fundamental theory upon which music was originally introduced in motion picture presentation and if the exhibitor will hold to that central idea he cannot go far astray. If he is led to believe that because his patrons like good music he must give them more and still more music, he is doomed to disappointment, because primarily his patrons want pictures.

"Why do we need music with pictures? Because the ear demands it. Every action in life has sound connected with it. And on the stage there is the human voice and color as well as action. When the patron turned to the motion picture for entertainment, it was natural that the human voice should be sought as well as the figures in dramatic action. Without a sound except the whirring of the projection machine or the whispering of the audience, there would be an unnaturalness about the silent drama which would be disconcerting. The players would be seen to speak—their words might even be read upon the screen—but there was no sound. Naturally, it was found necessary to appease the demands of the ear, and music was introduced.

"In time this musical side of the entertainment was given great study and an effort was made to bring together the emotional force of the music with the appropriate action on the screen. And there was, at the same time, a development in the orchestral side, until the piano and primitive organ disappeared and fine symphony orchestras were used. When a special composition was needed for a special film scene and it could not be found among the great music writings, an original piece was written. And so it went on, progress in music setting and in the orchestras.

"Then there was the problem of the entire program. A motion picture entertainment takes about two hours yet it is almost physically impossible to watch pictures for that length of time. That is why pictures were made to alternate with stage numbers, a bit of dance, an orchestral selection or a vocal solo. It was to give the eye a rest that these stage and music numbers were introduced. And, of course, the best possible numbers were presented.

"This wonderful development of motion picture presentation continued with remarkable strides—and hidden in that fact lies the danger. The public liked fine music settings with its pictures, it appreciated the symphony orchestras, the vocal selections, the dance numbers, and immediately it was presumed that more and more of that side of the entertainment was desired. The original purpose was being forgotten and music and stage numbers was made a fetich. The servant was placed in the master's chair and obeisance was paid to a usurper.

"After all is said and done, the picture is the thing. We know that the public likes music with its pictures. A good orchestra, a properly prepared score and well selected soloists will give the theatre a steady clientele, provided, of course, that the average of pictures is good. Music will increase the attendance when the photoplays are good, but will not draw patrons if the pictures are uniformly bad.

"Six years of study and work have brought us these salient facts:

"The music in the score to a motion picture must be chosen with just as great care as is the music in an opera—it must be in harmony with the dramatic action. Both are intended to carry the same story, to create atmosphere for a story or stir the emotions in a specific way. If I were inclined to be over-critical, I should be tempted to say that the music for the motion picture has to be more intelligible than that in grand opera.

"The conductor must 'play to the picture.' This is, to my mind, the most important function of conductor and orchestra. It is infinitely more important than the proper playing of an overture. For the conductor it means that he must unlearn much, must disregard dynamics and metric effects which a composer conceived, and actually improvise a setting fitting the dynamics of the photoplay. The orchestras, too, must understand how to 'play to a picture.' Even the best players from the symphony orchestras need to learn this branch of musicianship.

"These three—the score, the conductor and the orchestra—when expressing the emotions in music harmoniously with the emotions on the screen, result in a brilliant ensemble. If any of these three are lacking—if the score is not prepared wtih appreciation for the dramatic import of the film, if the conductor cannot direct the score 'to the picture' or the orchestra does not respond perfectly—the results, from a film drama point of view, will be disastrous.

"The great problem is to know where to stop. Music has progressed wonderfully in the past six years and there is the desire to go still further. Instead of making it a purpose to give always better music there is the desire to give merely more. The well balanced program has been found long ago and the pioneer will find that his work lies in perfecting the details of that program, not in throwing it out of balance again."

Avedano Appears at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo

One of the most artistic musical numbers ever presented at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, was rendered last week when Mlle. Avedano, costumed for the role, sang "Romanzo" from "Aida" before an atmospheric stage setting, entitled "On the Nile." The canvas showed the Nile river flowing by the pyramids. A camel caravan was seen crossing the desert in the distance. Lights were thrown on the water against which an electric fan was also turned, the breeze thus produced giving a realistic moving water effect. The Verdi number was given with excellent effect, the big symphony orchestra accompanying the soloist.

Dolman, Former Detroit Organist, Goes to Winnipeg

Walter Dolman, formerly of Detroit, Mich., has been appointed organist of the new College Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, where a fine new concert organ was recently completed. Dolman was brought to Winnipeg to be the organist of the Province Theatre, where he remained for two years. He went to the National Theatre, Winnipeg, but has now received the important appointment at the College. Mr. Dolman is credited with having one of the largest music libraries in Canada.

"HAIL THE WOMAN"
(Ince-First National)

Powerfully Human Document—Exceptionally Well Acted

THAT Thomas H. Ince and C. Gardner Sullivan are unbeatable as a combination is proven in "Hail the Woman," which will be accepted as one of the really outstanding pictures of the year. Mr. Sullivan has long been recognized as a master writer of the photoplay. His gift of expression—his skill at making moving pictures from simple themes—pictures which make the spectator feel through their power of suggestion—these qualities are demonstrated again in this exposition of the wrongs inflicted upon woman by man. He has taken an old theme but by embroidering it with human touches, dramatic sequences and situations that progress with compact unity—he has brought forth a document that is vital with life. Mr. Sullivan is too keen a dramatist to miss fire with his subject. Whatever he writes upon is always interesting.

"Hail the Woman" is something of which he should feel highly proud. The same feeling should be expressed by John Griffith Wray, the director, and Mr. Ince, the supervisor. They have cooperated in the most efficient manner. Here is a theme showing the intolerance of man for woman. The central figure is a stern, unreasonable unyielding Puritan residing in a snug community of staid New England. His motto is, "Men and their sons first." The wife is a pathetic creature; the daughter, the household drudge—ever lonely, ever pathetic, too. The son is the favorite. And he is being groomed for the ministry. But he falters, thus showing that he is human. The victim is a forlorn, hapless slip of a girl—whose vicious father is bought to spare the shame.

Words cannot express the tense little scenes of this puritanical father and his son or the other father and his daughter. She steals away in the night and rears her child in poverty and distress. Meanwhile the stern parent's daughter is misunderstood and driven from home. Her spirit is too proud to crush. Through her generosity she is able to radiate sunshine in the life of the pitiful little mother. But the burden of the latter is too great. After her death the daughter takes care of the child. The story progresses with stark realities. One forgets time and place in feeling the tense situations—the utter pathos of the lives of the unfortunate women who have suffered through the bigotry and cruelty of one man. Mr. Sullivan offers a plea for womanhood. He has placed woman on a pedestal. Not through preachments, but through stark realities does he enable us to see the light. There will not be many dry eyes after viewing this eloquent feature—which soars and vibrates with such human moments. The mute tragedy in the lives of the women is vividly expressed. Tense is the scene when the young minister mounts his pulpit and acknowledges his wrong. He sacrifices his profession because he sees the light and becomes a man by accepting his responsibilities. And the unyielding father, bent and sorrowful now, admits his crime toward humanity.

When one has taken into consideration the minute details, the atmosphere of the home, and accepted them as genuine—one must turn to the eloquent acting of Theodore Roberts, who in his portrayal of the bigot, outdoes himself in character interpretation. He is not the humorist here—but a lifelike representative of what he portrays. Every shading is keenly emphasized with just the proper touch. Florence Vidor lends a spirituality to the role of the misunderstood daughter, while Madge Bellamy as the wronged girl gives a dumb pathos to her portrayal. Tully Marshall as her father is cunning and cruel. A fine bit of pantomime. The other players enact their parts creditably. It is an inspired picture from every angle. Hail Messrs. Ince, Wray and Sullivan—and Theodore Roberts.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Hail the Woman," Thomas H. Ince's intensely dramatic picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— is a powerful production of universal appeal, built on the theme of modern American womanhood. It is from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan, one of the most talented writers for the screen, and it has been directed by John Griffith Wray under Mr. Ince's supervision. The story deals with Oliver Beresford, a grim and bigoted New England farmer, whose uncompromising creed—"Men and their sons first," disposes harshly of woman's destiny. Beresford's son who is studying for the ministry, secretly marries Nan, and their union is about to be blessed with a child. The elder Beresford learns of the girl's condition and of his son's responsibility. He buys off her father and Nan is driven from home. His own daughter is driven from home through a combination of circumstances and good fortune enables her to care for Nan's child after the death of the mother. Time passes and eventually Judith becomes the triumphant woman. Her father has a change of heart and the brother assumes his responsibility. The play is charged with tense situations and is splendidly acted by an all-star cast.

"JUST AROUND THE CORNER"
(Cosmopolitan-Paramount)

Heart Interest Story—Great Human Appeal

ALL the ingredients to construct a pleasing photoplay, have been generously used in preparing the Cosmopolitan feature, "Just Around the Corner," a story of people in every day life, the kind who make it possible for their more prosperous neighbors to enjoy comfort and luxury.

Away from the "society drama," it aims at the heart of everyone who has even a deeply buried sentiment, telling the story of a widow of a working man, her family of the working class.

It is comedy melodrama, with pathos galore. Starts right out to tell the story and loses no time. The important characters are introduced with a clever view to building up sufficient interest that hasn't a chance to subside during the screening of a romance of New York's lower east side; and when it is over, make one glad to have seen it.

It depicts the maternal instinct of a delicate mother, the protecting fist of a little brother, the natural yearnings of a pretty sister to be "like other girls."

Adapted from Fannie Hurst's "Superman," for which Frances Marion wrote the scenario and then directed the picture, the tale has been told in an unusually effective way. A competent cast are entitled to a great deal of the praise. The characterizations all of superior merit.

On the east side of New York lives a family of three. The girl, a factory employee; the boy, a Western Union messenger, and the mother a willing devotee to the proper upbringing of her children.

Through the offices of a "girl friend," the daughter secures a new line of endeavor, that of becoming an usher in a downtown theatre. Her mother would rather she did not work at night, but true to modern trend, daughter takes position anyway. It is there she learns how to imitate the cheap, tawdry women with whom she comes in contact, and to know a dressed-up human parasite, who boasts of the occupation of a "ticket speculator."

The mother senses the fact that the newly annexed has other than good intentions, where her daughter is concerned, insists upon his coming home with daughter to an "after-the-show" spread, which she prepares time and again, only to be disappointed. Always, the young man finds an excuse.

One night, he prevails upon the daughter to go to a dance hall, where a contest is being held, which, in his colossal conceit, he expects to win, with the help of a pretty youngster as a partner. Conscience directs her homeward, especially since she knows her mother is not so well, but he wins, and instead of reaching home in time to minister to her mother in the last hours, she arrives almost too late.

The mother's confidence that the "young man" will be with her daughter, becomes a dying obsession, so the brother directs his sister to "go and get him." She fails in her undertaking, but is fortunate to find an improved substitute, who agrees to act as the girl's fiance until the mother passes away in peace. In the end it becomes a reality, and some months later, we see the couple preparing to entertain little brother, grown up. Very entertaining, sentimental comedy-drama, with hardly a "dry" moment, in six reels.—Lillian R. Gale.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Just Around the Corner," the Cosmopolitan-Paramount motion picture that comes to the ———— on ————, is a story of the East Side of New York, with its joys, its sorrows and its strivings. The original entitled "Superman," was written by Fannie Hurst, author of the Cosmopolitan record picture, "Humoresque." The scenario was written by Frances Marion, who earned her enviable reputation as a writer of this necessary pattern, after which a photoplay is made, by a long period of service for Mary Pickford productions. In this instance, Miss Marion directed the picture, as well. It is full of human interest, pathos, fulfillment of the modest hopes of those who live a work-a-day life, viewing their prosperous neighbors from "Just Around the Corner." Don't miss it.

PROGRAM READER

The appeal of "Just Around the Corner," which the management of this theatre will take pleasure in presenting on ————, is said to be irresistible. The story is one of those which, because of its human qualities, impresses itself indelibly upon the mind and affects the emotions by its convincingness and power. It is not a story of "society," with silk and satin dressing, it is a story of the working class, depicting their natural inclinations, their heart aches and joys "even as you and I." It is of universal appeal. A Cosmopolitan-Paramount production, which is a recommendation in itself.

CATCH LINES

Do you live "Just Around the Corner" from the rich? Do you live "Just Around the Corner" from the poor? Wherever you live, whatever your walk of life—you live "Just Around the Corner" from a drama of life, that is happening every day. See "Just Around the Corner"—a motion picture worth while.

"SHADOWS OF THE SEA"
(Selznick)

Adventure Story Replete With Action

YOU may call this rather impossible regarding subject matter, but there is no denying that it carries considerable vitality, expressed through scenes marked for action, thrills and suspense The author, Frank Dazey, has written enough melodramas to know how to incorporate the element of action. And it must be said for "Shadows of the Sea" that it moves with vivid punches. It is an adventurous sea story, although considerable of the action transpires on land. The central character is a sailor of fortune—not the browbeater so well depicted by Jack London, but a gentleman who engages in a stealthy contraband business for the love of it. He commands a yacht that sails the high seas. And his fame has preceded him—as a man not subject to giving any quarter when facing danger.

It doesn't take long for the story to get started. Despite its plot and counterplot and the fact that it traverses two hemispheres it is always easy to follow—thanks to a well prepared continuity. The characters may not be clearly defined and one may wonder at times the motives guiding them—but one is never puzzled over the array of picturesque scenes, which have that vivid quality of punch. Conway Tearle is the star here and he manages to excite a deal of interest through his colorful sketch. His repression is admirable when one appreciates the opportunities to indulge in dramatic fireworks. A vivid scene finds him rescuing a derelict from a Hong Kong den and making a man of him on his yacht. The vessel steams into some hidden nook on the California coast, and the subsequent shot reveals a battle between revenue officers and the modern pirates. The skipper escapes and intrudes in a domestic affair.

Here December is married to May and the young wife is carrying on an innocent intrigue with a youth. The captain, who is subject to snap judgments places a wrong conclusion on things and kidnaps the couple after the death of the husband. His object is to make them tired of one another by constantly offering them each other's company. The young widow possesses a spirited temperament—which is occasion to show the age-old conflict of sex. A mutiny breaks out on board, the first mate, who has coveted the girl, instigating the affair. It is quickly subdued by the resourceful skipper, who, realizing that he has fallen in love, reforms and permits himself to accept the punishment of the law. But the attractive widow has also responded to romance and she suggests an evasion of the law by a cruise in the tropics. The atmosphere is well sustained, there being a reality about the scenes which is convincing for this type of story. A good cast assists the star.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Conway Tearle as a gallant young sea adventurer is certain to please his many followers in his newest picture entitled "Shadows of the Sea," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. As may be judged from the title, the picture tells a maritime story despite the fact that most of the action takes place on land. The story opens with a scene of a typical waterfront resort of the most questionable character where the hero, Capt. Carson, finds a human wastrel and carries him away to his yacht. Carson is an adventurer whose purpose is to find a thrill in life through the seemingly harmless defiance of certain maritime and government laws that have to do with the transportation of contraband goods. While this illicit trading is the basic background for the story, there are numerous side plots that produce a full measure of love interest and romance to say nothing of numerous characterizations that are drawn into the story. The role assigned Mr. Tearle is one providing extraordinary opportunities, none of which are slighted by the star. Doris Kenyon plays the leading feminine role in appealing fashion, while the contributory support is furnished by such capable players as Jack Drumier, Crawfurd Kent, J. Barney Sherry, Frankie Mann and Arthur Housman.

PROGRAM READER

Conway Tearle in a spectacular screen play will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————, when the star's new picture, "Shadows of the Sea," is shown. This is an adventure story written by Frank Dazey. Love and romance play an important part in the plot, but the outstanding feature of the production is the rapid-fire action that is noticeable from the first scene to the last. Mr. Tearle, in the role of a young soldier of fortune whose principal occupation is the foiling of maritime laws, is said to enact one of the best roles of his eventful career. Opposite the star is Doris Kenyon, while others include Crawfurd Kent and Barney Sherry.

SUGGESTIONS

This is an actionful adventure story which is certain to interest patrons because of its many situations and thrilling events. Besides it furnishes the star with a colorful role. You can mention that he gives a good account of himself, while his supporting cast including Doris Kenyon and Crawfurd Kent is excellent. Describe the feature as one that keeps moving with plenty of dramatic sweep and power. You can feature the story as the adventures of a soldier of fortune. Call it a melodrama replete with thrills and excitement. The accessories in the shape of paper are attractive. These displayed prominently are certain to stimulate curiosity.

"THREE LIVE GHOSTS"
(Fitzmaurice-Paramount)

Mystery Comedy Melodrama—Interesting Post-War Story

THE popular play from the pen of Frederick S. Isham, which graced a Broadway theatre for many months, and was among the most favorably talked of dramas in 1921, will unquestionably score as emphatically, a screen hit of 1922. It sets a precedent which promises improved pictures, if those which follow keep an even pace.

Of London, England, locale, the use of the actual places of interest, including scenes in the Limehouse district, views of Trafalgar Square, Westminster Abbey, etc., not only add to the scenic value, but supply coveted realism.

The cast has been selected with evident care, Norman Kerry, as the American abroad who enlists in the British Army; Edmund Goulding, as the Cockney lad, and Cyril Chadwick, who made a marked impression in the role of the shell-shocked English gentleman in the original presentation of "Three Live Ghosts." All these players deserve highest commendation for making the best of great parts, Edmund Goulding, as the product of Whitechapel, being a revelation in his impersonation of the Cockney. Glare Greet, as his mother, is splendid. Anna Q. Nilsson looks well, although the role does not offer a very wide range.

While the plot has not been kept intact, additional melodrama having obviously been injected because the original situation depended entirely upon dialogue. More fitting motion picture lore has been substituted, which will not be apparent to those who did not see the original, and those who did will be bound to admit the necessity of the change. Indeed, in adapting "Three Live Ghosts," Ouida Bergere has done a work of which she may well be proud.

About the time the Armistice was signed, three pals of war escape from a German prison camp. Each has been reported "missing" sufficient time to be listed among fatalities, one an American, one a Cockney English and the other an English nobleman, whose memory departed from shell shock.

They return to England as stowaways on a Holland tramp vessel, the Cockney to find that he is reported dead, and bound to remain so since his mother has collected and spent his insurance; the American willing to remain "dead" because of the reason for his hurried disappearance, and the English nobleman without sufficient memory to know if he is dead or alive or who he was before the war.

"Spoofy," named by his pals, has the playful habit of kleptomania. Much of the comedy depends upon his ability to walk away with things, with innocent intent. Finally, attracted by the exterior of a mansion, with characteristic cunning, he enters, seeks a room wherein hang many articles of an English gentleman's wearing apparel, makes a complete change of clothing, and on the way out, helps himself to milady's jewels, as well as her baby.

To the Whitechapel home of the Cockney family, Spoony returns with his loot. Meantime the gin drinking mother has read the offer of a reward for the American. She plans to collect, is interfered with by the son, who sticks to his pal, but when the police come to the slums to investigate her claim of reward, they run into the jewels and baby, the disappearance of which have set all London astir.

It develops the American girl did the advertising for information regarding the American, for whom proof of his innocence of crime she has obtained. Brought to identify her child and jewels, a Duchess recognizes her husband in "Spoofy." His return of memory informs him of theft of his own child and family jewels. The two gentlemen by birth, remain "pals" with the Cockney lad who saved both their lives.

Anyone who attends motion pictures to be entertained, regardless of their especial preference in the nature of an offering, will be bound to enjoy "Three Live Ghosts." The photography, of a superior quality, should not be overlooked. Length, 6 reels.—Lillian R. Gale.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Comedy melodrama, equipped with thrills and mystery, incorporating a post war story of unusual interest, is "Three Live Ghosts," which comes to the ———— theatre on ————. It is the picturization of Frederic R. S. Isham's stage play, which won unusual favor with Broadway audiences for many months. It is delivered by a strong cast, under the direction of George Fitzmaurice, and photographed by the famous camera-expert, Arthur Miller. Glimpses of the Limehouse quarter, the famous wharf and near vicinity of London, England, start the rapid action, which keeps running along with smooth sequences until among the most notable stories of the screen has been told in an entertaining, effective way. It is with great pleasure the ———— theatre may hartily recommend "Three Live Ghosts." One you do not want to miss.

"MAKING THE GRADE"
(David Butler Attractions-State Rights)

Whimsical Story of Romance and Melodrama; Fairly Entertaining

DAVID BUTLER has made such a good impression with his features that it is to be regretted his personality does not grace the screen more often. His newest offering, "Making the Grade," is a typical Butler story because it carries a role filled with whimsicality and abundant humor. While of a light texture the plot contains enough high spots to please any patron for the hour. A New York audience in the heart of the tenderloin became quite enraptured with it before the finish had arrived. Those who remember "Smiling All the Way" will compare the newest opus to it. They are apt to be disappointed. For one thing it does not carry the same human qualities—even though it does offer considerable humor.

The idea itself is a pleasant variation on the youth who, given to idleness and indulgence by generous parents, goes to Russia with a detachment of American soldiers to preserve order in a Siberian city, and there finding romance, returns a benedict and mends his ways. That's the whole substance of the plot. Trimmed to its skeleton it does not offer much. But the director has embellished with first rate detail—which because of its humorous note is certain to score. Take for instance the schooling of the bearded moujik—with the pretty teacher assisted by the soldier. Another scene has him finding fun from disobeying the orders of the Russian soldiers. He is no stickler for discipline. And when his captain is forced to salute in return—the young private salutes so often—the former is really provoked. This little scene is certain to be appreciated.

A time comes when the hero returns to America with his bride and finds himself unwelcome at home—the reason being his marriage to a mere peasant. But it turns out eventually that she is a member of the exiled Russian aristocracy. The picture builds a melodramatic moment when she is kidnapped by a party of Reds who are covetous of her jewels. And it behooves our hero to rescue her in typical American fashion. It is a neat punch—the subsequent scene when he gives battle royal to the vicious villains and routs them in single-handed fashion. The parental blessings follow. The hero proves to all—even the spectators—that he has made the grade. He has gone to work and established himself in a snug little home. Need more be said? It is a picture always good in its atmosphere—the Russian barracks being the real thing as far as a studio can make them. Mr. Butler plays his role in an easy, nonchalant manner. One must accept him as a capable light comedian. The picture will get over with any program house.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

David Butler, considered one of the most capable light comedians on the screen, is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— in his latest feature entitled "Making the Grade." This offering is said to be on a par with "Smiling All the Way"—an offering which placed the star in the front rank of entertainers. The story is of a light whimsical character, relying a great deal upon its humorous note. The hero has journeyed to Russia with a detachment of soldiers to preserve order in Siberia. Vladivostok is the city. While there he considers everything from a humorous slant. He encounters a pretty Russian girl who acts as a school-teacher for a mixed assembly of bearded moujiks. He assists her in keeping order and also finds time to keep the American flag flying in the wind. But he runs afoul of his superior officer. By his constant saluting, he provokes the captain and through a breach of duty is lugged off to the guard-house. He informs his friends that he has married and by suppressing a rebellion which has to do with the assassination of women, he obtains his liberty and sails to America with his bride. Once in the States, he discovers that his haughty mother does not favor his marriage with a mere peasant. His bride is caught in the clutches of the Reds, but he effects her rescue. Eventually his mother learns that the young woman is a member of the exiled aristocracy. So she gives her blessing. It is a picture saturated with human touches and plenty of humor.

PROGRAM READER

He was a product of an over-refined community. His parents being blessed with plenty of worldly goods, he was never called upon to exert himself with work. A time came, however, when he showed his indulgent mother that he possessed manly qualities. He made the grade by going to work. He went to Russia first—as a soldier and returned with a bride. Knowing that his parents would never accept her in his home—the erstwhile idle youth went to work. For he had realized his responsibilities. Then one day he suppressed disorder. He was instrumental in capturing a group of vicious Reds. And when the mother found out that his bride was a true aristocrat—well, she allowed that her son was on the road to success. This is in explanation of "Making the Grade" which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with David Butler as star.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a David Butler attraction. And all exhibitors who booked his "Smiling All the Way" will certainly find plenty of entertainment values in his latest feature. It should be played up for its humorous qualities. Describe it as a whimsical study of romance—one tempered with some melodrama. Play up the hero as an over-refined product of civilization who made the grade by marrying and going to work. Mention the other Butler pictures if you played them. Tell that the star is one of the most accomplished light comedians on the screen. Tell that once his products are shown he instantly becomes a popular favorite. A Russian setting with Russian dances and the interpreters properly costumed would make a fitting prologue.

CATCH LINES

Every young man can make the grade if he puts his shoulders to the wheel and goes to work. See how David Butler does it in his newest feature, "Making the Grade."

Is it difficult to make the grade when one has become accustomed to idleness? See David Butler in "Making the Grade."

"ACROSS THE DEADLINE"
(Universal)

Tall Timbers Melodrama—Mayo as Fighting Son of Northwest

FROM a point of scenic value, "Across the Deadline" is entitled to praise, in that the locale, the great Northwest, is interesting, the photography wonderfully beautiful and the atmosphere held distinct, throughout. Also, the star, Frank Mayo, does some splendid work, is good to look at and is deserving of a story which would give him sufficient range to show to advantage. For the story is neither new, novel or easy to take seriously.

The tale is one that begins with depicting hatred between two brothers at the death of their father, each left an equal amount of territory. One is a Puritanical sort, addicated to quoting the Bible, but living far from its teachings. The other is a gambler, general rounder and "bad man," who owns a resort, indulges in everything contrary to law and fears nothing.

They quarrel bitterly over the luring of the Puritan's young son into the dance hall, where he inquires of his uncle if the place is what his father calls it. He is dragged out by the father, who warns the brother that on penalty of death, will he ever induce his offspring to enter there again.

Years go by. The son grown to manhood finds an unconscious girl in the heart of a woods, during a terrific storm. Something has caused her to suffer from loss of memory. Not knowing any better, she accompanies the "bad man" into the resort, and the son, prohibited from crossing those portals, goes after her. His father misunderstands, disowns him, and when the son is obliged to hide the girl in the mountains to escape pursuit of her adversaries, that precipitates a climax.

Eventually the old family feud is ended in the best way possible, so that the barriers may be lifted and happiness reign supreme, the girl's memory returning in time.

There is a great deal of gun play, some good fight scenes and a man-to-man encounter that would indicate both star and his opponent are not afraid of black and blue spots.

The Puritanical father finally believes his prospective daughter-in-law is a good woman, and they fade out into the woods, together. —Length, 5 reels.—Lillian R. Gale.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Frank Mayo is the star of "Across the Dead-Line," the Universal special attraction which will occupy the major part of the program at the ———— theatre on ————. Frank Mayo needs no introduction to the patrons of the ———— theatre. His previous pictures, such as "The Brute Breaker," "Go Straight" and "Dr. Jim," have won him many friends, and in this, his latest production, he continues to portray the virile parts and rapid-fire action which have characterized his past performances.

"Across the Dead-Line" is laid in the northern timber country. It presents a story which is rich in adventure and romance—exactly the type for which Mayo is fitted. It tells of rough lumber jacks, of their loves and their hates, and through it all is a sweet love theme with not a little comedy relief. The supporting cast appearing in "Across the Dead-Line" is notable. It includes Molly Malone and Josef Swickard, who was seen as the French father in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." Other popular players are Wilfred Lucas and Russell Simpson.

"Across the Dead-Line" will be shown for ———— days beginning ————. For those who are fond of rapid fire action and sterling acting, no better picture could be recommended.

PROGRAM READER

A virile action picture, one bound to please all those who like to see red-blooded stories on the screen, is promised for the patrons of the ———— theatre on ————, Frank Mayo is the star. This popular favorite, who has won for himself a reputation of portraying the most sterling type of American manhood on the screen, is seen in a picture admirably suited to his talents. "Across the Dead-Line" is a story of the North woods—of the timber country, a land of romance and adventure; a place for brave men and true women. There is plenty of suspense in the story, which is dramatic to the final fade-out. In support of Frank Mayo is a cast of favorites including such players as Molly Malone, Russell Simpson, Wilfred Lucas, Lydia Knott, Frank Thorwald and Josef Swickard. "Across the Dead-Line" will occupy the screen of the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————. It will be a rare treat for action and thrill lovers.

CATCH LINES

A new Frank Mayo picture—a story of red-blooded action, laid in the northern timber country.

A vivid drama of the great outdoors, of the land of the lumberjacks and tall timber. Frank Mayo has never appeared to better advantage. It is the type of picture which made him famous, and in which he cannot help to please. A rare treat for all his admirers.

A tense drama laid in the timber lands. A story of rugged men—their hates and their loves. Frank Mayo has never been better.

"GLEAM O'DAWN"
(Fox)

New Star Does Well in Frail Character Study

THIS picture is the occasion to introduce a new star in the Fox constellation. His name is John Gilbert, who has achieved some fame with character roles in such pictures as "Shame." It is too early to appreciate his ability as a stellar figure, but he gives evidence in "Gleam O'Dawn" that he is gifted with a share of histrionic talent—enough in fact to warrant a future popularity. The picture given him for his "try-out" is not heavy drama. Indeed it is not much more than a sketch which contains but a single dramatic situation. Naturally much of the incident is repetitious. Since it revolves around the clearing up of a youth's identity and his promise to himself to avenge his mother's wrong—a mother he has never known—one can see that it does not get off its single track.

True, there is a note of romance which provides a happy interlude and gives it some balance. For the most part, however, it tells its little story without any variations of plot or incident and one anticipates the ending far in advance. In a setting of the Canadian woods comes an artist who is called Gleam O'Dawn, since he has never known his identity. The other figures are a wealthy recluse—in reality the youth's father—who is also gifted with the brush, the latter's adopted daughter, and a quaint fiddler who is somewhat unbalanced. The old musician has sane moments regarding the youth's identity. And the latter recognizes in time that the wealthy recluse is his father. He has been told a story of cruelty toward his mother. It is hardly convincing when the young man vows vengeance upon a man for bringing sorrow to a woman he has never known. He is about to mete out punishment when the other man details the secret of his life. The aged fiddler happens upon the scene and sufficient explanations occur to clear the atmosphere.

Meanwhile the romantic note is finding expression—through shy glances and trysting places and secret nooks and walks. There is a quality of suspense attached to the hero which lifts once his identity is established. But the figures stand about and converse and by this padding the slight dramatic note is not given much place in the action. Two mysterious figures are introduced in the opening scene, but they are eliminated quickly when the hero punishes them for intruding in the girl's cabin. The characters are few and the subtitles many. However, the picture gives Gilbert a chance to prove his mettle in a character role. Barbara Bedford makes an appealing heroine. Wilson Hummell as the fiddler, and Edwin Tilton as the recluse are inclined to overact. The picture is adequately staged against charming and picturesque backgrounds. It is mostly a feature of exteriors.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A new star in the person of John Gilbert will appear at the ———— theatre next ———— in "Gleam O'Dawn," based upon a novel by Arthur Goodrich, author of the stage success, "Yes or No." Mr. Gilbert has reached stellar heights through his splendid work in "Shame" and "Gleam O'Dawn" presents him with opportunities to show his skill at interpretation. The story depicts for a background the Canadian woods and the star assumes the role of an artist who accidentally runs across his unrecognized father, a man who had deserted his mother before he was born. By the time that Gleam O'Dawn has learned the identity of his father, he has fallen in love with an adopted daughter of the latter. This precipitates a situation that is tense with dramatic sweep.

The story offers considerable pathos and human interest through the introduction of a certain derelict named Pierre, supposed to be slightly demented. It is by means of this figure that Gleam gathers the information of his identity. The youth, determined to avenge his mother, prepares to kill his unrecognized father, but the girl intervenes. Eventually there is a complete reconciliation. The picture presents fine backgrounds and the acting is always adequate.

PROGRAM READER

Another new star is in the picture firmament. He is John Gilbert. He will appear at the ———— theatre next ———— in a Fox production entitled "Gleam O'Dawn," based upon a novel of that name by Arthur Goodrich, author of "Yes or No." Mr. Gilbert created such a good impression in "Shame" that it was only a question of time before he would be made a star. The picture is a human interest story which calls for a great deal of naturalness for the interpretation. He hated his father—yet when they met in the Canadian woods hate died and a man was reborn. It is a stirring story enacted against beautiful backgrounds. Barbara Bedford is the leading woman.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have a new star to exploit. The patrons who are in a search of new faces will react to your suggestion to come and see the capable John Gilbert, who created such a favorable impression in "Shame." You can tell that the story is by Arthur Goodrich, author of the stage success, "Yes or No." Bill it as a tense drama filled with a fascinating romance. Tell your crowd that they are certain to like the star, the story, and the beautifully photographed Canadian Northwest scenery. Mention that Barbara Bedford is in the cast as leading woman. Your patrons will remember her first starring venture, "Cinderella of the Hills." For a prologue—an atmosphere set would be in harmony.

"MORALS"
(Realart)

Appealing Picture—Well Adapted, Staged and Acted

THIS Realart offering is an adaptation of William J. Locke's charming story, "The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne," which created a wide demand when it was published a few years ago, and which upon the speaking stage met with popular favor as interpreted by Marie Doro. A better selection could not have been made than that of May McAvoy to appear in the charming role of Carlotta—the girl raised in a Turkish harem but who escapes to the Occident and is befriended by a bachelor who possesses an indifference to women. One may appreciate the subtle quality of romance in this situation. And trust Miss McAvoy to discover every whim and impulse in the drawing. The role is similar to her Grizel in "Sentimental Tommy" in its wistfulness and appeal. Or perhaps it is the manner of the star's interpretation. Whatever it is, she makes the part wholly lovable and endows it with an appeal that is irresistible.

Can you imagine a grimy bachelor resisting the frank innocence of such a girl? He attempts to establish barriers. He will not countenance any of her whimsicalities. But in the end he succumbs to the call of youth and the force of love. Many patrons will be familiar with this picture if they have read the book or seen the play. But even these folks will respond again. Why? Because the romance is so emphatic. And the picture as a whole is blessed with so many interesting highlights. Miss McAvoy may have appeared in roles which carried a more appealing quaintness. But she is endowed with enough gift of pantomime to charm even the most jaded picturegoer. Certainly she has opportunities here.

It is a picture that is finely adapted. There is much of Locke's charm of situation about it. Also the characterization is well established. The director has brought out all the little details besides giving substance to the broader scenes. Pictorially the offering is a gem. The interiors are well conceived and executed with fitting harmony. "Morals" possesses considerable human interest. It may be light in the general aspect of its theme but there is no denying its power to please anyone in search of innocent entertainment. Another point in its favor is its exploitation angle. Any exhibitor with half an eye will be able to put over an effective prologue. An Oriental scene—some Oriental dances and similar ideas would aid tremendously in giving it value. Certainly it looks like a money maker. In mentioning the cast William P. Carleton deserves praise for his portrayal of the bachelor. It is a finely shaded performance.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Picture audiences that enjoy a plot that is different should not fail to see "Morals," which will be shown at the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. This is a screen version of Locket's popular novel, "The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne," and stars the appealing favorite, May McAvoy. It is said by those who have seen the picture—that Miss McAvoy is delightful as Carlotta, the little Anglo-Turkish harem girl who enters into the conventional life of staid Sir Marcus Ordeyne and proceeds to shatter all of his pre-conceived notions concerning womanhood. Carlotta embarks upon a series of adventures which invite her into a deal of complications. Her utter frankness and innocence and appeal are enough to fascinate the staid Sir Marcus.

Those who admired the work of the star in "Sentimental Tommy" will have additional cause to commend her appealing charm in "Morals." William P. Carleton is an excellent choice as Sir Marcus, while others who contribute noteworthy performances are Kathlyn Williams, William E. Lawrence, Sydney Bracey and Marian Skinner. Like all William D. Taylor productions, the offering is admirably staged—the details of costuming and settings being correct in appointment and atmosphere.

PROGRAM READER

Almost as appealing and whimsical a heroine as Barrie furnished her in Grizel of "Sentimental Tommy," is the role of Carlotta, from Locke's immortal "Morals of Marcus," in which May McAvoy is to be seen this coming ———— in "Morals," at the ————. As a young English girl who lived from infancy until she was grown in a Turkish harem, and then was suddenly transplanted into the atmosphere of sophisticated London drawing-rooms, Miss McAvoy gives an impersonation of rare charm and appreciation of comedy values. Her beauty has many opportunities in a wide range of costumes from the fantastic garb of the harem to the latest modes of the modern society girl. Come and be genuinely entertained.

SUGGESTIONS

Realart is supplying a number of one, three, and six-sheets for this feature, which more than anything else will acquaint the crowd with the values of the offering. It is a romantic adventure of an English girl raised in a harem who escapes and finds happiness in London. The picture suggests a rich prologue—which can feature a harem scene with the ensemble of girls properly attired in Turkish costumes and a talented dancer interpretating an Oriental dance. Of course the star should come in for some special billing. Her past performances entitle her to considerable praise. Street stunts are suggestive, too. Also a tie-up with book-stores.

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION

Paramount Pictures

If it's a Paramount Picture it's the best show in town

Why I Show Paramount Pictures

1. The most consistently good program of motion pictures on the market.

2. Business methods that can be compared only to those utilized by the biggest and most successful business concerns in the mercantile field.

3. An association with them since their business inception that has been a series of pleasant and profitable relations.

Those three reasons are the biggest ones I can think of when anyone puts the question to me about why I show Paramount pictures. There can be a whole lot said about each one of these reasons, too, but boiled down it amounts to just that.

BY "MOST consistently good program," I mean that day in and day out Paramount pictures are leaders in the field, and further, the exhibitors aren't the only ones who know it. Through some reason or other, that all of us know is nothing more or less than a wonderful advertising campaign on a nation-wide basis, the people of the United States are just as familiar with the word Paramount as they are with a certain brand of nationally advertised soap and a well-known chewing gum.

Paramount has offered the product to back these big campaigns, and consequently they are reaping the benefit, together with the exhibitors, today.

When I book a picture or have any transactions with a film exchange, I like to have it on a strictly business-like basis. I find the same kind of business methods in vogue in the Paramount office as I did in the biggest mercantile concerns when I was doing business in that field. There is no bartering, no haggling and everything seems to run off like clock-work insofar as service is concerned.

My relations with the Paramount exchange, as I look back over it, has been nothing but a series of pleasant relations. I have been doing business with them as long as anybody—ever since their inception, and am in a mighty good position to know whereof I speak.

Consistency of product, sound business methods and courtesy and fair dealing will come pretty close to winning in any field. Paramount has all of these attributes, and—they're winners!

Dear Sir:-

I am only too glad to congratulate the Cosmopolitan Company on its late releases. This year's product shows a wonderful improvement over the former productions, which is quite a remarkable statement when you take into consideration the fact that Cosmopolitan has produced probably some of the most wonderful pictures that have ever been portrayed on the silver screen.

I greatly appreciated ENCHANTMENT. The delicate symbolism of the play is most pleasing. The modern system of lighting and the artistic beauty embodied in the settings were really enchanting. The theme of the play, with its careful delineation of characters shows what can be done when real literary tactics are applied with sense and consideration to the plays for the silver screen.

In JUST AROUND THE CORNER you have given us a character story so true to life that the realism gets under the skin and makes one cry and laugh at the same time. It reminds of HUMORESQUE, but is better. It reminds us of OVER THE HILL, but it avoids the sensational. Yet it is really "meaty" with those delicious morsels which move our finer emotions.

Again I must congratulate your Corporation for choosing plays of such a nature that the censors need not worry. In the long run you will find that you are making no error by following this line, for hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of valuable scenes are scrapped by the censors scissors yearly, which is a financial fact to be considered and appreciated.

Hoping that you will continue to follow your line of producing more of these wonderful character plays, I remain,

Most sincerely yours,

Who Won The BATTLE of JUTLAND?

Turn and Learn~

The BATTLE of JUTLAND No Longer

SHROUDED IN MYSTERY

WHO won the Battle of Jutland? This was a question of international dispute even among naval experts until this motion picture was finished. Now audiences everywhere can form their own judgment as to who won.

The immense task of comparing all the logs kept by the gunnery officers of both the British and German fleets throughout every stage of the conflict, and then of re-enacting with models every move of every battleship, cruiser, destroyer and torpedo boat engaged, was done by Major General Sir George Aston, K.C.B., for thirty-eight years a British naval officer.

It took three years' preparation and over 3,000,000 moves of the model ships to reproduce faithfully every course steered, every sinking, torpedo attack and broadside, and every other recorded incident. Each model could be moved but a sixteenth of an inch at a time. It is this fidelity to facts which makes The Battle of Jutland the greatest historical drama ever screened.

Audiences realize they are seeing unbiased history, that every ship they watch sink beneath the surface of the North Sea represents an actual incident in this world's greatest sea battle. The reactions are unlike any aroused by imaginative screen drama. They prove that truth is more thrilling than fiction, even on the screen.

AMERICAN PREMIERE At the RIALTO THEATRE New York City, Week of Nov. 20th AROUSED INTENSE INTEREST

What Unbiased New York Newspapers Said!

NEW YORK MAIL:

" 'The Battle of Jutland,' a picturization of the famous sea fight of the World War—the only clash between the grand fleets of Great Britain and Germany, is a film of unusual interest. It gives a most vivid picture of the epoch-making battle."

NEW YORK HERALD:

" 'The Battle of Jutland,' produced under the supervision of Major General Sir George Aston, K.C.B., from official records, shows in a clear-cut and engrossing way the whole progress of the fight, though it glosses over the finish and leaves unexplained why Jellicoe didn't smear the Germans more."

NEW YORK TELEGRAM:

" 'The Battle of Jutland' . . . marvelous reproduction of the battle between the British and German fleets in the North Sea . . . So realistically has it been done, so dramatically has the fight been laid out . . . that the spectator believes he is upon some high vantage point overlooking the historic conflict. Torpedoes worm their fatal white line toward enemy ships, fire flashes from the ships' sides, there are great flashes, whirling of waters and ships disappear below the surface."

NEW YORK EVENING JOURNAL:

" 'The Battle of Jutland' is a fascinating moving picture compiled under the direction of Major General Sir George Aston, following careful preparation. It tells of the great naval maneuvers between the English and German fleets in . . . the affair that many consider the turning point of the war . . . intensely interesting."

NEW YORK WORLD:

"A reproduction . . . that sets before us the actual maneuvering of the various opposing craft of the Battle of Jutland, wherein Admiral Beatty outthought and out-fought the Germans in the World War's great sea engagement. The minutest detail of the attacks is shown—submarines launching torpedoes, battleships sinking, gun-fire from the giant warships, and all. An invaluable animated chapter of the Great War."

HIRAM ABRAMS : PRESIDENT

New York, Chillicothe, Ohio, Los Angeles —and— the exhibitor's dollar.

LET'S analyze the picture industry in terms of geography.

Chillicothe, Ohio, represents the public that pays its quarters to fifteen thousand exhibitors who, in turn, pay their dollars for motion picture productions.

Los Angeles typifies the studio where is to be found the creative brains that is solely responsible for the entertainment that is placed upon the Chillicothe screens.

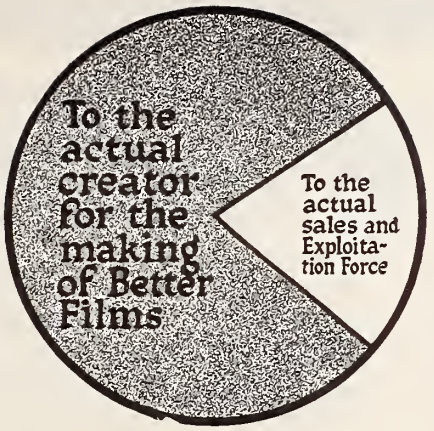
New York—well, New York means a certain quantity of hard-working, capable sales and exploitation brains helping both Los Angeles and Chillicothe, AND—a host of highways and byways, cow-paths and lanes leading to middlemen, incompetents, relatives, wasters, and hangers-on of all sorts.

Now how about the "exhibitor's dollar"?

How is it split—geographically speaking—after it leaves Chillicothe, Ohio, or the box-office of Fred Quimby, in Fort Wayne, "Doc" Horator, in Toledo, Gene Pearce, in New Orleans, or your box-office?

Remember, that dollar has been paid for motion picture entertainment; for motion picture entertainment delivered, and to encourage and promote better, more artistic, more profitable future motion picture entertainment.

How is it split?



Well, in the past, Los Angeles—meaning the actual creative brains back of the motion picture—has received about fifteen cents of that dollar; the real sales and exploitation brains in New York have had a few paltry pennies dropped in their hats; and practically all of that dollar has gone arolling down—

"the highways and byways, cowpaths and lanes leading to middlemen, incompetents, relatives, wasters, and hangers-on of all sort."

Isn't it a crime?

There's nothing left for "the middlemen, incompetents, relatives, wasters, and hangers-on of all sorts."

What does this mean when the dollar completes its cycle?

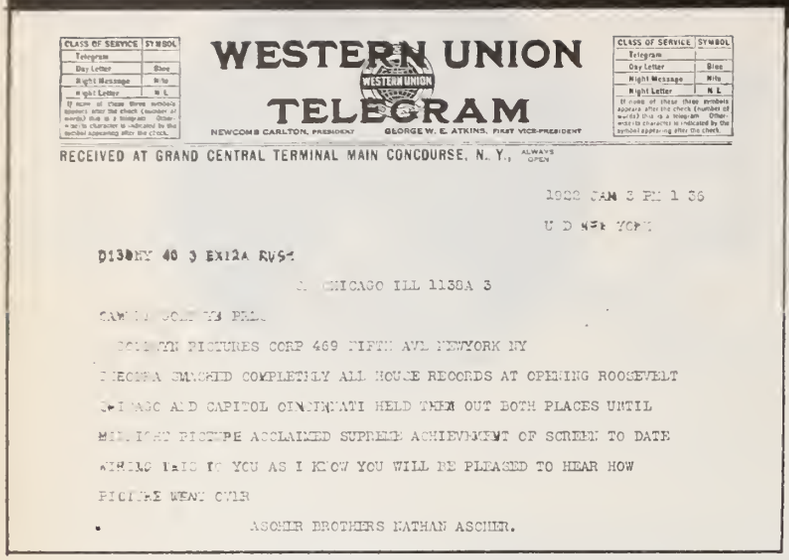
It means efficient sales, distribution and advertising of motion pictures, and it means better and more profitable motion pictures going back to Chillicothe, Ohio, as payment for that dollar.

Isn't it about time we had this condition?

The swivel chairs of New York never brought about one step of progress in the motion picture industry.

The Lion's share has been going to the coyotes!

Wid Gunning says:



"The Lion's share to the Lions."

Any wonder that the foremost production—creative—brains of the industry are conferring with him on their future plans? Any wonder that the fastest stepping, hardest working sales and exploitation workers in the industry are being allied with Wid Gunning, Inc?

A new film geography is being written, with LOS ANGELES and CHILLICOTHE in capital letters, and New York, well—new york.

" Reckless Chances " has everything which the name implies. It's a speedy railroad story of daring adventure and nervy action. It opens with a train robbery, an automobile crash, an astonishing rescue and a desperate hand-to-hand fight. It has a wonderful vein of comedy, in addition to its excitement, and a romance which laughs at danger.

If there was ever a feature which has the very essence of audience appeal, its title is " Reckless Chances."

"Reckless Chances"

A Herald Production

A freight train running riot on the Main Line. A screeching, plunging locomotive in pursuit. An upgrade ahead. Gradually the engine creeps up on the heavier train. A last desperate, reckless chance. Oil on the rails. It works. The engine falls back and the happiness of an eloping couple is saved from an angry father and a disappointed suitor.

One of the many exciting moments in " Reckless Chances," the J. P. McGowan thrill feature of adventure and romance.

"The Bashful Suitor," the second picture of the Great Masterpieces Series, has more than fulfilled the magnificent promise of "The Beggar Maid." At its pre-release showings at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, it startled New York's most critical audiences with its originality.

In a quaint Dutch setting is told the love story back of Josef Israels' immortal painting. The men who made "The Beggar Maid," the two reel sensation of the past year, have imparted the same intensity of interest, the same perfection of photography to this new picture.

These pictures are being shown in the leading theatres of the country, and have never failed in overshadowing in interest any five or six reel feature shown on the same bill.

Capacity Crowds Throng

"Hail the Woman" has made a tremendous hit in every theatre played. It is the second picture which ever had a week's run at the Palace Theatre, Wichita, Kans. Stanley Chambers, of the Palace, says it went over big and pleased the audiences tremendously. Below you will see the crowds lined up before his house.

Mr. Charles W. Picquit, of the Colonial Theatre, Pinehurst, N. C., says:

"I have just screened a production that I will remember long after all the others are forgotten. I have waited weeks to see 'Hail the Woman.' It was well worth waiting for. My vocabulary is entirely inadequate to express my sentiments about it, but it's a wonderful picture.

"There's a real story, a thing that is rare in pictures these days. Mr. Ince has assembled a perfect cast, every one of whom seems born to the role they are playing. He has blended the story, the cast, the backgrounds and settings perfectly. It is a great big message presented in a great big way which will impress itself upon the memory of every man, woman and child. The scenes representing the Christmas spirit are marvels of beauty.

"In short every city, town, hamlet and four corners should see 'Hail the Woman' and every town will be the better for having it and everybody will be the better for seeing it."

Big Frisco Theatre 2nd Week!

"Hail the Woman" made such a big success at the Tivoli Theatre, on its first week that it was held over. Newspaper critics after acclaiming it the biggest picture of the year, state that the crowds continue to throng the theatre to capacity.

Read These Remarkable Newspaper Reviews on the 1st and 2nd Week Run:

BEST OF THE YEAR

1st Week's Review—"One of the big productions of the year, big in theme and big in presentation. It is intensely human, always natural and completely interesting. There is a gulp at your throat and a clutch at your heart. Story is magnificently told, splendidly acted, finely photographed. It strikes a new note and stands out as an example for others to follow."—San Francisco Daily News.

TREMENDOUS CROWDS

2nd Week's Review—"This great picture is held over for a second week and deserves the big patronage it is getting. It should be run for many weeks."—San Francisco Daily News.

HELD THEM SPELLBOUND

1st Week's Review—"Audiences were held spellbound by simplicity and naturalness of the all-absorbing story. It was received with great acclaim. A standard closely approaching perfection in every detail. Told in bold and slashing strokes that are absolutely compelling in intensity. Attention is riveted to screen—a message of the glorification of woman."—San Francisco Call.

BIGGEST SUCCESS OF YEAR

MOST DRAMATIC PICTURE

1st Week's Review—"I do not think there has been anything so finely dramatic in the movies. I recommend this to the entire public—it is certainly a well made picture, dramatic and entertaining all through."—San Francisco Examiner.

PLAYS TO CAPACITY

2nd Week's Review—"This superb production kept the Tivoli thronged when it opened for second week. An unusual offering—a brilliant cast. It is playing to capacity crowds."—San Francisco Examiner.

WONDERFUL ACHIEVEMENT

BIG DRAWING CARD

2nd Week's Review—"It continues to prove a big drawing card on the second week. It is one of the outstanding successes of the year."—San Francisco Chronicle.

IT STANDS ALONE

1st Week's Review—"A picture that will stand alone for a long time. It will go down as one of the big productions of 1921, and there is nothing in sight to equal it. The cast is an unusual one, about the best work presented on the screen in many a day."—San Francisco Bulletin.

CROWDS PACK THEATRE

2nd Week's Review—"It is making a big success and the crowds are continuing to pack the theatre."—San Francisco Bulletin.

Motion Picture News

THE phenomenal success of the recent production of "Ten Nights in a Barroom," judged by its first few showings, opens up a very large subject.

And one extremely, and immediately, important.

* * *

The subject is simply this: what kind of picture does the present-day public want?

Other pictures and other signs in general point to a new demand upon the part of the picture-going public, or at least a demand which production and distribution are not, apparently, fully prepared to meet.

It has no star; no expensive copyrighted play, book or story; no sensationalism; no lavishness in production;

Yet the people want it; and there's no mistake about it.

* * *

We won't attempt to state here what the picture contains in the way of box-office values.

But we hazard, broadly, a guess that the public welcomes such a picture because the public has been surfeited with too many pictures it doesn't welcome.

And since a large part of our output of pictures for the past several years and still remains—star series pictures, we are inclined to believe that the public is protesting against an overdoing of this kind of production.

* * *

The star picture discussion is a ticklish one to tackle. Non-star programs have been launched in the past and haven't been startling successes. The star in the picture is a big drawing card; there is no question about that.

But any good value can be overdone.

* * *

First we must eliminate from the discussion those very prominent stars—it isn't necessary to name them —whose values are thoroughly established. Most of them are producers today and as producers they are broadly and seriously minded enough to realize that they've got to put out big and well-rounded pictures in order to make both ends of the ledger meet.

We are referring particularly to the lesser degree star from whom only a certain vehicle can be selected and for whose sake all other acting must be subordinated.

That is the type of picture which the public today is protesting against in no uncertain terms.

* * *

There is another and very important side to this star question and that is the stars' salary. The salary scale has grown by leaps and bounds till it has become the wonder of the world.

It has always seemed a logical thing to us—in other words a question of supply and demand. The star acquires a public following; the exhibitor therefore wanted the star picture; the producers competed to get the stars. But there comes, naturally, a salary point at which the producer loses money on the star, or the exhibitor, or both.

* * *

If a star is worth a big salary there's one good way to prove it and that is for the star to become a producer and take the salary out of the pictures' reasonable profits. No one will quarrel with that arrangement.

If a star appears in a good picture well and good. A good picture is better off if it has a star or stars. But the star has got to realize—and the handwriting is at last plainly on the wall—that the star alone won't pull the picture along. The play's the thing; and that means a story that will stand on its own feet with a cast and composition that will adequately interpret it.

* * *

To sum up:

The public is protesting against the purely star picture, the picture made vapid by star subjugation.

The industry is protesting against the stars' super salary.

We submit the situation to the star, with the warning that something is going to break.

VOL. XXV JANUARY 21, 1922 No. 5

Walter Greene and Warren Form Company

World-Wide Distribution of Independent Productions Purpose of New Organization

ONE of the most important announcements of the week's news is that heralding the organization of the American Releasing Corporation with Walter E. Greene as president and F. B. Warren as vice-president. The American Releasing Corporation, according to the announcement, will be "exclusively a mercantile sales organization" and will be devoted to the task of distributing "throughout the world the productions of independent makers of product." The organization also purposes "to lay the basic groundwork for later taking over the sales and physical distribution of other releasing companies." An announcement from the New York office of the new company follows:

"Believing that the new year is bringing a great business revival in America and that a powerful independent motion picture distributing system is required in the industry, Walter E. Greene and F. B. Warren announce the organization of the American Releasing Corporation.

"This important alliance brings into association and ownership of the new company, Mr. Greene, one of the founders of Paramount, the organizer and president of Artcraft, the first selective company which controlled the productions of Pickford, Fairbanks, Griffith and others, and later vice-president in charge of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; and F. B. Warren, formerly vice-president in charge of distribution of the Goldwyn company and later organizer and general manager of the Associated Producers' distribution.

"These two well-equipped executives have extensive friendships with theatre owners and foreign distributors and have been significant organization-builders in the industry.

"American Releasing Corporation is exclusively a mercantile sales organization that will not enter into the production or ownership of pictures. It will distribute throughout the world the productions of independent makers of product and lay the basic groundwork for later taking over the sales and physical distribution of other releasing companies.

This organization is privately owned by its officers, Mr. Greene being president and Mr. Warren vice-president. There is no general stock issue for the company, all of its stock being held by these principals. Around Messrs. Greene and Warren there will be assembled a staff of exceptionally well-equipped executives who have the confidence of producers and exhibitors, including several men who have been high in power in other big national distributions.

"A long-term lease has been signed for the entire third floor of the building at 15 West 44th Street, New York City, which will be the American company's home offices. The company took possession of these quarters January 1.

"A number of unusual productions are being edited or printed in Eastern laboratories which will constitute the first releases of the new company. Trade showings will be held immediately in many sections of the United States.

"American Releasing expects to issue one picture a week of high standard from late January to June and in its first calendar year will have a total output of twenty-six productions, more than half of which are either completed or in the making.

"Few men in the industry have laid a broader and sounder groundwork than Messrs. Greene and Warren. Each has spent years in the organization and sales side of the industry and each has built powerful and enduring friendships. With the important financial interests that touch the picture business giving more attention than ever before to the economical and careful operation of distributions, these new distributors are setting out with the American Releasing organization to operate the most ambitious of independent concerns which will keep wholly free of production activities of its own.

"Announcement of the initial product to be offered through the new company will be made in the next few days and this first announcement will bring elements of a big surprise to the industry in general."

San Francisco Officials Against Censorship

Censorship Attacked by President of Supervisors at Luncheon in Honor of Thos. H. Ince

CENSORSHIP is taboo in San Francisco. At a luncheon at the St. Francis Hotel a few days ago, arranged by the city authorities in honor of Thomas H. Ince, Joseph Mulvehill, president of the Board of Supervisors, made it plain that San Francisco's city officials consider censorship, aside from the regulatory powers invested in the police authorities, absolutely unnecessary. Senator I. Wolf, who also addressed the diners, paid a glowing tribute to Mr. Ince as "a man of enterprise, a man of genius, a financier, and a pioneer."

Mr. Ince was unable to attend the luncheon, having been taken suddenly ill the night he was to leave for San Francisco. J. Parker Read, Jr., and Clark Thomas, general-manager for Mr. Ince, attended as Mr. Ince's personal representatives. The purpose of the luncheon sponsored by the city officials was to honor Mr. Ince for his contribution to the City of San Francisco of a fire-prevention picture.

Edward J. Rainely, secretary and personal envoy of Mayor James Rolph, acted as toastmaster of the luncheon, which was presided over by Sam. Y. Edwards, manager of the Associated First National exchange in San Francisco. Paul Ashe, musical director of the Turner & Dahnken circuit, played several selections, then the speaking began. Addresses were made by Joseph Mulvehill, president of the San Francisco Board of Supervisors; Senator Edward I. Wolf; Fire Chief Thomas R. Murphy; J. Parker Read; Judge A. P. Barnett; John Brehaney, veteran 'Frisco film man; and Clark Thomas.

"Over five years ago San Francisco had a board of censorship composed of five members," said Supervisor Mulvehill. "In 1916 an amendment was offered to the ordinance to increase the Board of Censorship from five to nine. The Board of Supervisors voted that amendment down, and I had the pleasure of introducing an amendment abolishing the board of censorship in San Francisco, placing the censorship of motion pictures with the people of San Francisco themselves, as well as the producers.

"The only censor of motion pictures in San Francisco today is the Chief of Police. He was authorized and empowered in that license to look at the pictures that perhaps at some time might need censorship; and I can honestly tell you, gentlemen, that I don't believe there has been three occasions in almost six years where the Chief of Police has been called upon to prohibit the exhibiting of a motion picture in San Francisco. And we are proud, we city officials of San Francisco, to tell you that San Francisco was one of the first, if not the first, large city in the United States to abolish the censorship of motion pictures. We believe that the producers today who are investing their money and their time in this industry, and that the exhibitors, as well as the people, shall be the ones to say what shall be and what shall not be suppressed. The Board of Supervisors has at all times tried to cooperate with the producers, as well as the exhibitors, and it has always been a pleasure to work with them in San Francisco."

Senator Wolf, one of the wisest and

BEFORE an audience which crowded the capacity of the Central theatre, the Universal "over-a-million-dollar" production of "Foolish Wives," over eighteen months in the making, was presented for the first time the night of January 11. A typical Metropolitan audience, critics, first nighters, society, stage and screen celebrities, and an admixture of bank officials and politicians attended.

The length of the picture, 14 reels, convinced Andrew J. Cobe, manager of the Central theatre, who made the presentation, that it would be foolhardy to take up any time in preliminary flourishes or atmospheric effects. Twenty bars of music, from the 35-piece orchestra under the direction of Frank Cork, was the only prelude to the presentation of this fortune in celluloid. All of the supporting evidence and contributory effort was carried in a neat little program which gave all of the information which any audience could desire, without taking up screen footage. Incidental music had been especially composed for the picture by Sigmund Romberg, composer of "Bombo," "Blossom Time," "Maytime" and all the Winter Garden Passing Shows since that of 1914.

Prominent in last night's gathering was Maude George, who plays one of the leading roles in the picture. Miss George came to New York especially for the opening performance, as did Mr. and Mrs. Von Stroheim. Another trans-continental first-nighter was Miss Florence Lawrence, the critic of the Los Angeles Examiner, and one of the best known and most religiously followed critics of the silent drama.

Sitting in the back of the theatre where he could, unobserved, watch the reaction of the audience to his most tremendous undertaking, a fortune at stake which would have daunted the captain of any industry, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal and the most confident man in the house. Although few saw him enter his position was conspicuous as the lights went up and he received the overwhelming congratulations of the entire aisle.

On account of the tempestuous nature of the weather the brilliant audience which attended the opening was unable to appreciate to its full the elaborate lobby display and ingenious decorations which had been designed by Mr. Cobe and Harry Reichenbach. On either side of the entrance were striking panels with the name "Foolish Wives" in raised letters in imitation of white gold. Over the centre of the doorway were paintings of four of the principals—Maude George, Erich von Stroheim, Miss du Pont and Mae Busch and directly beneath them an ingeniously contrived miniature representation of the big gambling scene with the roulette wheel electrically operated and the figures around the gambling table. These figures are electrically controlled to imitate the placing of bets on the green cloth and the croupier clearing the table at each turn of the wheel. Inside the lobby were huge picture frames with real paintings set deep in frames illuminated with two color lights in a shadow box effect. The six paintings on either side of the lobby took up virtually the entire wall space between the inner doors and the animated casino scene. Several of the paintings were so designed as to give actual depth and definition to the picture. For instance, the scene in which von Stroheim crawls up the outside of the chateau and looks in the window discloses in the interior a practical chair with the discarded habiliments of the occupant of the room thrown over it in disarray.

Another striking feature and the only one which was allowed to obtrude itself upon the gaze of the first-night audience was the inspiring stage setting which had been designed by Gates & Morange under the orders of Mr. Cobe.

Among those in attendance were:

Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Murray Hulbert, President of the Board of Aldermen; Thomas J. Drennan, Fire Commissioner of New York; Charles H. Sabin, President Guaranty Trust Co.; Eli Bernheim, President of Columbia Bank; M. J. Fox, Vice-President Columbia Bank; Rupert Hughes, Miss Jeannie McPherson; Lee Shubert; John Barrymore; Rev. Stephen S. Wise; Hon. E. C. Knight, former State Controller, Mayor of Buffalo; Judge Geo. W. Simpson; Jules E. Brulatour; Dr. and Mrs. B. Sour; P. A. Powers; Nicholas Schenck; Geo. W. Fraker, Vice-President National City Bank; Miss Elizabeth Marbury; Senator Geo. H. Cobb; William A. Johnston, President of the Motion Picture News; Messmore Kendall; Isadore Witmark; Carl Laemmle, President of Universal; R. H. Cochrane, Vice-President of Universal; Julius Stern, 2nd Vice-President of Universal; Judge Corrigan; S. W. Strauss; Dr. B. Prusik, Consul General of Czecho-Slovakia; Arthur Robitschek of International Filmschau, Prague; Magistrate Max Levine; James W. Gerard, ex-ambassador to Germany; John Harriss, deputy police commissioner; Dr. Carl Simon, deputy police commissioner; B. Herman Ridder; E. H. Goldstein; Miss Hope Hampton; Geo. D. Co.; Fritz Tidden; P. Davidson; George Wallace, of the Central Union Trust Co.; K. A. Bickel of the United Press; Mr. and Mrs. Louis Zelazo.

Among the prominent exhibitors who were present were William Fox, S. A. Rothafel, Joe Plunkett, Ed. Bowes and Mrs. Bowes, Margaret Illington, B. M. Moss, J. M. Springer of the Symphony theatre; Mr. and Mrs. Tom Moore of the Rialto theatre, Washington; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Asher of Boston; Mr. and Mrs. David Stoneman of Boston; Mr. and Mrs. J. Lurie of Boston; Mr. and Mrs. Morris E. Felt of Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. David Bortin, of Felt Bros., Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. S. Barrett McCormick of Cleveland; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hart, Butterfly theatre, Milwaukee; Doc. Horator and Jack Gardner of Pantheon theatre, Toledo; and Frank Newman of the Newman theatre, Kansas City.

"A Monumental Symbol of Film Progress"

THE long heralded million dollar production has arrived. Erich von Stroheim's stupendous picture, "Foolish Wives," upon which will be lavished encomiums of the highest praise, certainly brings fitting tribute to Universal for its ambition to build a monumental milestone as a symbol of film progress. The producers have given the gifted director a free hand, knowing his skill and realizing that he would not misuse the generosity showered upon him. Mr. Stroheim has achieved a spectacular and daring—production—one that not only lives up to its extensive advertising as far as expenditures are concerned, but which more than justifies the confidence that Universal has placed in him. Accuracy and detail—detail and accuracy—have seemingly been his slogans.

The world's playground, Monte Carlo, is reproduced in dazzling color and fascinating atmosphere. Against this romantic background surging with life and passion, there shapes a drama as old as the world itself—a drama which the director has embroidered with intricate patterns. The battle of the sexes is dominant, with the god of the machine played by Mr. Stroheim himself. And beneath it all is a subtle lesson in morals. The director is a born story teller. He knows character, situation and climax. And he weaves his pattern with not a thread missing. He plays on the heart strings of sympathy like a Heifetz. Like Belasco he strives for artistic effects always, yet never missing an opportunity to achieve stark realities.

A fraud, a strutting puppet, a moron, his sole ambition the conquering of feminine hearts, he makes this figure a vivid, uncanny Mephistofeles. Can he direct? Follow him from the moment that he adjusts his monocle in the breakfast scene, through his philandering situations with the impressionable wife and the moments when he achieves astonishing climaxes and vivid flashes of Monte Carlo life with the Casino, the Promenade and the cafes in all their exciting color, to the hour that he meets an ignominious death and you will appreciate his dramatic gifts. Minute details are everywhere—all embellished with a continental flavor. It is a kaleidoscope of throbbing life. The fire scene has been superbly executed. Pictorially there is a place for everything and everything is in place. Soft focus, night photography—the technical details—these are eloquent. The acting of Maude George is suberb in its suggestion of feminine whim and fancy. "Foolish Wives!" Indeed a million dollar production.—LAURENCE REID.

"Maintain Prices"—Buxbaum; "Reduce, or Theatres Will Close"—Brandt

SHOULD admission prices be maintained at their present level or lowered?

Harry Buxbaum, New York district manager for Famous Players-Lasky, in a statement this week in answer to the preceding inquiry, takes the stand that prices to the public should be maintained as the logical policy in view of the high cost of production and the consequent necessity of maintaining present rentals. The pertinent points of Mr. Buxbaum's statement follow:

Producing costs have mounted up until today the production of a picture is many times what would have been spent on the same production had it been made in the past.

There is only one outcome in such a case, and that is higher prices to the exhibitor, with the logical result of higher prices to the patrons.

Movie fans would far prefer to see an expensive production at thirty-five cents rather than a poor one at twenty-five. To give the fans what they want, prices, in the majority of cases, will have to be advanced, and I am convinced that the patrons are willing to pay accordingly.

Actual instances of an advance in prices when playing "The Sheik" and similar pictures prove that exhibitors realize increased box-office receipts and that the patrons pay the increase without complaint.

On the other hand, I know of an instance in New Jersey where prices were reduced from 25 and 35 cents to 15 and 20 cents. The reduction resulted in no increased patronage and a decided drop in the cash receipts.

The exhibitor has every excuse to maintain prices: everything connected with the making of films has gone up, and huge sums are spent in an effort to make them perfect.

The other side of the question is set forth by William Brandt, president of the Theatre Owners Chambers of Commerce, as follows:

I am not an alarmist, but unless something radical is done and done real soon in reducing film prices to exhibitors, I predict before the first day of summer arrives, that over 75 per cent. of the theatres in this territory will be obliged to close their doors.

The difference in the present exhibition values which the exhibitors are obliged to pay in their respective territories and the receipts at the box office are so far apart and their losses so heavy, that unless some change is made real soon, he will not be able to continue to lose the huge amount of money which he is obliged to do at present.

The tremendous depression in this business started when the exhibitors of this territory had the poorest summer of their existence. The season opened in September with very slight gains over the summer business, but the film rentals, instead of decreasing in accordance with the decrease at the box office, in practically every instance, was increased.

Many exhibitors paid exorbitant prices for the best attractions they could obtain, hoping thereby, to stimulate and improve business, and while in some instances business was stimulating, yet the general run was far below the average house expense.

I am serving notice upon the whole industry, that a change must come at once. We are skating on very thin ice and if we don't want to fall through, we must readjust our conditions just the same as every other industry has been obliged to do.

Watterson R. Rothacker at his desk in the executive offices of the Los Angeles Rothacker-Aller laboratories

Rothacker Named Director of United Studios

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER has been elected a member of the board of directors of the United Studios, of Hollywood, formerly the Brunton Studios.

Mr. Rothacker has been a figure in the motion-picture field since the early days. Twelve years ago he made the first organized effort to adapt the silver-sheet to the needs of business. He wrote the first book on motion-picture advertising and at present is a member of the factulty of the Page-Davis School of Advertising.

He was vice-president of the Motion Picture Board of Trade and for a number of years was chairman of the membership committe of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. He has long been a stockholder in the Universal Film Mfg. Co. He is president of the Rothacker Film Mfg. Co. of Chicago, the Rothacker Film Mfg. Co. of New York and Rothacker-Aller Laboratories of Los Angeles.

Canadian Customs Revises Order on Film Shipment

The Canadian Department of Customs has revised Section 13 of its original instructions regarding the designation of country of origin which must be indicated upon all film and film accessories which are shipped into Canada.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has been advised of this revision and has so notified its company members. Section 13 of the "Country of Origin" regulations now reads:

"The name of a manufacturer or his trade-mark, accompanied by the name of the country or a place in a province, state or other division of a country where the goods have been manufactured or produced, will be accepted as sufficient indication of the country of origin."

The Chief Clerk of the Customs Office at Ottawa advises that in so far as lithographs are concerned, the name of the maker and the city in which they are made on the lithograph itself will be sufficient indication of the country of origin.

Lillian Gale Temporarily Leaves Motion Picture News

Miss Lillian R. Gale, who has been actively connected with the MOTION PICTURE NEWS since August, 1920, will temporarily discontinue her connection with the NEWS. Miss Gale is to join the staff of the X-L Pictures Corporation, which will produce "A Woman's Woman," under the direction of Charles Giblyn.

The NEWS wishes Miss Gale all possible success and will welcome her return to the staff upon the completion of her contract with X-L Pictures.

Marcus Loew and Wm. E. Atkinson, president and general manager, respectively, of Metro Pictures

Rumors Concerning Metro Set at Rest

ON another page we carry a statement from the Metro offices as to election of officers for the next year.

The announcement of the election of Marcus Loew as president and William E. Atkinson as vice-president and general manager sets at rest the various rumors concerning Metro which have been rife for several months.

Mr. Atkinson, as general manager of the organization will have in charge the carrying out of the policies of the executive committee and will be in general charge of the organization. He has been connected with the company for the past six years and has held the office of general manager for five years.

Now that the announcement of the firm has been made, the field organization is set for the biggest year in the history of the company and every exchangeman is making plans to break all past records.

Motion Picture News is glad to be able to make this announcement authoritatively, as it clears up another of those rumors which cause so much uncertainty and chaos in the industry.

Reorganization Set, Gunning States Policy

Changes in Personnel Completed to His Satisfaction; Important Policy Statement Issued

AN important and interesting announcement to the trade was made by Wid Gunning, Inc., this week. Mr. Gunning, on his recent trip to the Coast, made changes in the personnel of the Chicago, Los Angeles, and San Francisco offices.

The statement declares that Mr. Gunning placed the offices in those territories in the hands of men of the type that he desires to have associated with him in such a broadly cooperative proposition as he expected later to announce. These changes, it is said, had been delayed only by the fact that Mr. Gunning had not sooner been able to visit these offices.

Ben Simpson, among the best known figures in the East and on the West Coast, and one of the organizers of Realart's exchanges with Jack Woody, is now carrying the Wid Gunning banner in San Francisco. George Slater's appointment to the Los Angeles office was announced while Mr. Gunning was on the coast. Harry Willard, the popular Realart representative in Chicago since that organization was started, has been secured to handle the Windy City territory for Wid Gunning, Inc.

After returning to New York and making a few other minor changes in the personnel, Mr. Gunning decided that he now had throughout his organization the type of men whom he desired to be associated with him in such a revolutionary proposition as he was about to announce. He then placed before the men throughout the country and the new men in Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco what is declared by the Wid Gunning organization to be "the greatest selling innovation of practical benefit that has ever been established in the film industry."

"As Mr. Gunning sees it," the official statement declares, "the Wid Gunning machine is actually and in fact only, a selling and exploitation service, charging a percentage of the gross for its operation.

"There is naturally in such an organization a certain amount of fixed overhead, such as branch office accounting, shipping and office routine. Mr. Gunning has definitely segregated his productive and non-productive forces so that the managers and salesmen do not now have the burden of the accounting particularly placed upon their shoulders, but these men whose work it is to sell film are definitely instructed that the selling of films is their chief and specific duty.

"In addition to the segregating of these departments in this simple and fundamentally correct manner, Mr. Gunning has given all his sales managers and salesmen a straight percentage proposition, which gives them an opportunity to earn two and three times what any film company has ever paid its salesmen and sales managers. Mr. Gunning is continuing the payment of the managers' and salesmen' salaries and expenses, paying these sums now as a drawing account against their percentage, so that the men, under the new system, have everything which they had in the past with the additional incentive of an exceptional chance to make very large sums, providing they work in a manner that brings in returns.

"Mr. Gunning has arranged a sliding scale of percentages paid direct to the sales workers without any deduction of branch or home-office overhead charges of from eight to fifteen per cent. Anyone who knows anything of the workings of film sales will quickly realize that this is a very large percentage for selling."

In discussing the organization's official announcement with members of the trade press Mr. Gunning declared, "My reason for adopting this method of operation is that I am endeavoring to give the highest incentive to the salesmen who sell, for, in all events, they are actually the men who do the work and maintain the necessary contact between the real creator of motion picture productions and the theatre owner. Essentially, what I am doing is placing the men who are selling in my organization in business for themselves and doing this in the most attractive form possible.

"It seems to me that this is a needed innovation in the film business. In practice, this method of operation actually permits the exhibitor to know that when he spends his dollar with a salesman for Wid Gunning, Inc., that he is actually doing business with that salesman and the real creator of the picture and nobody else. From a hard-headed business viewpoint I think it is splendid business for producers to have me paying salesmen so liberally since, while the salesmen will make more money than they would be able to in a position on a straight salary basis, at the same time, if the salesman is making more money for himself, he is, by his added effort, making more money for the producer."

"Wid Gunning has always insisted," says a statement of the new policy from Robert E. Welsh of the Gunning organization, "that the film business must get to the fundamentally right basis of paying only those who actually contribute to the success of the film business. He feels that this new arrangement does this and the men in the field tell him that it does it generously. His entire force is relieved of the responsibility of the branch and home-office overhead, is permitted to draw regular weekly payments and expenses, just as in the past, and yet they receive a very large percentage on every sale made. Thus we feel that Wid Gunning has put into actual practice a plan of operation which he has for years advocated as being the needed step to provide a proper and definite incentive towards better selling and better pictures. When the real creator receives a real return for the making of a really successful picture, that creator is, in every instance, willing to take that money and put it into the making of better pictures for the future. The dollars thus handled will not roll into the New York sink holes but will actually keep in circulation for the betterment of the film industry, and the film industry is still sadly in need of intelligent betterment."

Marcus Loew Is Elected President of Metro

MARCUS LOEW was elected on Friday to the presidency of Metro Pictures Corporation, and William E. Atkinson chosen vice-president.

Mr. Atkinson, hitherto general manager of the company, will continue to serve in that capacity in addition to holding office as vice-president.

The results of the election disprove the recent rumors in the industry of Metro's merging with any other picture company. The Metro policies and organization will undergo no change. Plans for production and distribution for the next six months are, Metro officials state, complete; and will in no way be affected by the recent election of officers.

Maine Forms Strong Unit of M. P. T. O. of A.

THEATRE owners from all parts of Maine, some travelling a distance of 200 miles to be in attendance at the most representative theatre owners' convention ever held in the State of Maine, assembled at the Penobscot Exchange Hotel on Wednesday, January 4th, 1922. The primary reason was to disband the old organization which was known as the Allied Theatres Organization and to form an official Unit of The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Resolutions were unanimously adopted endorsing the work of Sydney S. Cohen and The National Organization, thanking Mr. Cohen and the Legislative Committee for their efforts in the repeal of the 5 per cent film rental tax, and commending exhibitors all over the country for their assistance in sending letters and telegrams to this end.

Every theatre owner present signed a contract for Official Urban Movie Chats of The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and adopted a resolution unanimously endorsing the official screen organ of the M. P. T. O. A.

Charges Violation of the N. Y. Censorship Law

The New York State Attorney General's office will probably proceed shortly against a motion-picture firm located in Buffalo, which is alleged to have used the same serial number and state seal, given by the State Motion Picture Commission, time after time, on pictures other than the one which was submitted to the commission, and licensed. Arthur E. Rose, deputy Attorney General, has the matter in hand, and admitted that he expected to shortly go to Buffalo in connection with the matter.

"SEING IT THROUGH" CONTEST CONCLUDED

WITH the publication this week of the final suggestions received from exhibitors as to how to meet dull business conditions, the "Seeing It Through" contest inaugurated six weeks ago by Motion Picture News is closed.

The judges who have consented to act in awarding the prices are:

R. F. Woodhull, President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New Jersey.
William Brandt, President of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce.
Chas. L. O'Reilly, President of the New York State Exhibitors' League.

The prizes are: First, $100; second, $50; and $5 each for the next 14 letters considered most meritorious by the judges.

The prize winners will be announced at an early date.

Children's Mats and Other Stunts

"Seeing It Through," to stimulate patronage and cutting expenses is a very delicate problem confronting exhibitors.

In a condensed description, I am describing how this theatre, with a capacity of 600 seats, with Fox, Loew and Keith as opposition, has in the past six months increased our patronage sixty per cent and reduced expenses twenty-five per cent.

Acquiring the lease of this theatre, situated among aristocratic people, we found expenses to be very high and receipts poor. The program was very gruesome, consisting of old melodramas, cheap serials and comedies at a very high rental and fifth run of features. This program would cater to the rougher element, particularly children, and it was necessary to employ two ushers to maintain order. Obviously, the better class of people which predominates ninety per cent of this section would keep away and patronize the larger houses.

Our first step was to revise our program, eliminating gruesome pictures and serials, and we acquired the best features and well-known comedies from leading exchanges at fifty per cent cheaper rental and a better run than heretofore. We advertised extensively and before very long we built up a lasting and loyal patronage.

The summer soon struck us and yet we pulled through at a good profit, while seventy-five per cent of smaller theatres were forced to close. Two days each week we presented a kiddies' picture like "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Alladin and the Wonderful Lamp," etc. In all about a dozen were presented. We invited Bible school children and orphans for free morning showings and big notice was given about these exhibitions. The result was marvelous. We would have two days of capacity business in the hottest days. It was surprising the large numbers of adults these kiddie pictures would bring, not considering the enormous amount of children who all brought their parents. Other theatres followed our scheme and it proved a success. We plan to show these pictures each summer, for, after all, they are fairy tales and never grow old.

We employ efficient help who cooperate with us at weekly meetings, which we hold to devise new ideas, to stimulate patronage. These meetings will prove a success to any one. Courtesy is the keynote of the house. Every patron is greeted with a smile, a word of good cheer by our door-man and usher. Proper music presentation is given to all features.

Personal attention is given to presentation of features. Before booking, all trade reviews are gone over carefully, with a view of selecting appropriate days for their presentation. The larger houses change their programs on Mondays and Thursdays and people like to patronize these houses on these days. We found these days poor, so inaugurated them as Double Feature Days. Two features of merit are booked for Mondays and Thursdays, and we soon built these days wonderfully. On Tuesday and Wednesday of each week we present a super-production at regular prices and we see to it that an excellent short subject program is given with this production so as to warrant two days. On Friday we advertise as "Family Night," and our program is devised to appeal to and suit the family. Our Saturday and Sunday features are made up of well-known stars and stories, suitable to our patrons.

We have an extensive mailing list which we revise regularly and keep it up to date. We are always for the welfare of our patrons and by always working for their interests, they will soon appreciate it and will help you "Seeing It Through."

Mgr. Nostrand Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Runs Specials to Satisfactory Business

I didn't intend sending in an article in this contest until I came across a statement that running the high-priced specials was a thing to be avoided during the present slump made me decide to pass on my experience for whatever it is worth to others.

This little town here was originally an oil town and some of the old oil people are still here and there is some business in that line in the neighborhood, but the principal business is the manufacture of glass. There are a few plants here and they have not been running on full time by a good deal.

This makes our problem hard, just as it is for many other exhibitors in other places.

The amount of advertising we can do is limited, just as the number of people we can reach is limited, so we did quite a lot of head scratching in trying to find the way to coax enough people into our house to pay to keep it running through the slump.

I can say without hesitation that we have done better on the bigger pictures which we ran two days than we did on the ordinary program picture.

There may be many solutions for this put forward, but the one that seems reasonable to me is the fact that we can spend a little more money in advertising a picture that we are going to show for two days than is possible on a picture which only runs one day. Then we can leave the advertising matter, especially the posters, up for a longer period. That means that the people have more time to get it into their heads, not only that we are showing the picture, but that it is something out of the ordinary.

Then, what I consider is of the most importance, we get the value of the word-of-mouth advertising. We figure that the advertising and the usual run of movie patrons together with the fact that it is really a bigger picture than we usually have brings in our first night's business. Then we figure that the people who saw the picture the first night go back home and tell the rest of the folks, as well as their friends, to be sure to go to see the picture the following night, and between the two we get more money out of it net than with an ordinary picture that comes and goes and no one talks very much about it.

I am frank in saying that we are running a lot of big specials now for two days that a year or more ago we would have been afraid to tackle, and I also believe that to a certain extent they have been life savers for us just now.

Our people seem to want the big pictures and we are glad to give them to them.

WILLIAM HOFFMAN,
Mgr. Paramount Theatre,
Sistersville, W. Va.

Double Feature Day Helped

It is universally known that Monday is the blue day of the show business and this town was no exception. It was our custom to run a good feature picture and four short reels for our Monday shows and were just breaking even. We conceived the idea of double billing this one day and booked in a cheap feature in place of the short reels, in fact the second feature cost less than the short reels. The result was that our receipts were increased fifty per cent, we conclude that we draw the patrons who want quantity instead of quality, on this day.

This being a combination house, we require stage help for road attractions. While the house is non-union we were paying the stage boys $8 per show, which is above the union scale here. When the general depression struck here we mapped out a schedule of $4 per man for afternoon and evening services and $2 for half time. The boys are well satisfied and we receive the same efficient service.

We had been employing an organist at $75 per week. We now have secured the services of a very competent man for $50 per week without injuring the standard of our musical program.

It has been our experience in the small town to find many patrons who know more about running a show than the manager. It has been our policy not to listen to these kind of people or to long-haired people who can find something objectionable to the rising generation in most every picture they see. We run a good consistent program and keep up the standard of our program regardless of business conditions; we do not believe in allowing this standard to run down. We also do not listen to people who "holler" "Don't run serials," when a good clean serial will sometimes draw more patronage than some features.

We find it advantageous to give our patrons a little heart-to-heart talk through the medium of the press, expressing our personal opinions and adding local color to coming attractions. We have these articles appeal to them through interesting facts. The public is tired of the regular press notices using a lot of big words and bunk facts, wherein the manager has only to insert the date and theatre name for his press notice.

Eliminating business advertising on the screen and using only your slides for your coming attractions puts more power to the show ads, and does not confuse the mind of the reader. When the subject of censorship was so generally discussed we invited the local ministers to censor our show and gave them passes. The result was that it brought new patrons throughout their congregations.

"Put House In Order"

The industry must first "put its house in order," as the railroads, steel mills and other large industries are doing, so that we can "see it through."

The dividends next year will not be paid from abnormal profits, as in the past, but will be paid, if at all, from the savings accomplished through careful production and management.

Producers must learn that $1,000,000 spent on a picture does not make it a box office attraction. They must learn that they cannot pass down to the exhibitors the cost of foolish waste and wild extravagance. They must not base their production on standards secured during the heyday of prosperity just past, when exhibitors were able and willing to pay large rentals.

Exhibitors must learn that Kansas City, Oklahoma City or Council Bluffs, Iowa, cannot attempt to rival New York or Los Angeles in the lavish presentation of pictures. They must learn that where they were once able to augment orchestras, stage prologues and in other ways add to their expense, these items may now mean the difference between profit and loss. Exhibitors must forget their personal pride and vanity. They must present a program that will be attractive, both as to taste and price.

The era of unnatural and unhealthy prosperity just past saw established among the exhibitors many precedents now difficult to maintain and just as difficult to break away from. The producers, mindful of our past purchasing ability, still are making big pictures, spending large amounts, and must either get big returns or accept a big loss. Our public is so accustomed to exploitation that unless a picture is exploited they are uncertain as to its merits. Prologues and large orchestras have become an integral part of the programs of many houses and an educated public expects them.

Now—What to Do?

Pay producers as much as you possibly can in order that the standard of American productions shall not fall and carry the industry crashing down with it. Production must be kept up so that the industry, and the thousands it is supporting, can be "tided over."

In advertising, put your money where it will do the most good. Look deeply into expensive and fascinating exploitation stunts that reach the eye of the very small portion of your population. In the last analysis, more people can be reached with a dollar through the newspapers than through any other medium. In newspaper advertising, take the space you need to tell your story—no more, no less. If you have a message that will bring people to your box office—get it across. If it can be done forcibly and attractively in three columns by ten inches, there is no necessity or excuse for using half a page.

In the matter of prologues and "trimmings," I firmly believe the industry, as a whole, would be better off if exhibitors ceased to use them. In the first place, why should an exhibitor attempt to add something to an already completed attraction? In the second place, prologues and other entertainment features of similar nature only educate the public to a taste for vaudeville and for the legitimate stage. That leads them away from the motion picture theatre. In other words, the motion picture theatre educates the public to a brand of entertainment it is not directly interested in selling, and which it is not able to produce in competition with houses specializing in vaudeville and the spoken drama.

My policy in the future, as in the past, will be to present pictures and make them my entire entertainment, as they are intended. I will advertise them adequately, but waste no money in foolish and far-fetched exploitation schemes. I will provide music that is fitting, but will not feature my music over the thing which I am most interested in selling—the picture.

In other words, I will conduct an institution dedicated to the exhibition of photoplay alone, at a moderate admission, and at as low an expense as possible. I believe this policy will make money. I cannot be convinced that "hard times" have struck the industry. Normal times have simply returned and found us unprepared.

Bigger and Better Pictures, Says Nelson

Always keeping in mind the fact that the show's the thing, after all, bigger and better pictures should be the slogan for holding and increasing business. All through the so-called depression I have found that when playing such attractions business has not been bad. In these days the public is out shopping for pictures and the problem of the exhibitor is to study his public and book the kind of pictures they want, using care in the arrangement of his programs.

Retrenchment is always fraught with danger; but during the summer when business was off I decided to eliminate my orchestra and use the organ. I found that my patrons were well satisfied with this arrangement. Thus I decreased my expense greatly without losing my patronage. A good instrument with a capable organist who uses care in selecting his musical program answers all purposes very well.

By eliminating costly prologue presentations and spending the money thus saved for better pictures business was improved during the depression and the public better satisfied.

I have found that I could save in the aggregate a great deal of money by paying close attention to minor details of management the house itself, as lighting, heating, supplies and service. I found that I could save $10.00 a week on electricity by training employes to turn off lights not necessary. Considerable saving can be effected also by guarding against waste of coal on comparatively warm days when much heat would make the house uncomfortable.

I would not advise too strict economy in matters bearing on service to the public as the accommodation and comfort of patrons is of utmost importance. The best of service is none too good and careless or inefficient employes are expensive at any price.

"Seeing It Through"

I have found that a time of depression is the most important time to use plenty of newspaper space and other advertising, and I have no hesitancy in saying that retrenchment in advertising is poor policy. Discretion is important, however, and one must be sure that his pictures will bear out his advertising promises. It is always better to play square with the public and give it to them straight. When you have anything good let 'em know it with punchy advertising and plenty of it.

There's nothing so good as direct by mail advertising, using letters, heralds, novelties, etc.; and I find too that ballyhoos and contests of all kinds are good business builders.

Back to the Wall, But Fighting

Some will be able to take the punishment—while others are sure to go down—but all may inaugurate certain economies that will help to save his business, or even salvage it from ruin.

We must take our eyes from the box office receipts and concern ourselves about expenditures—"house-nut" or "overhead"—it's the same thing by any name.

Let's cut the flowery words and generalities—right down to action and short cuts—cuts mostly.

MUSIC—For the larger houses this item stacks up against your film rentals, cut it—and cut it quick—I don't care what number of pieces you may have in your orchestra, remember it is still an orchestra of only three pieces—we had seven, now five, and out goes another piece.

EMPLOYES—Don't let them think they have certain prescribed duties and nothing else. Shake up your organization—do one or all of three things. Get rid of that "handy fellow to have around," he is cheap but you don't need him. Then cut wages. To those whose wage you don't cut hand extra work—overlap their duties. As an illustration:—The operator in our smallest house was given the privilege of choosing between a wage cut or added janitor work—he chose to do the extra work.

SHIPMENTS—Start your film shipments in and out by Parcel Post—no time to feel sorry for the Express Company—they'll be coming shortly with competitive Parcel Post rates and looking pretty about it.

LIGHT—Cut your wattage 25 to 40 per cent and schedule the shortest possible hours for different illumination. Remember you had your sights raised a year ago—you're over-shooting conditions now.

HEAT, RENT, TAXES, INSURANCE—Are mostly fixed and unalterable—but it's possible to shade them—we have in one or two instances.

REPAIRS AND SUPPLIES—Don't give them everything they ask for—make them requisition their needs from the janitor to the office—then let another employe (or better do it yourself) check to see if they really need it, before you order—then trim the order.

ADVERTISING — Your newspaper is working just 50 per cent efficient—but keep using it—cut your space and concentrate more on your copy and display. Use more stunt advertising—takes work but it's effective and cheap. Exchange publicity men and trade papers offer you many worthy advertising suggestions—the exchange of ideas—wonderful thing.

Analyze each and every bill you pay—there is a way to trim it.

Voting Contest Did the Trick

Faced with the industrial depression that has hit this section of the country, depending as it does upon steel and coal market activity for prosperity, rather harder than most places, we made no effort to cut advertising or quality of shows. Instead, we increased both, cutting expenses in other directions wherever it was possible.

We realized that we were in for a prolonged period of depression, and that, during that period, what little money there was for amusements would go to the theatres offering the greatest inducements to the public.

Our first care was to do everything possible to increase the attractiveness of the programs in the three theatres we operate. Then we cast about for a "business stimulant"—something that would set our theatres apart from the others, and make them talked about.

Finally we hit upon it. Securing the co-operation of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company we announced the most pretentious popularity campaign ever held in this section, or anywhere, so far as we know.

Beginning on Nov. 7th, we issued, with every ticket of admission to each of our theatres, a coupon good for a stated number of votes, each five-cent unit of the purchase price calling for one vote. Thus, a ten-cent ticket meant two votes—a 50-cent ticket 10 votes, and so on through the range of prices.

Contestants could be nominated by themselves or by friends or relatives. At the opening of the voting period 73 girls had enrolled, and were hard at work. The voting period continues from Nov. 7th until Jan. 15th. The three leaders will be sent to the Grand Canyon of Colorado on a tour of the studios at Los Angeles, on to San Francisco, and back home to Pennsylvania over the C. & N. W. route, with stop-overs at Salt Lake City, Denver, and other points of interest.

On Jan. 1st, the 15 leaders in the contest will each be entitled to nominate a candidate for chaperon to accompany the party. These 15 candidates will then be voted on in the same way, from Jan. 16 to Jan. 31st., inclusive, the leader in that period winning the trip.

To further stimulate interest and to draw attendance, we arranged to give a "film test" to each of the 30 leaders on Dec. 3rd. During the week of Dec. 12th, we filmed five of the girls each night on the stage, as part of the show, following this with the taking of pictures of the audience. This gave us packed houses for a week. Beginning Dec. 26th, we will show these pictures, splitting them up over a period of three weeks, and circulating them between the three houses. There has been no promise that any girl would be given a job in pictures, or any intimation of anything of this sort. The girls were screened, according to our announcements, merely to introduce them to the public, and to give them souvenirs of the contest when it is over.

The contest has brought us even more publicity than we expected. All over the city, various girls have their photos and the announcements of their candidacies in store windows that we could not hope to touch ordinarily. Sandwich men and boys carrying banners have been parading the streets, advertising this or that candidate. Some of the girls have made house to house canvasses, urging friends to go to the theatres and give them their votes. About 90 per cent of the contestants have issued cards—regular political cards—and thousands upon thousands of them—every one advertising our theaters—have been circulated. One contestant, when we played "The Four Horsemen" at advanced prices, had 5,000 four-page heralds advertising the picture and her candidacy, printed and distributed. Automobiles are carrying banners. You run into signs in hotel lobbies, restaurants, dance halls—everywhere you go.

The contest has been successful beyond our expectations. From the day it opened it has had the city talking, and the closer it approaches the finish the warmer the interest is becoming. We anticipate a hot finish in January.

Handling of the votes has been made very simple. The voting coupons are merely printed tickets, with the inscription, "5 votes for Candidate No.——." Each contestant has a voting number, and the number instead of the name is written in. In the lobby of each theatre is a huge bulletin board, with the names, numbers and photographs of the girls, on which the vote is posted daily.

It is difficult to give a detailed description of the contest in a limited space. The above, however, is a general outline of what we are doing, and it has resulted in greatly increased business and in getting us safely over a business depression that is being felt by every variety of business. It costs money—but it brings it back with interest.

The Star Theatre Lays 10 to 1 and Loses

THE STAR THEATRE, Grayslake, Ill., submits a reply to a questionnaire of Famous Players-Lasky, venturing odds of 10 to 1 that it would not see print.

We will, with pleasure, answer the Star theatre's query as to why, in the series of "Seeing It Through" letters from exhibitors, no mention is made of the prices paid by theatres for pictures.

The reason should be apparent. The writers did not submit any price figures.

Herewith, in full, is the Star theatre's letter:

In reply to questions put by Famous Players, I will make the following answer: Question No. 1. What is the outlook regarding future business conditions in your locality?

The conditions in Northern Illinois rural agricultural sections have been about the same for the past eighteen months. And it does not appear that there will be anything for the betterment in the near future. The exhibitors are outcasts in the field, they have no friends in the trade papers. While the support of the trade papers comes from producers and distributors, yet without the patronage from the exhibitors (circulation) the trade papers would have to go out of business. The trade papers have been shouting increasing better times when they must have known that there has been no improvement. Just last week Fox Film Corp., asked of me $17.50 for pictures which I paid $15 for in 1919 in the height of good times. This is a town of 600 population. It looks at present that the exhibitors have only one friend and that is Carl Laemmle of Universal, he offers them pictures at living prices instead of trying to mop up a few dollars more from where he knows they cannot come and still let the main support of the industry live. Laemmle is the only producer who displays the slightest bit of confidence in those with whom he does business.

Question No. 2—How will such conditions affect your prices?

Prices must remain the same, 15 and 22 cents in order to buy pictures worth while, for it is the pictures that the people pay to see. If the patronage does not increase or the rental prices lower, by July 1st, 25 per cent of theatres now running will have to close.

The question of presentation or orchestra does not bother our class of theatres. That takes care of question 4 and 5.

Question 6—What is the general sentiment of your public regarding big productions?

Big productions are well received, if not offered too frequently and the people are willing to pay slightly advanced prices.

Question 7—Have you advanced your admission prices on special productions and with what results?

Prices have been advanced and with intensive advertising extra people were brought in and perhaps a little more money made. But really special productions are too high. For instance, United Artists offered me "Why Down East" for $200 (in town of 600), also demanding that two of Griffith's flivvers be contracted. Then they withdrew the offer all-together. That shows something of the integrity of the so-called producers.

Question No. 8—Newspapers are the best advertising medium.

Questions 9, 10, 11—Do not concern small theatres.

Comments—The motion picture industry is due for the greatest shaking up that any large institution has experienced in all times. Our trade papers are continually shouting about being attacked continually. and yet these papers seem so blind that they cannot see the reason. I will give $25 to anyone giving me the name of any industry in which there is so little confidence displayed towards the buyers of the product as there is in the motion picture industry. And I state that the exhibitors are the buyers of the product. Without the exhibitor, the box office, the whole industry would go flat over night. We buy these pictures and put them over at our own risk and expense. An exchange does all it can, to hamper the exhibitor. In the first week in December I contracted for the Sheik, giving $35 for two days, paid it at the time of contracting, to be shown on January 1 and 2, when the films came it came C. O. D., causing me to tie up $70 plus advertising and other expense before I had a chance to show it. To date I have not had a refund and if it is as slow coming as usual it will be Feb. 1 before I again get that money back. If that isn't the rottenest way of doing business, and the best means of creating discord between distributor and exhibitor, I will give up the job.

Confidence — Producer - distributors know nothing about it. Why is this business not conducted like any other business? There may be some crooks in the exhibitors rank, but why place the honest men with the crooks and treat the whole raft of them as crooks? Why do the exchanges not extend the customary ten or thirty days credit to reputable exhibitors? Because it is a lack of confidence so necessary in any business. Why do exhibitors go from exchange to exchange with their backs to the wall for fear someone will find out what they are paying for pictures? Like thieves in the night! Why is it that not once in a year, or not even the once you see a line in a trade paper about what this or that theatre paid for a picture? Motion Picture News who is just now running a series of letters from exhibitors makes sure that such a line does not appear in the printed letters. That is what the exhibitors are interested in, what the exhibitors like to know and want to talk about.

The trade papers which take up the talk of confidence will not only make a hit with the exhibitors, but will be doing the industry the greatest amount of good which can possibly be accomplished. This article is going to various trade papers, as well as Famous Players, and it is ten to one it will never get into print. Now we'll see how many of the trade papers are cowards.

Respectfully,
THE STAR THEATRE,
Grayslake, Ill.

Coast Against Censors

most beloved public men in San Francisco, in a tribute to Thomas H. Ince said:

"If a man could have looked forward twenty-five years ahead and could have looked into the future as far as man's eye could see, and prophesy what the moving picture industry would develop into, and has developed into, he would have been regarded as a dreamer. It follows, therefore, that man's foresight is not as good as his hindsight, for if it were, we might all have been Thomas Ince's pioneers in this wonderful amusement feature of the day.

"Someone said—I don't know who—speaking of the effects of people, 'If I were permitted to write the songs of people, I would not care who made their laws,' emphasizing, by that, the important effect upon the nature of the character of people of the amusements and entertainments that were given to them. There is nothing in the world today that attracts the American people and all people so much as moving pictures. I regret that Mr. Ince is not here. He is a man of enterprise, a man of genius, a financier—and a pioneer, as it were, in territories that have as yet to be developed."

Adverting to the subject of censorship, the Senator said:

"The moving picture industry is in its infancy, but I just want to emphasize this, and I am going to close, because I have to; there is a responsibility resting upon those who control the motion picture industry in this country and in the world. If they want to have no censorship, they must clean house, they must uphold the morals of those whom they employ, and they must only produce those things that will have an elevating and an ennobling influence upon the people, and not things that will have an opposite effect.

"That has been the tendency of today, and I think will be of the future, but don't rest in any false security. The future of this industry, and the right to operate it as you desire, depends upon the judgment that is exercised by the men who control it. and I predict and hope that in San Francisco this industry will thrive and prosper, and that the day will come when there will be no criticism not only of the pictures, but of the people that are employed therein."

Murphy and Macgowan Making One Reel "Visual Symphonies"

Expensive Prologue's Doom Seen in One Reel Novelty Offering

THE first example of an interesting novelty in a new field of motion picture entertainment will shortly be released through a national distributing organization according to an announcement made this week by Mr. Dudley Murphy, president, and Mr. Claude Macgowan, general manager of Visual Symphony Productions, Inc. Mr. Murphy, whose work has already attracted attention through its pictorial and artistic qualities is the originator of the idea. There are now in production the first three of a series of twelve one-reel subjects to be known as "Visual Symphonies" which, as interpretations of celebrated musical compositions by famous people from the operatic world, are said to be unlike any other existing motion picture form. That they are fresh and indisputable evidence that the progressive development of motion pictures always has and always will come from within the industry, is an expression of the optimistic views of the producers. The eminent artists already engaged are under the direction of Mr. Murphy, while the business management and details of distribution is assigned to Mr. Macgowan, a familiar in the industry, and known all over the world as the first motion picture man to make a globe-tour in establishing foreign exchanges which had been closed by the war. Not only did Mr. Macgowan carry America's motion picture banner to "all points East" as it were, but he resigned his position as general manager of the Universal to do so. To this may be attributed his deep interest in the larger aspects of the motion picture, his expert handling of foreign subjects and his keen appreciation of the importance of the economics of the industry. As the head of Universal's financial and accounting department for many years he knows better perhaps than most, that art needs as a stimulant, an incentive, or to use an art term—a motif, as much as it needs anything—a sound economic basis. Therefore, his development as an innovator, an encourager of the dreams of others as they relate to the advancement of the screen, has not suffered because of this anchor of prudence.

In his latest venture he asserts that he has achieved that rare combination, an artistic production elaborately produced, which will save the exhibitors hundreds of thousands of dollars, not in competition with other productions, but by giving them a satisfactory and economical substitute for special presentations, prologues and elaborate staging of features—which by the way, are the subject of one of the latest discussions in the trade press. In his office in the Candler Building, Mr. Macgowan outlined his plans as follows:

"Visual Symphonies, Inc.," was organized for the production of a series of motion pictures based on the stories of famous musical compositions. Inspired by and synchronized with the theme of the composition, each production carries out, visually and in a dramatic manner, the rhythm and the story of the music. The idea, as explained by Mr. Dudley Murphy, its originator, who is directing the series, three of which are completed, is to take well-known composers and their compositions, such as Beethoven and his "Moonlight Sonata," Saint-Saens and his "Dans Macabre," and show in an atmospheric and beautiful way the composer as he dreams and creates his composition. He will be in his studio, or at his piano, and as he starts to play, as his hands move on the keyboard, the music will start and the scene will dissolve into his vision, which is the interpretation of the composition, the action synchronizing with the tempo of the music. In the same manner the story of the composition is told, sometimes in realistic and sometimes in more illusionary and symbolic fashion until at the end the scene will return to the composer as he sits playing or scoring the composition. Some of these visual symphonies will be in tragedy form, others will be artistic comedies, while still others will be poetic fantasies. It is my purpose, and Mr. Murphy's, to get a vitally human and emotional quality in these pictures, yet in keeping with the splendor of the compositions. "Of the quality of the productions you will be better able to judge from some of the details of the first release which is Saint-Seans' 'Dans Macabre,' although for obvious reasons it will be released as 'The Dance of Death.' For this after much persuasion, I secured Mr. Adolf Bolm, beyond all question the greatest dancer and pantomimist in the world. If you hesitate about calling him that, I would like you to see his scrap-books, in which in some 20,000 clippings from the press of the world's capitals, and in a dozen different languages, contain the very words of the phrase I used. All New York remembers, I believe, the sensation created by Mr. Bolm on his first appearance here with Serge de Diaghileff's Imperial Russian Ballet. He is of course well-known throughout the country, where he has appeared on tour, and now as ballet master of the Metropolitan Opera Company he has become an institution. It is Mr. Bolm's interpretation of the 'Dans Macabre' which Mr. Murphy is using for the screen production and in which Mr. Bolm is appearing.

"I feel safe in saying," continued Mr. Macgowan, "that the consummate skill with which the difficulties of production have been met will introduce to the motion picture patrons of this country something so new and unique in direction that its originator will instantly leap into public favor. I refer to the work of Mr. Dudley Murphy, whose artistic training began under the tutelage of his father, the celebrated Boston portrait painter. Mr. Murphy's sympathetic knowledge of the twin arts—motion pictures and music—led to the endless experiments in synchronization which solved the entire problem of our interpretations. To him must go full credit for originating this new art form, one which he is convinced is destined to exert a tremendous influence, not only on the future production of pictures, but also on the use of music in the theatres. The phrase 'twin arts' is Mr. Murphy's own, his contention being that music and pictures should be so bracketted because both are fluid forms, and because they alone of all the arts, make the most sympathetic blending possible. You may instance in opposition art and architecture, but you will be wrong. Sculptured decorations and mural paintings are but details of architecture, which may be examined and enjoyed apart from the structure which they embellish; whereas, music and motion pictures as synchronized by Mr. Murphy, are so intertwined and blended as to be true complements each of the other, interpreting each other, yet conveying but a single impression.

"These facts brought to the attention of Mr. Bolm, was the final argument that induced him to undertake to appear in 'The Dance of Death,' giving his own interpretation of that famous composition. This is Mr. Bolm's first appearance in pictures. His rank as an artist and as a pantomimist has naturally brought him many flattering offers, but as he himself says, 'Somehow I could not see myself in the usual type of motion picture.' However, I think it is the exhibitors and their patrons who are to be congratulated, because the very nature of Mr. Bolm's art is such that he seldom if ever appears in person in any except the largest cities either here or abroad. The same is true of Miss Page. The opportunity given to the public at large to see, not only Mr. Bolm and Miss Page, but other artists equally celebrated, see them too in the particular field of entertainment they have made their own, and in which they are stars of greatest magnitude, will, I am sure, establish the Visual Symphonies as short subjects of the very finest kind. As you may well suppose, having undertaken to present such famous people, I have taken care to surround them with details of production and accessories in keeping. Lighting effects for instance have been intrusted to Mr. Francis Brugere, peer of American photographers, a gold medalist of many countries whose work has commanded the admiration of painters as well as photographers.

"In short I have gone the limit in placing at Mr. Murphy's disposal the most outstanding figures in the world of art, music and pantomime, to the end that the full value of his inspirations, his mental visions, may be brought out on the screen and synchronized with the famous compositions he interprets.

"There is a practical side as well, and for that reason we have kept all exhibitors, large and small, in mind in the production of the Visual Symphonies. Realizing that many different conditions must be met, we have prepared player rolls for piano, orchestrion and organ; music arranged to suit any house, from piano solo to full symphony orchestration. Each and every one is synchonized with the picture and so timed as to be absolutely fool-proof. The list of forthcoming releases shows this. They include among others under consideration: Debussy's 'Faun'; Beethoven's 'Pastoral Symphony'; Japanese Melody from the 'Nut Cracker Suite,' by Tschaikowsky; the Rimsky-Karsakoff 'Scheherzade'; Schumann's 'Scenes from Childhood,' in eleven one and a half-minute versions; Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman'; Tschaikowsky's 'March Slav'; Grieg's 'Peer Gynt Suite'; Beethoven's 'Moonlight Sontata'; Gilbert and Sullivan's 'Pirates of Penzance'; and Mendelssohn's 'Fingal's Cave.'"

Miller Gets Great Results with Inexpensive Lobby Front

Maximum results with a minimum of expense were achieved by Frank Miller, managing the Modjeska theatre, Augusta, Ga., when he played "The Passion Flower" for a two-day engagement recently.

A big oval frame, cut out of beaverboard, and gilded so that it looked exactly like a mammoth photograph frame, occupied the center of the lobby and was blacked up by a black velvet curtain. The sides were enclosed, and light globes were arranged on the inside of the frame, so that a direct beam would fall from the upper corner of the frame, giving a fine sunlight effect.

Inside the frame, in a tall silver vase, was a spray of red flowers—"passion flowers." Around the outside of the frame were some stills from the picture, and the usual advertising stuff—stock one-sheets, etc.

Sydney Theatre Pulls Good Stuff on "Back to God's Country"

Opposite is a picture of the lobby display used by the Crystal theatre, Sydney, Australia, on "Back to God's Country." On the left is seen a real sledge with cut-out dogs. On the right of the display is a replica of the bathing scene where the girl is scared stiff by a tidy-sized bear. Real water trickled around the rocks and a bunch of green bushes made the onlookers puzzle whether the girl was fully dressed or otherwise. The ticket box was frozen with painted cardboard and calico. Back-cloths transformed the rear of the lobby into a picture book Arctic Circle. A dainty usherette lost several points of dainty flesh sweating in furs to give atmosphere to the show, while an imitation Wapi woof-woofed for several bones per. When Wapi was off duty the freckled office boy used a gramaphone horn back stage and put the fear of the bear into passersby.

A co-operative stunt that helped put this picture over was a specially "pram," which, when wheeled over the city streets at four a. m. by two paid servants, made Sydney wake up to find the place where its feet hit the pavements covered with an invitation to "follow the tracks of Wapi—"Back to God's Country." It was in red and the paw marks of a giant dog which accompanied the wording certainly resembled the real thing.

Unique Theatre Front Exploits "Over the Hill"

Decorating the marquis of his house a full week in advance of the opening of "Over the Hill," was an idea utilized by George J. Schade, manager of the Schade theatre, Sandusky, O.

Instead of waiting until the engagement opened, Manager Schade decided that an extra week of "front" display for the production would prove advantageous. Accordingly he contrived two large cut-outs made from twenty-four sheets, had them mounted on firm frames and rested on the edges of the marquis. The effect was the same as the erection of two billboards, much less expensive and considerably more artistic. Extending above the cut-outs, and supported by wires attached to the building, was a large Christmas tree which lent an atmosphere of holiday welcome to the theatre front.

Large cards proclaimed that "Over the Hill" was coming "next week." Thus no one was permitted to become confused or led to believe that the picture was the current attraction.

How Patterson Put Over "Molly O"

Atlanta Campaign for Normand Picture Sets New Exploitation Standard for City

MANAGER W. C. PATTERSON of the Metropolitan theatre; Atlanta, has set some new exploitation standards for his city with his recent campaign on "Molly O."

Patterson began with the billboards. Three weeks in advance he arranged for twenty-five forty-eight sheet stands—a size never employed by any motion picture theatre in Atlanta, and almost impossible to obtain anywhere.

Patterson, however, induced the billboard people to rip out the center panel of their twenty-four sheets stands for the accomodation of the "Molly O" paper—block type, black and red on yellow.

Then he arranged for tie-ups on "Molly O" shoes, "Molly O" silks, "Molly O" hats and "Molly O" crackers. The Byck Brothers, largest shoe dealers in the city, handled the tie-up on "Molly O" shoes. It was one of the most elaborate ever displayed in the South and drew thousands of fashionable women. The exhibit was featured in a story in the Atlanta Georgian and illustrated by a picture taken by the paper's staff photographer.

The Keely Company, one of the city's big department stores carried an elaborate display of "Molly O" silks and "Molly O" hats. Mention of them was made in the big Sunday ads carried by the store and placards in the windows called attention to both innovations.

During the week immediately preceding the opening of the picture a demonstration of "Molly O" crackers was carried on in the lobby of the Metropolitan; and during the week of the engagement a score of grocery stores in the city had similar demonstrations.

But by far the biggest scoop was the tie-up with the Georgia Railway & Power Company resulting in their carrying a placard in every street car operating on the city lines announcing "Molly O" at the Metropolitan.

Unlike the usual street car advertising alongside the car, this card was just above the level of the eyes of the passengers directly in front of the motorman.

Six days before the opening of "Molly O" ten thousand attractive three color cards were mailed out to the Metropolitan's selected mailing list. These cards were especially designed by Mr. Patterson's artist for the Christmas program in red and green on India tint linen finish stock, with gilt edges.

Special stories were prepared for all Sunday papers covering the Christmas program; and the Metropolitan's artist executed one of his best ads.

A simple prologue showing a pretty young girl in a costume such as Molly wore at the ball masque—powdered hair and all—sang Irving Berlin's "Say it with Music" to an accompaniment by the orchestra. A violin interlude by Dave Love, conductor of the Metropolitan orchestra added another happy note. The "Molly O" tune formed the principal motif in the musical score.

Twenty feminine patrons of the Metropolitan competed in perfect foot contest of "Molly O" slippers conducted in conjunction with the Byck store. Prizes were awarded to the three ladies whose feet were found to be the most nearly perfect.

Newark Ledger Helps Goodwin Theatre on "Fauntleroy"

The Newark (N. J.) Ledger and the Goodwin theatre put over a contest for "Little Lord Fauntleroy" that worked to advantage for both newspaper and theatre.

The Ledger runs a department for children edited by "Uncle George," and it was in this department that the contest was announced and the winners decided.

The contest was of the question-and-answer type, as follows:

No. 1. (a) Who is the author of "Little Lord Fauntleroy"? (b) Who is known as "America's Sweetheart"?

No. 2 Who is Mary Pickford's husband?

No. 3. Name two of "Little Lord Fauntleroy's" best friends.

No. 4. Who is "Dearest" in "Little Lord Fauntleroy"?

No. 5. What are your chief reasons for wanting to see this picture at the Goodwin theatre?

There were twenty-five prizes, and the names of the prize-winners were published in big type in a two-column box in the center of the best of prize-winning answers.

All during the engagement of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" there was a crowd of school children at every showing.

Amateur Radio Sharps Help Advertise "Conflict"

A new field for moving picture exploitation recently was tried out with great success by Daniel J. Burns, manager of Proctor's Broad street theatre in Elizabeth, N. J., when he caused announcements of his show, "Conflict," to be broadcasted by radio. Professional and amateur radio operators all over Northern New Jersey, Southern New York, Southern New England and Long Island, "took" the press notice.

Burns used Harry Davidson an amateur radio bug of Elizabeth, to put over the stunt. Davidson was one of the men who recently participated in the amateur trans-Atlantic radio tests. Every morning during the week preceding the showing of "Conflict" he sent out a brief resume of the thrills from the picture and data concerning its showing in the Elizabeth theatre.

Burns did not stop there in his appeal. As it was the week of Universal's Holiday Season, during which week Universal contributed a percentage of its film rentals to the New York American Christmas fund, Burns had his radio press agent send out an appeal to attend theatres showing Universal pictures. This appeal was made to all sections in and around New York City.

So unusual was the stunt, and so striking was its appeal on behalf of the Christmas week fund, it received much publicity, not only in the many towns where the message was caught, but also in the big New York dailies.

Mailing List Sells "Over the Hill" to Norfolk Fans

BECAUSE local conditions failed to warrant a newspaper advertising campaign in connection with the recent presentation of "Over the Hill," at the Auditorium, Norfolk, Ia., a mailing campaign was conducted with excellent results.

A series of two postcards and a large circus herald was mailed to the 2,000 names on the list, the second card followed the first after a period of three days and the herald following one day later, reaching the recipient the day before the opening. Within a simple black border the announcement of the coming of the picture was made on the first card. The second card bore a small cut of the star of the picture and a few words of greeting. The circus herald was mailed under one-cent postage in an unsealed envelope, and climaxed the series.

This was virtually all the advertising done, because of unusual contingencies which confronted the Norfolk exhibitors; but the results were such as to justify an extensive campaign.

San Diego Merchants Help on "What Do Men Want?"

Manager H. H. Homer of the Colonial theatre, San Diego, Calif., made a specially timely tie-up in the matter of his newspaper publicity for the showing of "What Do Men Want?" which he put on for the week between Christmas and New Years.

Local papers carried a double page spread, with the Colonial advertisement occupying the center, while about it was special display advertising regarding holiday gifts that men might want, and the women were not forgotten, either. The suggested things that would be wanted by men ranged from automobiles to wearing apparel, musical instruments to watches and jewelry, these things being offered by representative business houses of the city.

As an added feature Mr. Homer presented one evening Miss Claire Windsor, the star of the picture, in person.

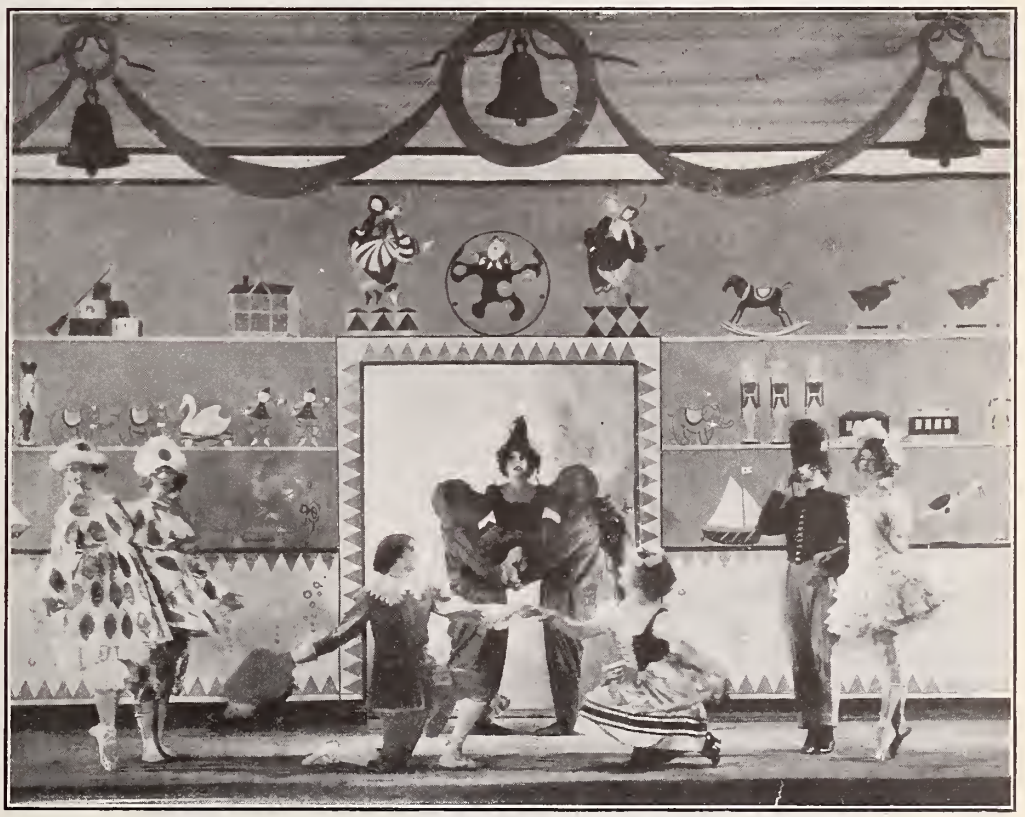
A novel stunt has been a feature of some of the recent programs at the Colonial. Instead of showing motion pictures of late fashions Mr. Homer tied-up with a local house handling the latest in women's costumes and had living models show off the new gowns and coats from the stage, coming out from the draperies and promenading briefly for the edification of the ladies in the audience.

Teaser Cards Work Well for "Three Word Brand"

Manager "Billy" Snell, now promoted from assistant, of the Imperial theatre, Gadsden, Ala., used a series of three-word teaser cards in advance on "Three-Word Brand." The lobby was also livened up with a real turkey, chopping block and axe because of Thanksgiving. A big hit was made by use in the lobby of a local quartette dressed in cowboy attire, who sang popular and Western stuff to appreciative groups.

"My Boy" Prologue Presented at Brooklyn Strand

"IN A TOY SHOP" was the title of a prologue dance number originated by Managing Director Edward L. Hyman of the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre, for the recent engagement of "My Boy."



The setting used was a toy shop. A drop in the background was painted with toys, and in the centre was an entrance through which Mme. Sonia Serova, danseuse, as a sort of fairy god-mother entered to awaken the eight animated "toys" and "teddybears" placed about the shop.

The dancing "toys" slowly went through their motions with stiff muscles. A quarrel which led to a fist fight between the two "Teddy bears" afforded much amusement. The third number was a very lively affair, and at the conclusion the "toys" again became inanimate and assumed the positions in which they were first seen, giving the impression that the number was just a dream.

For this number the stage was flooded with a white light. The orchestra was light green and the transparent windows at the side of the stage were green.

Old Clothes Idea Garners Much Publicity for Parnell

The management of the Winnipeg theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, has made a standing offer for the winter to give two passes to each person who brings a parcel of cast-off clothing for the poor to the theatre on Monday evenings or Tuesday afternoons, the passes to be good for the current performance. Arrangements have been made to turn this apparel over to Mayor Parnell, of Winnipeg. This stunt is similar to that which was arranged by Manager W. K. Miller, of the Pantages theatre, Toronto, some weeks ago.

"H. M. S. Pinafore" Introduces "Sailor Made Man" at Brooklyn Strand

Gilbert and Sullivan's most enlivening numbers from the comic opera "H. M. S. Pinafore" served in a dual capacity at the Brooklyn Mark Strand, where an elaborate stage presentation of the old favorite not only served as a big advance notice for the coming of "A Sailor-Made Man," but Managing Director Edward L. Hyman attracted many of the old Brooklyn admirers of the Gilbert-Sullivan variety of entertainment.

Mr. Hyman employed many striking comic opera sea costumes for his short version "Pinafore," as well as a novel ship set and a number of operatic stars. The Mark Strand ballet corps and chorus also augmented the cast.

Young Induces Shoe Store to Help on "Enchantment"

THE "Cinderella" contest idea with a few alterations was used by E. Forrest Young, publicity director of the Majestic and Rialto theatres, Louisville, Ky., to aid in putting over "Enchantment."

A tie-up with an exclusive ladies shoe store was effected whereby the store was induced to arrange an especially attractive window display and sponsor the giving away of a pair of "Marion Davies" shoes to the girl with the most perfect foot.

Much free space in the papers resulted from the stunt and the amount of word of mouth advertising was correspondingly large.

As consolation prizes for the ladies whose feet were not judged perfect, free tickets to the Rialto where "Enchantment" was playing, were given out.

Transformed Lobby Into Old-fashioned Farm House Living Room

For "Exit the Vamp," which he played Christmas Week, Manager Jack Kaliska of the Rialto theatre, Atlanta, transformed his lobby into the living-room of an old-fashioned farm house—the lobby proper was the living-room, with two or three old-fashioned horse-hair chairs, with embroidered "tidies." The box office was masked behind a big, open fire-place, a little cubby-hole over the mantlepiece being left for the sale of tickets.

There were old-fashioned family "portraits" around the walls, and on either side of the fire-place were wide windows, which had, as a background, snow-covered landscapes, with a real pine tree or two in the foreground, liberally sprinkled with artificial snow.

Local Bank Helps Snell on "The Sheik"

A herald on "The Sheik" enclosed with all the Xmas week mail of the First National Bank was a good stunt by Manager "Billy" Snell of the Imperial theatre, Gadsden, Ala. As there were 1,800 checks going to members of their Xmas Savings Club, that bunch alone made a good boost. Gummed labels and banners reading "The Sheik Is Coming" were plasted over town thoroughly.

Another unique idea was the "wigwagging" of four Boy Scouts, two of whom were placed on the street, another on top of the theatre and the other on the Post Office roof, all covering two long main blocks, and attracting much attention and questions—to all of which the answer was "The Sheik Is Here." By actual count, they told this 1,000 times. A local boy sang "The Sheik of Araby" in the lobby—completing a many angled campaign which got the business.

Auto Dealers Help Put Over "Burn 'Em Up Barnes"

Manager B. C. Steele, manager of the Capitol and Lucier theatres, Cleveland, had the entire West Side sitting up and taking notice last week, when he pulled off a great stunt in connection with his engagement of "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," at the Lucier. Steele tied up with the Lakewood branch sales office of the Dodge Motor Car Company. He got thirty Dodge touring cars all lined up in a parade. Every one of the cars was flanked with a red placard announcing "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" at the Lucier theatre. The procession was headed by a Dodge that was stripped and fixed to look like the racer that Johnny Hines uses in the picture. This parade of cars traveled all over Lakewood and covered the entire section from which the Lucier draws any patronage.

But that wasn't all. The Dodge Motor Car Company bought a thousand tickets from Steele for a performance of "Burn 'Em Up Barnes." They mailed these thousand tickets to a thousand prospective Dodge buyers. Of the thousand tickets sent out, 971 were turned in at the Lucier box office, so Mr. Steele says.

The result was the biggest crowds of the year both at the Lucier theatre and at the Dodge salesrooms.

In reciprocation for the co-operation of the automobile concern in putting over the exhibition, Manager Steele ran a short reel which showed a string of automobiles climbing over, under and around practically impassable barriers. Although it did not bear any trade mark of the Dodge Motor Company, the reel intimated that they were Dodge cars.

Stern Uses Inexpensive but Effective Exploitation

As exploitation for "The Sheik," Sam Stern, manager of the Regun theatre, located in New York's Harlem, dressed up a "sheik" and paraded him about the section from which the Regun draws its patrons. Mr. Stern also made a huge cut-out from a poster and mounted it above the Regun marquee.

Both stunts were entirely satisfactory business getters so Mr. Stern affirms.

"Thunderclap" Race Track Atmosphere Featured in Lobby Stunt

In connection with the presentation of "Thunderclap" at the Moon theatre, Omaha, Neb., an original bit of exploitation was utilized which not only drew people into the theatre lobby, but held them there, and ultimately sent them eagerly to the box office.

"Thunderclap" being a picturization of a racetrack story, seven horseshoes were obtained from a nearby racing stable. Then they were neatly arranged upon a large piece of cotton and placed in a long black box covered with a slab of plate glass. The box was put on two pedestals in the lobby of the theatre, directly in front of the box office.

On a small easel below the box was a card reading: "These shoes were worn by Dan O'Patrick, the winner of the famous European sweepstakes, and were loaned to the Moon theatre by Mr. William Fox." Of course, no one ever heard of "Dan O'Patrick," and even to those familiar with racing, the little ruse was so cleverly done that it brought only a smile. Nevertheless, hundreds of persons were crowding the lobby at all times of the day throughout the entire run of the production.

Jacobs Builds Fine "Big Game" Lobby Display

Manager Jacobs, of the Strand theatre, Nashville, Tenn., built a fine northern lobby on "Big Game" last week. Twelve snow-covered cedar trees were fastened upright around the walls, making a bower of green and white. Big boulders were also plastered with snow, and the ticket booth was decorated with cedar and cotton. A large camp fire lighted with three red bulbs attracted attention at the front. May Allison paper and banners were used lavishly. Being the week before Christmas, the decorations chimed in nicely with the holiday atmosphere.

Helmts' "Over the Hill" Campaign

Manager of Strand Theatre, Des Moines, Makes Most of Picture's Exploitation Opportunities

ED. HELMTS, manager of the Strand theatre, Des Moines, left no stone unturned in exploiting "Over the Hill" for a two weeks' engagement.

The Saturday before the opening he gave a showing of the picture to society women and ministers. A letter in which Mr. Helmts said that he liked the picture and would like the ministers to see if they did were sent out to 100 ministers. Cards bearing the name of those invited were enclosed and presented at the door. This was done with the co-operation of the Des Moines Evening Tribune, and the opinions of those who attended the free showing were published in the Tribune.

Extra newspaper space was used.

Teaser ads were run five days before the opening. The Tribune also sponsored the "Famous Women—Mary Carr" contest described numberless times in connection with "Over the Hill" exploitation.

A window display got a lot attention. With great skill a scene in miniature from the picture was reproduced in a vacant window next to the theatre. There was a tiny house in the foreground and in perspective "over the hill" the poorhouse.

Between ran a very real looking path that crossed a bridge that spanned a tiny stream of water. In the distance could be seen a waterfall. Tiny trees and shrubs dotted the landscape while over all was a realistic moon. At night lights showed in the windows of the house and the moon showered the display with first class "moonbeams."

Arrangement was made with one of the judges to sentence a prisoner to see the picture. A boy was caught on a box-car, was sent to see the picture and was so affected that he immediately returned to his home in Davenport.

The picture was presented with a quartet singing "Dear Old Mother of Mine" and "Auld Lang Syne." Light effects were used and as the quartet slowly left the stage singing the picture started. Off stage toward the close they sang "Over the Hill" and continued until the people were out of the house.

Arabian Dancing Girl Used in Prologue for "One Arabian Night"

No prologue run in conection with the showing of a motion picture yet attempted by a theatre manager in Eastern Pennsylvania is to be compared with that which Walter C. Kantner, manager of the Capitol theatre, Reading, Pa., staged for the run of "One Arabian Night" at his theatre during Christmas week.

The theme of the picture being Oriental, suggested to Kantner the possibility of staging a setting of Oriental splendor and at the same time adding realism to it by presenting in person a real Arabian girl in dances of her native country. He was fortunate in securing Hedda Holubar, an Arabian girl, to appear in the titular role of the prologue, with two other girls to assist her in presenting dances of an Oriental nature.

The prologue, which was of about ten minutes' duration allowed Miss Holubar ample time to appear in a variety of costumes and offer a series of Oriental dance effects accompanied by the wierd music of the tomtom and flute.

"Man's Home" Lobby Rogers' Masterpiece

AS a lobby display for "A Man's Home" playing recently at the Tivoli theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., Manager E. R. Rogers built a complete house and then surrounded it with a plot of yard, made of fresh green turf, 6 by 10 feet in size. The earth was held in place by wooden walls painted to resemble a stone wall. The house itself, shown in the cut on the opposite page, was 5 by 4 feet and was painted green. There were four rooms, with practical windows equipped with tissue paper curtains and all lighted with electricity. "Man and wife" dolls graced the front porch bench and a baby doll rested in a swing.

Every room had its proper tiny furniture, piano, wicker chairs, rugs, bed, stove, etc. A kewpie doll in the miniature bath tub provided some comedy. A clothesline of family odds and ends was strung in the back yard. A toy cow, dog and goat, were also given a place in the yard.

A sand road ran from the front gate to the garage at the rear of the house. On this road a toy auto was located. Several birds were tacked around on the porches and roof, adding color and homelikeness.

Mr. Rogers placed several cards about the display adding interest and explaining the picture.

For completeness and general interest for patrons, the display surpassed anything Mr. Rogers has ever originated, which is saying considerable.

Two views of Mr. Rogers' display are shown in cuts appearing on the opposite page.

Big Banner Advertises "What Do Men Want?

ADVANCE advertising that caught the eyes of all prospective fans is shown in the above cut. The Empire theatre secured permission to stretch a huge banner billing "What Do Men Want?" across the street, two extra buildings being used as posts for the anchor lines.

The Empire also used other exploitation mediums for the showing. The lobby was nicely decorated with stills and paper and many of the choice bill board stands were utilized. The campaign was planned and executed by Rourke and Bucher, managers of the Empire.

Wonderful Results with Little Material

FRED WALTON, manager of the American theatre, Bellingham, Wash., achieved sumptuous stage and exploitation effects for "The Sheik" with surprisingly little material.

The marquee was draped with yellow and red striped canvas to show the tent effect. The box office was masked behind the same fabric. Mr. Walton took his house staff and dressed them in authentic oriental costumes and they alternated duties of ushers and supers.

The stage carried out the tent illusion with black and white striped drops. A player concealed behind the draperies played oriental air while one of the ushers upon the stage faked the number. A Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogue of Biska was next run and the screen was run up to show a reproduction of a sheik and his favorite in a tent. The favorite, an usherette, played another oriental song while a musician behind did the active strumming. At the close of this the Sheik clapped his hands and summoned a string orchestra.

Majestic Lobby Gets Business

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The Little Minister—
A really worth-while production. One of Betty Compson's best. Did big business for entire week. (Middle West.)

Betty Compson is popular here. Hence, a lively attendance for the week. (Middle West.)

Good picture but business only fair. (East.)

Exit the Vamp—
My patrons said this was the first Ethel Clayton picture they had seen in more than a year that disappointed them. Business bad, despite star's popularity. (East.)

Only fair picture. Business good (East.)

A Prince There Was—
A very light picture. Not suitable for Thomas Meighan. Very good business. (East.)

Great business with this picture, which I consider good. (Middle West.)

Rent Free—
Good picture. Very good business. (Middle West.)

Fine picture which brought good business. (West.)

Miss Lulu Bett—
An average picture with business about as usual (West.)

Very fine picture. Fully as good as the play. Business splendid. (Middle West.)

Peter Ibbetson—
Exceptionally fine picture. Business excellent. (East.)

White Oak—
Cheap melodrama. Business good (East.)

The Hell Diggers—
This was a right fair picture, though nothing extra. Business was tolerable. (South.)

Beyond—
Nothing extra. Business fairly good, however, and we are satisfied. (South.)

Don't Tell Everything—
Well received. Receipts pleasing. (East.)

Just Around the Corner—
Exploitation, consisting of advance newspaper advertising, along with a capacity attendance the first night, gave the picture a good start and it drew a large attendance for the week (Middle West)

FIRST NATIONAL

Molly O—
A sure firebox office attraction. Fine picture. Pleased immensely. (Middle West.)

Very, very well liked with very big business (Middle West.)

We did some splendid exploitation on this picture and with this aid, it went over splendidly with large attendances and good window receipts. The picture itself is right good, one of the best down this way for some time and really deserves praise. (South.)

A picture which drew like a house afire. Not much of a picture, but it pleased them and got the business. (East.)

Love Never Dies—
Good picture which drew well. Booked for last three days of week, or would have held it for a week's run instead of three days. (East.)

Fairly good feature. Average business. (West.)

R. S. V. P.—
This one was popular with former service men and did a good week's business. (Middle West.)

Not much of a picture, but it drew the crowds here. (Middle West.)

Love's Redemption—
Only a fairly good picture and box office value. (Middle West.)

Star well liked in this. Receipts average. (East.)

The Midnight Bell—
Picture mediocre, but business good on account of the star. (East.)

The Wonderful Thing—
A great picture. Capacity houses each performance. (Middle West.)

Business very good in spite of picture that was only fair. (East.)

My Boy—
Good production which drew more than usual business. (West.)

The Lotus-Eater—
The name of Barrymore drew them in, but nine out of ten were disappointed bitterly in the picture. Business good all week but complaints from patrons were numerous. (East.)

Her Mad Bargain—
Anita Stewart's name helped a little, but it was a bad week, according to box office receipts. The picture was unconvincing and overdrawn. (East.)

Star Dust—
A very fine production. Good business. (West.)

The Silent Call—
The picture did an excellent week's business, due partly, perhaps, to advance publicity and favorable press comment. (Middle West.)

The Child Thou Gavest Me—
Picture and business only fair. (East.)

FOX

A Connecticut Yankee—
Excellent business, on a picture which delighted lovers of the book. (East.)

Ran strong clear up to last minute of two weeks' run. (East.)

The Lost Trail—
Good business on this one. A fine picture. (West.)

The Queen of Sheba—
One of the best pictures of the year. Wonderful scenery and acting. A record-breaker. (West.)

Over the Hill—
Enters third week of run with business continuing capacity. Lines at box office for last show of second week. (East.)

Trailin—
Ordinary play. Ordinary business for week. (Middle West.)

Picture enjoyed by Mix fans. Business fair. (East.)

GOLDWYN

Theodora—
One of the greatest spectacular pictures in the history of the film drama, combined with powerful and thrilling plot makes this a big box office attraction. Holding it for a second week and playing to large audiences. (Middle West.)

Two weeks' run to good business and pleased patrons. (West.)

Equals anything ever seen here in a spectacular way. Drawing better than ever the second week. (Middle West.)

Capacity business for week at advanced admissions. Held for second week. (East.)

The Night Rose—
One of the best underworld pictures made. Surpassed "Outside the Law" in business. (Middle West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

Little Lord Fauntleroy—
This was a fairly entertaining picture. It seemed especially to delight the children and the misses. Mary plays the part of the boy very well, but many grown-ups are not especially fond of a picture of that class. (South.)

Did only fairly well during the second week of its engaement. Christmas week it went over finc. Last week it fell down lamentably. (Middle West.)

The finest thing Mary Pickford has done. Held up splendidly the second week. (Middle West.)

Held up fairly well for a second week. One week would have been plenty. (East.)

Way Down East—
Opened strong, flopped in middle of week and came back Friday and Saturday. Shown at popular prices day and night at three houses operated by the same company. (East.)

Second run showing went only fair. (West.)

WID GUNNING

What Do Men Want?—
The best week's business in several weeks with this one, which pleased patrons and won much favorable comment. (Middle West.)

VITAGRAPH

The Son of Wallingford—
A good box office attraction which audiences enjoyed immensely. (East.)

STATE RIGHTS

Why Girls Leave Home—
A very good picture. Did nicely the second week. (Middle West.)

The Parish Priest—
Second week and doing better all the time. Business increased 33 1-3 per cent during second week. (Middle West.)

PROGRAMS FOR THE WEEK OF JANUARY 8TH

Big Houses Say—

METRO

The Conquering Power—
A picture of average merit which drew well. We advertised Rudolph Valentino extensively and it brought results, for his hit in "The Sheik" was phenomenal here. (East.)

Accepted as a dandy picture. Receipts good. (East.)

Garments of Truth—
A light farce, very good attraction for the season, but is more or less a juvenile entertainment. (East.)

Camille—
Business better than I expected it to be. The picture is a thriller. Its sensationalisms draws the crowds. (Middle West.)

PATHE

A Sailor Made Man—
Big business on two weeks' run. (West.)

Used this as a feature, with a two-reel dramatic picture—and cleaned up. Packed houses and roars of applause were the rule for the picture's run. (East.)

Great. Haven't seen a better comedy in years. Large attendance also thought so. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

Playing With Fire—
Good both as regards picture and box office value. (West.)

Fairly entertaining. Business about as usual. (West.)

The Fire Eater—
Good picture. Something doing all the time. We had good houses all week. (Middle West.)

HODKINSON

The Mysterious Rider—
Business was pretty good. Everybody liked the pictures. (Middle West.)

Fair picture and business only fair. (East.)

Fairly good production. Average business. (West.)

SELZNICK

Clay Dollars—
This was a right good picture and business held its own. (South.)

Picture and business both fair. (East)

A Man's Home—
Fair only, lacking box office attraction. (East.)

REALART

Room and Board—
Mediocre picture, very light. Business poor. (East.)

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE.

Hal Hode of Cosmopolitan Pictures, is spending a week in Chicago, making his headquarters at the local Paramount exchange. Mr. Hode is making a tour of eighteen leading motion-picture centers of the country with a view to getting first-hand information as to business conditions, and also getting in personal contact with the managers and salesman of the Paramount exchanges, which release Cosmopolitan pictures. Mr. Hode reports that he has visited Cincinnati and Indianapolis on the present trip and found that in Cincinnati, although the theatres were doing a fair business, business men in general were very pessimistic over the outlook, as forty-four thousand persons are out of employment in that city, and it is felt that business will pick up slowly there. Indianapolis, however, was just the opposite, conditions splendid and both motion-picture men and leaders in other industries were happy over the good business, and very optimistic as to the immediate outlook. He finds conditions favorable in Chicago with prospects for an early improvement in theatre attendance excellent. Mr. Hode also reported percentage engagements on the more important feature releases are becoming popular with exhibitors, who find this method of showing pictures more profitable and also declare it frees them from the necessity of taking the big chances which arise when they pay a straight price for the picture.

Herman Stern, district manager for Universal, is suffering with two carbuncles on the back of his neck, but notwithstanding this handicap, has been gamely arriving at the office every day, although he has been forced to shorten his working hours.

C. W. Hall, of Centralia, Illinois, reports that his new theatre, the Illinois, will open on January 16th with "Molly O," as its feature production. The Illinois was built at a cost of approximately $160,000 and will seat one thousand persons. Its architecture, decorations and equipment are of the highest class and make it one of the model theatres of the state.

"Penrod" has been booked to open at Balaban & Katz's Chicago Theatre on the last of January, and it is understood that Wesley Barry will appear in person during the showing of this picture.

Publicity Representative Walter Hill, of Universal, is arranging a special showing of "The Leather Pusher" (two-reelers) for the press of Chicago, to which the sporting editors will be especially invited. This series of clever comedies is being widely exploited, and Short Subject Manager Alexander and the other Universal executives at Chicago predict that these two reelers will be splendid box-office attractions.

The first issue of Illinois Filmland, the official publication of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners, has been mailed out to exhibitors of the state, and is a credit to its editor, William E. Jennings and W. D. Burford, its associate editor. According to the foreword this publication, which is in pamphlet form, will come out monthly and be mailed free of charge to every member of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners, and through its columns the editors hope to keep every exhibitor in the state informed of the progress and activities of the state and national organizations.

Charles G. Epperson, manager of Famous Players-Lasky's Boston exchange, stopped off in Chicago for a brief visit en route to Minneapolis, where he will spend two weeks.

Harold Baigh has been added to the sales force of Superior Screen Service, Inc., and will cover the Chicago northside territory.

Harry W. Willard, recently manager of Realart's Chicago office, has been appointed manager of Wid Gunning, Inc., exchange to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Sidney Goldman. Mr. Willard is one of the most popular exchange men in this territory where he has been connected with the film industry for several years in important positions. It is understood that Mr. Goldman has made a new connection, which he will announce in the course of a few days. Robert Cougle and Fred Jacoby have joined the Gunning sales force and both will cover out-of-town territory.

Charles Bedford, connected with the Dempsey-Carpentier Official Pictures, has recovered from injuries sustained the day after Christmas when he was held up and badly beaten in Springfield, Illinois.

William Weinshenker, who for some time past has been associated with Goldwyn's Chicago exchange, is now connected with Griever Productions.

Superior Screen Service has closed a deal with Juanita Wilms, Inc., through W. E. Sawyer, president, for the first six comedies to be released by Juanita Films, commencing January 15th. The territory secured by Superior on these comedies includes Northern Illinois and Indiana.

W. L. McCloud, who was especially engaged by Joe Friedman, of Celebrated, to aid exhibitors in advertising and exploiting "Why Girls Leave Home," is meeting with exceptional success in his publicity efforts and already has put over a number of newspaper tie-ups, which have been of great help to exhibitors showing "Why Girls Leave Home." "The Black Panther's Cub," Celebrated's next important feature release, is pulling good business to the Ziegfeld where it opened Sunday. The unusually favorable criticisms received in the daily press are helping to make it a much talked about picture.

J. E. Maple, of the Northwestern Motion Picture Corporation of Cheyenne, Wyoming, has been visiting in Chicago for several days.

Clarence Phillips is now a member of Hodkinson's Chicago staff as a salesman and will work Chicago territory.

Manager Barbee, of Barbee's loop theatre, has set a precedent for loop theatres by booking "White Eagle," Pathe's fine serial, for a daily showing, and Manager Martin, of Pathe's local exchange, is confident that it is an experiment which will prove a success. With the termination of the Dempsey-Carpentier pictures' long and successful run, Barbee has also changed its policy as to admissions, which from now on will be twenty-five cents, including war tax.

Manager H. W. Given, of Paramount, is greatly pleased over the large number of questionaires being filled in and returned by exhibitors throughout Illinois, as he believes the opinions of the exhibitors thus secured will enable the local Paramount exchange to co-operate with them in solving the problems of 1922. Mr. Given only sent out the questionaire, which covers questions of the best policies to adopt for the coming year, last week, and already has received over one hundred answers.

Messrs. Carey and Alexander, formerly operating the Empire theatre at Auburn, Ind., have bought the Hegewisch and Ontario theatres at Hegewisch, Ill. Carey and Alexander have been in the business for eighteen years. They bought the houses from M. S. Jonas, who is going into the real estate business in Chicago.

Gus Cook, of the Crystal theatre, Dundee, Ill., has returned from his annual big game hunt, which this year took him to Southern Alaska, with some splendid trophies, including a big grizzly pelt, a white fox and a mule deer. Mr. Cook went into the wilds of the far north and at one time was 500 miles from a railroad. He reports not only hunting in the north was good, but that business at his Dundee theatre is satisfactory.

Manager Seery, of First National, and Manager Schwartz, of Education, are proudly exhibiting gold pencil and pen sets, which recently were presented to them by Christy Brothers of Educational.

Manager Clyde Eckhardt, of Fox's Chicago Exchange, announces that "Over the Hill" will run the week of February 5 at forty-five Chicago houses, outside of the Loop, at advanced prices. This is the largest number of houses ever playing a picture for a solid week, day and date, in the history of Chicago motion pictures.

Harry MacDonald, of Wid Gunning Inc., who has been in Chicago for the past ten days, will go to Minneapolis for a conference with the executives of Gunning's Minneapolis exchanges this week, returning to Chicago, where he will remain for a few days, before going back to New York where his headquarters are located.

Editors Given Credit for "Judgment" Work

That the World Film Corporation is one organization which believes in giving credit where it is due is proven by the information that comes from the World offices concerning the work of Harry Chandlee and William B. Laub, who edited and wrote the subtitles for World's successful super-feature, "Judgment!" It is stated that while "Judgment!" when it was received from Europe, was a production above the average in point of direction, settings, etc., its story was told in typical Continental fashion.

It is stated that the suspense of the dramatic situations is due entirely to the work of Chandlee and Laub.

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

Exploitation Material on the "Love Slave"

ALL exploitation material for the Russell Clark Syndicate attraction, Lucy Doraine in "The Love Slave, a Sascha production presented by Herz Film Corporation, have been completed and supplies have been forwarded to the New York Exchange of First National for Greater New York territory, and to the Buffalo Exchange for New York State territory. Shipment has also been made to Turner & Dahnken, who acquired the California rights.

Full advantage has been taken of the Oriental subject and of the fact that the Eastern scenes were filmed in the Damascus of the Bible, and in the Arabian Desert. Rich Oriental colors make the paper unusually attractive and the same color scheme has been used in the elaborate lobby display, slides, etc. The press book for "The Love Slave" is unique in form and very compact. It opens out as a most impressive broadside instead of being bound as a booklet. The covers, front and back, are rich in color, and there is enclosed a "Clip Sheet" with advertising and publicity cuts, press matter and a Music Cue sheet prepared by James C. Bradford. The advertising and exploitation matter is the work of Raymond Cavanagh, who recently returned to the of his former associate Bur- advertising field in the offices ton Rice.

Otis Skinner Host to Exhibitors

The Exceptional Pictures Corporation and Otis Skinner acted as joint hosts at a series of theatre parties in honor of a number of Pennsylvania and New Jersey exhibitors during the week of January 9th.

These parties were arranged so that the leading exhibitors of Lancaster, Easton and Allentown, Pennsylvania, and Atlantic City, N. J., where Mr. Skinner played during the week, might have the opportunity of witnessing a performance by Otis Skinner of "Blood and Sand," the highly successful stage play in which Mr. Skinner is at present touring the country prior to starting work on his second motion picture, "Mister Antonio," which will be produced under the direction of the Exceptional Pictures Corporation.

"His Nibs" in Kansas City

Exceptional Picture Scores with Exhibitors at Pre-View Showing

"HIS NIBS," the Exceptional Pictures Corporation production in which Charles (Chic) Sale is starred, was given a pre-view at the Liberty theatre, Kansas City, on December 28th, the special showing taking place immediately after the regular show.

That "His Nibs" proved a success at this pre-view is borne out by the enthusiastic report of the picture carried by The Reel Journal, one of the leading regional motion picture trade publications. Under the heading "'His Nibs' Makes Hit at Pre-view Showing" was the following comment:

"Those who have been looking for unique picture entertainment will find their every desire fulfilled in 'His Nibs,' the novelty rural comedy featuring Charles (Chic) Sale, and which is distributed in the Kansas City territory by Superior Pictures, Inc.

"At a pre-view showing of the picture at the Liberty Theatre in Kansas City Wednesday nnght to a representative gathering, 'His Nibs' made a decided hit. Its quaint and droll humor and the very cleverness of the production itself brought forth many laughs from the audience.

"It is a picture that will please any audience. It is rich with humor and is a production of such uniqueness as will be well received anywhere. 'Chic' Sale scores a triumph in his portrayal of seven different rural types. His work is artistically done and his characterizations so peculiarly funny in themselves that they cause laughter on every appearance.

"'His Nibs' is indeed a charming bit of artistry; a clean and novel production; good photography; splendid types; wonderful acting, and a cast containing prominent players, among them being Joseph Dowling and Colleen Moore.

"Here, indeed, is a distinct novelty. And there is no question as to how the public will receive it. It has many exploitation angles and it should surely prove a box office sensation."

"School Days" Accessories

Array of Exploitation Novelties Issued for Warner Feature

SELDOM has there been offered to exhibitors an array of exploitation novelties that have been devised for Warner Brothers' latest production, Gus Edwards' "School Days," featuring Wesley Barry, according to a recent announcement. There are fully thirteen novelties, and these range from a sticker suitable for use on all mailing matter to what is said to be the most unique cut-out that was ever used in conjunction with the exploitation of a motion picture.

The Wesley Barry cut-out is in five colors, measures 13½ x 21, and it contains in the center a black space 5½ x 8, on which can be written in chalk pertinent data relative to the store in which it is displayed. The possibilities with this cut-out are declared to be tremendous.

Other novel exploitation aids include a series of four cartoon strips especially drawn for the picture by Clare Victor Dwiggins, a well known newspaper cartoonist, who has syndicated the "School Days" comic for the past twelve years to over 300 leading dailies throughout the country.

With "School Days" eight comic slides (two to a set) have also been made, and each set is said to present a humorous incident pertaining to the picture. In other words, it has been the aim of the Warner publicity department to get motion pictures patrons laughing long before they actually see the production.

In addition to these aids there has also been provided a Wesley Barry badge; a Wes Barry lollypop; a strip of Barry photos, a rubber novelty that is calculated to keep the teachers of the country guessing and the kids laughing; a postal card, one side of which contains five scenes from the picture; a blotter that can be distributed to all school teachers and business houses; and a complete line of paper.

One of the big features of the paper is said to be the six-sheet, drawn by Mr. Dwiggins for "School Days." It is an exact replica of a Sunday comic section, and it contains every element of humor found in the Sunday papers. This has also been made available as a half sheet.

Foreign Sales Reported by Arrow Film

DAVID J. MOUNTAN, Foreign Manager of the Arrow Film Corporation, in a statement issued this week announced a number of important sales for that company's product in the foreign market.

Among these was the sale of eighteen Spotlight Comedies for Porto Rico, Santa Domingo and Haiti to the International Film Agency of San Juan. Famous Players-Lasky Corporation purchased fourteen Broadway Comedies for distribution by the Feature Films, Ltd., of Australiasia. Famous Lasky Film Service, Ltd., 166 Wardour street, London, England, also secured the fourteen Broadway Comedies for the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. A. E. Gonzalez, of San Juan, Porto Rico, contracted for the eight Jack Hoxie features and ten one-reel Hank Mann Comedies for Porto Rico, Santa Domingo and Haiti. K. D. & Brothers, Bombay, India, purchased twenty-six two-reel Hank Mann Comedies for India, Burma and Ceylon.

The "Great Authors" series includes twelve pictures, all of which are playing their pre-release engagement at the Strand. They will be released nationally within a few weeks, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation acting as the distributors for the Kineto Company of America, the producers.

The publicity departments and the advertising departments of Kineto and Hodkinson are co-operating in preparing material that will be of every possible aid to the exhibitor.

Adams to Be Co-Starred with Sid Smith

In all forthcoming Percy and Ferdie Hallroom Comedies on the present Federated series, Jimmie Adams' name will appear as co-featured with Sid Smith, on the main titles of the pictures themselves, and on "paper," advertising, and billing, announces the producers.

Exclusive Has Curwood Series

Two Reel Dramas Were Produced by Col. Wm. Selig

ONE of the most important developments of the New Year in the independent field is the announcement coming from the offices of the Exclusive Features, Inc., to the effect that this concern has ready and is now offering to the State Right buyers of the country a series of twelve two reel James Oliver Curwood dramas. The two reel offerings present a wide range of stories, and are said to be remarkable for the artistic and effective manner in which they were produced by Colonel William Selig.

An elaborate and adequate line of lithographic advertising accessories have been prepared. The Exclusive Features publicity department have completed work on a press book designed to aid the exchangemen to sell the series to the exhibitor and at the same time contains abundant material from which the theatre manager can choose matter for use in both his house program and the local newspapers.

In speaking of the reissuing of this series of James Oliver Curwood two reelers, an official of the Exclusive Features, Inc., stated that the action of his concern was prompted by the desire of placing in the hands of the independent exchange subjects which would be received by exhibitors as welcome additions to their programs.

"Our main desire," continued the Exclusive executive, "is to place upon the market product which the independent exchangeman can place upon the screens of his territory with a minimum of effort and expense. We believe that the merit and quality of the James Oliver Curwood series will command a quick and ready market, and will prove to be money getters for the exhibitor.

"The past year has been a very hard one for all branches of the motion picture industry, but on the whole the manager has had to fight on the very front lines. We all owe the exhibitor a deep debt of gratitude, and it is our duty to stand behind him by supplying pictures which will fill his house, at a rental figure which will assure him a reasonable and certain profit."

It is said by those who have seen the pictures of this series, that, in all respects they reflect great credit upon Mr. Curwood as an author, and Colonel William N. Selig as a producer.

From all sections of the country there has been manifested a great interest in these productions among the progressive exchanges throughout the country, and the Exclusive office feels that a full hundred per cent distribution will result from the forthcoming exploitation campaign, which is now being mapped out.

The Exclusive executives feel assured that good product will always find a profitable market, and they are certain that the offering of the revivals of the James Oliver Curwood series will prove to be a welcome event in the independent film circles of the country.

"Shadows of Conscience" Campaign Book Issued

"SHADOWS OF CONSCIENCE," the seven reel American classic produced by the W. D. Russell Productions, Inc., is being introduced to exhibitors by one of the most attractive broadsides of picture history. It is printed in six colors, and is not only attractive to the eye, but gives the prospective purchaser of the "Shadows" picture a knowledge of the film almost as complete as if he had witnessed a showing.

A sixteen page campaign book, for the "Shadows" picture, is one of the most complete exhibitor helps ever published. Written and arranged by competent newspaper people, it contains many ads arranged for various sizes of newspaper space, as well as short snappy stories and reviews which can be used in the local newspapers without revision, and gives an abundance of ideas for practical, inexpensive exploitation. A Unique feature of the book is a complete prologue, written and arranged for showing in any theatre.

The picture will be distributed in Kansas, Western Missouri, Colorado, New Mexico, Wyoming, Utah, and Southern Idaho by George A. Levy, president of the Liberty Theatres Film Exchange, of Denver. The Pioneer Film Corporation, of New York, will handle the "Shadows" picture in the territory of New York, northern New Jersey, Illinois and Indiana. Wisconsin and the upper peninsula if Michigan will be booked by the W. G. Gaskell Enterprises of Chicago.

"Ten Nights" Popularity Grows

Week Bookings Greet Arrow Special in New England

WORD received from W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, states that the big Arrow-Super-Special "Ten Nights in a Barroom" is enjoying excellent business.

S. H. Bunce, who is releasing the picture in New England, through the Lightning Photoplay Corporation, has secured a number of one week contracts in theatres through New England. Amongst these are Lawrence, Mass., where it opened Monday, January 9th, to excellent business. Haverhill, Mass., New Bedford and many other cities. Mr. Bunce states that the picture will open in a down town theatre in Boston for an indefinite run the latter part of this month and says that exhibitors from all over the New England territory are evincing a keen interest in the picture.

Another territory where the picture opens for a week run is Pennsylvania where Tony Luchase launched the premier presentation at the Arcadia theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania, on Monday the ninth, for a week's run.

John Lowell, star of the production and Baby Ivy Ward, who plays the part of little Mary Morgan, are appearing in person in connection with the Reading showing.

Dr. Shallenberger says that Arrow is in receipt of a great number of letters and telegrams from leading theatres all over the United States, who are desirous of booking this picture, which only goes to prove that given a real box-office attraction there is no difficulty in securing dates at leading theatres. It is the opinion of Arrow's officials that the motion picture public today are shopping. The old day of going to a movie is passed. The amusement loving public today are careful to select a photoplay which has real entertainment value and which they want to see.

Independent Crisis Passed

Franklyn Backer and Field Manager Scott, Are Both Optimistic

FOLLOWING conferences with his field manager, Lester M. Scott, upon his recent arrival in New York, Franklyn E. Backer, who returned from an extended trip to the different exchange centers two weeks ago in which he made a thorough personal investigation of conditions for East Coast Productions, Inc., stated that the results of a careful study of their combined information shows to their entire satisfaction that the independent exchanges throughout the country have, in the great majority of cases, passed the crisis in the period of readjustment and are now entering definitely upon a career of slowly improving business.

The territory covered by Mr. Scott included visits to Chicago, Minneapolis, Omaha, St. Louis, Dallas, Atlanta, Washington and Baltimore, while Mr. Backer's trip was also confined to exchange centers east of Minnesota. When the former reported to the home office of Amalgamated Productions, which are being distributed under a franchise plan by East Coast Productions, Inc., he found his chief busy superintending the fitting up of the new offices recently added to the suite in the Times building and says that he realized immediately that Mr. Backer had read the barometer of business conditions much the same as he had. "What impressed me the most on this last trip," said Mr. Scott, "was the very marked improvement in the business methods, or perhaps I should say, the air of efficiency, that has taken the place of the easy-going methods from which so many of the exchanges suffered in times passed. My conclusions, which check up with those of Mr. Backer, are that the majority of exchanges have turned the corner and have learned many valuable lessons while negotiating the turn which will make for general improvement throughout the entire independent field."

New York Teachers to See "School Days"

Before Warner Brothers release "School Days" in New York, Harry Rapf, the producer, will shortly give a private showing of this Wesley Barry film to all the public school teachers of New York City, by arrangement with the Board of Education.

Albert Parker Directing John Barrymore

In the picturization of Conan Doyle's famous detective story, "Sherlock Holmes," an Albert Parker Production, starring John Barrymore, the screen gets one of the most intensifying of mystery films.

Some years ago, Director Parker played a role in William Gillette's stage play of "Sherlock Holmes," and the idea of making a picture of it stayed with him. Last autumn, Parker spoke to John Barrymore about this project, and Barrymore, having just finished "The Lotus Eaters," and on the lookout for a good story, was immediately interested in the proposition.

"Out of the Inkwell" at Kunsky's Capitol

Max Fleischer's "Out of the Inkwell" comedies, have been booked for John Kunsky's new 4,000-seat picture palace, the Capitol at Detroit. Two subjects were shipped to the Capitol, "Fishing" and "Invisible Ink."

Loew and Fox Circuits Book "Road to Arcady"

That the market is as ready as ever to absorb high-class independent productions is the deduction made by E. S. Manheimer of J. W. Film Corporation from the reports he is receiving from the different exchanges handling the first of the society drama series, "The Road to Arcady," recently released in New York.

Mr. Manheimer is authority for the statement that in New York territory alone, "The Road to Arcady" will rival in bookings any picture of its class released during the past year. Among the bookings now recorded, the Loew and the Fox circuits loom large in the foreground while a week's run at the Sheridan theatre is found recorded among the longer runs.

"Burn 'em up Barnes" a Road Show in South

True T. Thompson of True Film Company, 1911½ Commerce street, Dallas, Texas, who put over "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" and "The County Fair," will start the season 1922 by sending four road companies on tour in the Southern States of Johnny Hines latest six reel comedy-drama "Burn 'em up Barnes." The no one company will have its premier opening at the New Criterion theatre, Oklahoma City's finest photo-play theatre, beginning Jan. 15th to be followed by Hoyt Kirkpatrick's Now Joie theatre, Ft. Smith, Arkansas, and The Broadway theatre, Muskogee.

"Four Seasons" Ready for National Release

"THE FOUR SEASONS" is now being made ready for national release. All the advertising accessories, the press books and complete exhibitors aids are being prepared by various departments of the Kineto Company of America and the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, the latter being the distributing company.

Ever since "The Four Seasons" played its pre-release engagement at the Rialto theatre, requests have poured into Kineto asking when the picture would be released nationally.

Warner Bros. New Serial

"Shadows of the Jungle" Will Be on Lavish Scale; Episodes Shipped

WHAT is declared to be one of the most stupendous serial productions that has ever been filmed, containing a story replete with thrilling adventure, romance and intrigue in the African jungles, is the Warner Brothers' latest fifteen episode animal chapter play, "Shadows of the Jungle," co-starring Grace Darmond and Philo McCullough. The serial is being produced at the Warner West Coast Studios by Sam and Jack Warner.

According to recent dispatches received at the Warner offices, the first three episodes are en route east. The first episode is called "The Stolen Medal," the second "The Sacrifice," and the third "The Lion Pit." Virtually the entire West Coast Studios are said to have been converted into a veritable wild African jungle. And the magnitude of the sets, in addition to the million-dollar menagerie of the Al G. Barnes circus and the thousands of players engaged for the chapter play will, in the estimation of Sam Warner, set a new standard in serial picturizations.

The Al G. Barnes collection of animals is credited with containing more lions, tigers, leopards, elephants, camels, zebras and monkeys than any two circuses combined. Under the terms of the contract all the Barnes trainers and assistants are also transferred to the studios during the making of the picture.

The entire story of "Shadows of the Jungle" is said to be original and entirely out of the beaten track. Episode number one, "The Stolen Medal," tells the story of a mysterious mission into the jungles of Africa; episode two, "The Sacrifice," maintains the thrilling adventures that beset the principals; and episode three, "The Lion Pit," heightens and intensifies the suspense created by the first and second chapters.

In addition to Miss Darmond and Mr. McCullough, the supporting cast includes Jack Richardson, Derelys Perdue, Robert Agnew, Mable Stark and Captain J. R. Riccarde. Frances Guihan wrote the continuity for the production.

Animal Thrills in Serial

Col. Selig Outdoes Himself in Producing "The Jungle Goddess"

COL. WM. N. SELIG, benefiting from the experience gained when he produced "The Lost City" and "Miracles of the Jungle," his two previous serials, has evolved a series of almost unbelievable wild-animal stunts, it is said, which are used in "The Jungle Goddess," his new master serial which is being state righted by Export & Import Film Co., Inc.

The trained lion, tiger and leopard acts which have been recalled from various circuses to which they had been loaned, are now all back in the Selig zoo and are taking part in the episodes of the big serial now in the making. Five episodes are already in New York and production has reached the tenth episode at the coast.

One of the most astonishing feats in the opening chapter of "The Jungle Goddess," states an official of the Export & Import Film Company, takes place on an immense jungle god set which took two months to construct. The giant stone god is the housing place for a big flock of lions which the high priest in the film liberates at will.

The daughter of an English lord is kidnapped and thrown into the basket of a balloon. Freed, the big gas bag drifts for days until it is shot down over the jungle by Thunderman, a chiefton, who fires a flaming arrow at it.

The rescued girl is raised as "The Jungle Goddess." By trickery the high priest has her placed in the lap of the god and then looses the lions. Selig, it is said, has used twenty of the biggest lions in his zoo for this scene. The lions leap at the girl and are thrown back time after time. Finally one reaches the lap of the god but the massive arm moves and the fingers grasp the jungle beast, holding it while it claws at the girl.

The other lions are scattered and another unusual animal stunt scene takes place. An elephant swings his trunk about the trapped lion and throws him to the ground, stamping out his life under his heavy foot.

These two stunts are only a few of the great number of animal thrill scenes with which the serial abounds, according to the Export & Import Film Company.

Dannenberg of "The Film Daily" (formerly Wid's) was an interested member of a party of prominent film men who had a preview of the opening chapters of the serial this week. Speaking of "The Jungle Goddess," he said:

"Selig has made an animal serial which, judging from the start, has enough thrills produced from animal sequences to make even the hardest boiled fan admit it's 'there.' Selig has taken his zoo and hurled it right at the camera. This one looks like a money getter."

First Western Classic Release Ready

"Bullets and Justice" is the title of the first two-reel western subject to be released to the independent buyer by the Western Classic Sales Company. This new series of thrillers will be released, one every two weeks. Bill Fatton, Pete Morrison and Fritzie Ridgeway are featured and other well known short reel stars. January 15 is the date set for the first release.

"The Two Orphans" Gets Road Show Offer

Russell Clark, vice president and general manager of the Russell Clark Syndicate, Inc., reports that while he is not surprised at the hearty reception accorded the release announcement of the Frank Valle presentation of the Edison-Film-Turino attraction, "The Two Orphans," he had not anticipated the unique offer which came to him during the week.

A mid-Western correspondent who reviewed the picture on a recent visit to New York, and whose letterhead proclaimed him a state rights buyer, offered to take over "The Two Orphans" in certain territory as a road show and on a percentage basis. Being about to close for the territory mentioned for exhibition in the usual manner, Mr. Clark was forced to decline. He calls attention to the fact, however, that as a premier screen presentation of one of the world's greatest smiles and tears dramas, "The Two Orphans" ought, with proper exploitation, to go over as a road show as well as if issued as a regular release.

Buyers Interested in Russell Clark Picture

With choice territory sold before the release announcement of "The Offenders," starring Margery Wilson, increased selling activity followed, is the report from the Russell Clark Syndicate, Inc., which is distributing this Margery Wilson production presented by Fenwicke L. Holmes. Publication of the titles of three others now in production has aroused interest in the entire series. These titles are short and calculatd to excite curiosity and were personally selected by Miss Wilson. They are "Miss Paul Revere," "Insinuation" and "Woman's Woman," and are to be released in the order named.

The first mentioned, "The Offenders," bears the same title as the magazine story by Katherine Eggleston from which the continuity was made. First National Exchanges, Inc., have secured rights to all four of the Margery Wilson productions in New York State and Greater New York, as have Turner & Dahnken in the California territory.

Special Service Section on "Conceit"

"CONCEIT," speaking in general terms, presents two different angle for exploitation. It can be sold, and perhaps should be sold, as a "Northwoods" picture, for the most important and vital of its scenes are laid in "the great outdoors." If, however, the exhibitor thinks that this class of picture can rise to only a certain height in the minds of his patrons, the theme of the picture, that of ego in a man, coupled with cowardice, presents distinct opportunities.

For the theatre in which the first angle is deemed the best bet, there is very little new that can be suggested, but very much that has been used time and time again which can be counted upon to get business and bring out that class of people who like action, beautiful scenery, guns, animals, and fights.

If the other angle is accepted, then the campaign will subordinate all of the above mentioned features that the picture possesses and talk about the story, ask questions concerning the vanity of mankind, and dwell particularly on whether or not any person is able to see himself as others see him.

GENERAL INFORMATION CONCERNING THE PICTURE

"CONCEIT" was first a Munsey Magazine story, written by Michael J. Phillips, under the title of "The Toll of the Wilderness." In picture form it represents, so far as screen story goes, the work of the author, who rewrote the original to meet picture requirements, and of Edward J. Montagne, scenarioist of unqualified ability, whose recent picture, "A Man's Home," is meeting with unusual success.

The direction is by Burton George, who has many successes, among which is one of recent issue, "The Valley of Doubt."

THUMBNAIL SYNOPSIS

STORY—Egotist and coward, whose money has bought his way in the world, is thrown on his own resources in the Canadian woods to emerge regenerated.

Cast—William B. Davidson as "William Crombie," Hedda Hopper as "Mrs. Crombie," Charles Gerard as "Hurt Kilstrom," Betty Hilburn as "Jeanette," Maurice Costello as "Barbe la Fleche," Patrick Hartigan as "Bowles," Warren Cook as "McBain," Red Eagle as an "Indian trapper."

Technical Staff—Directed by Burton George; story by Michael J. Phillips; scenario by Edward J. Montagne; settings by Al D'Agastino; titles by Randolph Bartlett.

Locale—An American city and Canadian forests and mountain country.

Interiors—Home of a rich man in a big city; a hunting lodge in Canada; a log cabin in the mountains.

Exteriors—Garden of an elaborate town house; Canadian Rockies.

The cast secured for the roles were selected with care and are excellent types. The principal role displayed by William B. Davidson. He is a rich young man, filled with an unbounded conceit, but at heart a coward. There are two principal feminine roles, one, that of the wife of the conceited individual, being played by Hedda Hopper, remembered for her work in numberless big pictures, and especially as leading woman for William Faversham in "The Man Who Lost Himself." The other, that of a child of the forest, is portrayed by Betty Hilburn, an attractive ingenue who distinguished herself in "The Girl of the Sea."

Another prominent role is that played by Charles Gerard, who is a well known figure with all fans. Mr. Gerard is the villain of the play, but is assisted by Maurice Costello, famed leading man of a decade past, and still remembered by all fans who are out of their teens.

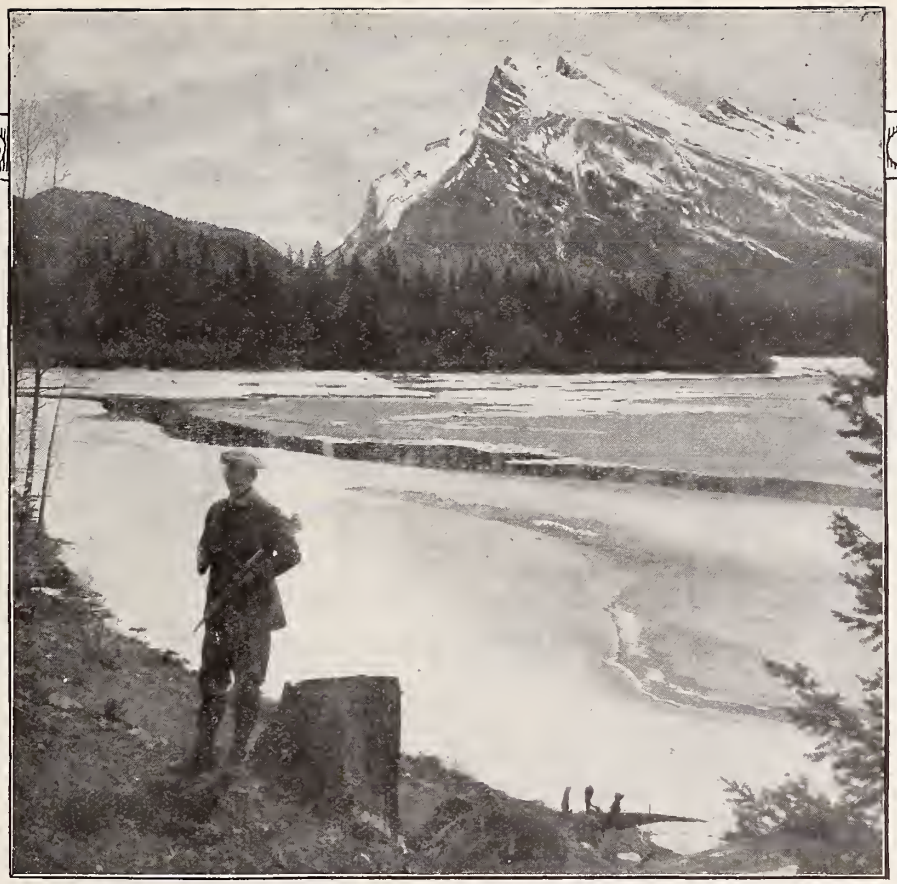
The locale of the action of the picture is about equally divided into scenes of city life and in the fur country of the Canadian forests and mountains. Great care has been taken to obtain correct atmosphere and there are numberless settings that show every evidence of no expense being spared and of great care in picking locations that will fit the scenes of the story.

The picture screens in six reels. Art titles adorn the production and the plain titles are in keeping with the story.

THE EXPLOITATION CAMPAIGN

IF the "Northwoods" angle is used the newspaper advertising should stress the scenery, the action, the shooting of bears, the fight and merely mention the story and its theme. Good action stills should be used in framing displays, the type should be bold and the wording of sentences melodramatic.

A lobby display of the "log cabin" type can be used to advantage. Stuffed bears and other wild animals are usually available and evergreen boughs will work in well at small expense. A live bear as a ballyhoo, with the keeper attired as a Northwoods guide, is always sure fire.



Woodscraft practiced in the lobby, various kinds of traps explained and exhibited by boy scouts and a general campaign to educate people about the forest and its creatures is a good hint on any picture of this type.

If you play the feature before the stores put away their furs, a tie-up with local merchants in advertising and a display of skins should be easy to put over. Most people are interested in the history of the animals which bear salable furs and fascinated by the sleek skins that are on display.

Giving a good idea of the attention to detail of "Conceit" and presenting the principal characters of the cast.

Wilderness fear, the fear that grips and holds—that sees monsters in mere shadows, and fiends in moonbeams—

THEN

The awakening, with a savage rush, of the primitive fighting spirit that exists in every man.

"CONCEIT"

The Magnificent AMERICAN Production

Directed by Burton George
Story by Michael Phillips
Scenario by Edward Montagne

SECOND OF THE SUPREME SELZNICK SIX

Three scenes from "Conceit" showing the action and atmosphere to be found in the Northwoods episodes.

"Conceit" May Be Sold from Two Separate Angle

As atmosphere your ushers may be attired in Northwoods costumes, and the interior of the theatre can be trimmed up to match at a small expense.

As a prologue number French-Canadian songs sung by trapper-attired artists are suggested. The stage setting can be copied from one of the many wonderful backgrounds of the picture or may be of the camp-fire variety. The latter is so simple that even the smallest theatre can build some suitable effects.

If you choose to sell the picture from its theme angle, then quite opposite plans should be followed.

Your newspaper displays should be well worded and play for interest in the picture as a problem that is to be solved. You will make much of the title, discuss the amount of ego that mankind is alleged to possess, moralize on physical courage, present your hero as a man who tried to make his friends think he was the kind of a person he would liked to have been and announce that your picture has a message.

For your cut illustrations choose those scenes which have the urban locale and keep away from the melodrama to a considerable extent. Feature your players, giving Mrs. Hopper, Charles Gerard and Maurice Costello equal billing with the role of the hero, talk about the picture being a special, etc. Your selling talk should be epigrammatic and possibly a bit cynical.

For outside advertising use the stock paper available and plenty of stills in your lobby. A very effective cut-out may be made from the producer's 24-sheet.

As a presentation number one of the ensemble scenes of the picture presents suggestions. A replica of the lodge interior as a stage setting would be suitable. Then with your cast in the togs of the idle rich when rusticating, a program of music, vocal and instrumental, could be worked up. Hunting songs, snatches of opera, and other numbers that this sort of people might be expected to know are suitable. If you desire to get some scenic effects, a mountain drop in perspective showing through an open door is recommended.

Another scene which has possibilities is one in the first part of the picture, showing the hero and his friends returning from a hunt and assembling at a dinner in their riding togs. The table is in the shape of a horseshoe.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

Paramount Announces Jan. 15th Releases

FOR January 15 Paramount has scheduled for release Agnes Ayres in her first Paramount starring picture, "The Lane That Had No Turning" and Thomas Meighan in "A Prince There Was."

Chief in support of Miss Ayres are Mahlon Hamilton and Theodore Kosloff, who gives probably the greatest performance of his highly picturesque and successful picture career. Frank Campeau plays the villain and others are Wilton Taylor, Lillian Leighton and Charles West.

Thomas Meighan and Mildred Harris play the leading roles in "A Prince There Was." Other players of note in the cast are Nigel Barrie, Guy Oliver, Sylvia Ashton, Fred Huntly and Arthur Hull. Little Charlotte Jackson plays a charming child role.

Chicago Hails "Iron Trail"

Press Praises Rex Beach Picture; Does Fine Business at Roosevelt

REX BEACH'S "The Iron Trail," produced for United Artists by the Bennett Pictures Corporation, met with unanimously generous praise from the Chicago newspaper critics at its premier showing there at Ascher's Roosevelt Theatre, while the public showed its appreciation of this worthwhile feature by attending in capacity audiences throughout the entire engagement, declares a statement from the United Artists headquarters.

"'The Iron Trail' is all in all a 'he man' picture," Mae Tinee in the Chicago Tribune is quoted as saying. "Big projects are contemplated; fail; and are carried through against a background of splendid scenery. Sure enough you will like the scenery, the men, the fights and the scenes where a wily old doctor quarantines a whole town in order that certain persons may be prevented from leaving it."

"Rex Beach's stories certainly lend themselves exceptionally well to picturization," said Genevieve Harris, in the Chicago Evening Post, "and when they are given as careful and accurate production as 'The Iron Trail' received, the result is a gratifying success. There are many thrills throughout the picture. As a story of outdoor adventure it is one of the most exciting we have seen in a long time. It is not too melodramatic to be real; in fact, for a story of this type it is remarkably free from heroics and impossible stunts. 'The Iron Trail' will appeal equally to men and women. I believe the men will like the characters and appreciate the vivid, adventurous outdoor scenes."

"'The Iron Trail' is a vitally interesting drama," says Rob Reel in the Chicago American, "and its men and women are very real and very earnest. Its settings are gorgeously done and you ought not to miss it. 'The Iron Trail' is a man's story of a man's world, for men and women."

In the Chicago Daily News Carl Sandburg had this to say: "As an art production it is as good as one of Rex Beach's best-selling novels."

First National to Release "The Rosary"

SPECULATION regarding releasing plans for "The Rosary," a spectacular production recently completed by Selig-Rork, was set at rest this week when definite announcement was made it would be distributed as a special by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. The picture is based on an original story by Bernard McConville, inspired by the theme of the play by Edward E. Rose. Jerome Storm directed it.

Lewis S. Stone heads the cast, in which are included Jane Novak, Wallace Beery, Robert Gordon, Eugenie Besserer, Dore Davidson, Pomeroy Cannon, Bert Woodruff, Mildred June and Harold Goodwin.

Cullen Landis Featured in "Watch Your Step"

Goldwyn's young leading man, Cullen Landis, is given the best role that has as yet fallen to his lot in "Watch Your Step" the picture of small town life written directly for the screen—and for Landis—by Julien Josephson, announces Goldwyn. The picture was formerly called "The City Feller," but the new title was chosen as more fitting as well as more attractive.

William Beaudine directed "Watch Your Step" and has brought out excellently the author's truthful record of small town characters and happenings. Youthful Patsy Ruth Miller plays opposite Landis, while others in the cast are John Cossar, Bert Woodruff, Raymond Cannon, Henry Rattenbury, L. H. King, Cordelia Callahan, Albert Lee and George Pearce.

Loew's Houses Playing "The Straphanger"

Loew's New York theatres are playing Lee Moran's first Century Comedy release "The Straphanger," among them being The American, the Metropolitan, the 42nd St., the Alpine, the Seventh Avenue and the Victoria, while a number of others on the circuit are showing it from one to four days.

New Assd. Exhibitor Release

"Handle With Care" by Brother of Richard Harding Davis Due Jan. 22

THE Al. and Ray Rockett production, "Handle With Care," which is released as an Associated Exhibitors feature on January 22, is from the pen of Charles Belmont Davis, a brother of Richard Harding Davis. In its original story form it was entitled "The Men Who Would Die For Her," and described in a delightful vein the experiences of a young wife who relies upon the ardor of her former suitors to serve her in finding the happiness which she seeks by attempting to leave her husband. In its development the action of her devoted husband disproves the theory of rough treatment and shows that a woman's love reacts rather to delicate handling.

The screen version follows this idea closely, and in an amusing and lightly dramatic manner is said to provide a screen offering which is unusually appealing because of its human qualities and the usage of screen business which is absolutely true to life.

The feature was directed by Philip Rosen, and its cast is both large and well known. Grace Darmond has the leading role of the young wife, while Patsy Ruth Miller, a charming ingenue, is a delightful mischief maker.

The men whom Grave Darmond chooses to help her out of her matrimonial difficulty include Harry Meyers, Jimmy Morrison, William Courtleigh, William Austin and Landers Stevens. Every member of the cast has done exceptional work and holds much favor among the fans.

Associated Exhibitors say that the campaign book on "Handle With Care" contains, in particular, a very exceptional selection of cuts and mats for newspaper use and that they are laying much emphasis upon this method of exploiting the production.

Allied Ball Success Due Largely to Yates

A large share of the credit for the huge success of the Allied Laboratories ball, which was held on New Year's Eve in New York City was due to the untiring efforts and energy of H. J. Yates, general manager of the Republic Laboratories and vice-president of the Allied Laboratories Association.

The ball was a success from every angle and it is expected to become an event which will be looked forward to every year by the trade in New York City.

New Shipping Schedule for Selznick News

In order to expedite deliveries of Selznick News prints to the various points throughout the country, a new mailing schedule has been worked out which will result in the Selznick News reaching the chief cities from twelve to twenty-four hours earlier than by the former schedule.

All shipments will be made systematically from the New York City central post office on release days in line with a prepared chart that is calculated to do away with delays and bring Selznick News into the hands of exhibitors at the earliest possible moment.

Arliss Makes Personal Appearance in Phila.

Mr. and Mrs. George Arliss appeared in person on the stage in the new Aldine Theatre, Philadelphia, shortly before 1 A. M., January 2, in connection with the first showing in the Quaker City of the screen version of "Disraeli." Mr. Arliss set a new high mark in the matter of "personal appearances," and in a brief and humorous address further endeared himself to the more than 2,000 persons crowded into the edifice.

Sunday pictures in Philadelphia are forbidden. The next best thing for Philadelphians celebrating the arrival of the New Year was for theatre owners to throw open their doors at midnight last Sunday night, and this the Aldine management, Messrs. Fred D. and Maurice F. Felt did, with justifiable success. They invited Mr. and Mrs. Arliss to attend the midnight showing of "Disraeli."

Hodkinson Plans Drive for Lincoln Week

PLANS were perfected during the past week by Sales-Manager Andrew W. Smith, Jr., of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for one of the most extensive sales drives yet launched by the Hodkinson Corporation in the interests of the Dial Film Company's production, "The Light in the Clearing" for the week of Lincoln's birthday,

The purpose of the drive is to keep every print on "The Light in the Clearing" working every day during the week of February 12th, and already, it is said, sufficient bookings are listed to more than meet this object.

In support of the drive the Hodkinson Home Office has instituted a special service campaign for Lincoln Week, and special one-sheets, which are now being prepared, will be given free to every exhibitor who shows the picture between the days of February 12th and 18th.

Wm. Alexander Back from European Trip

Back last Sunday with added exploitation material for the Sir A. Conan Doyle Sherlock Holmes productions that the Alexander firm is to release, commencing February 1st, Mr. Alexander is now alrcady on his first leg of a cross country selling tour that will take him as far as the West Coast, the Canadian border and the main Texas cities.

Already the police officials in the country's biggest cities are searching their archives for records of the most notable detective achievements in their respective jurisdictions during the past year. The search is in response to a questionair dispatched broadcast last week by the Alexander firm offering a handsome volumed and specially author-autographed copy of the "Sherlock Holmes Adventures" to the secret agent of each of the big bailiwicks who figured personally in the district's most notable crime solution of 1921-'22.

First Nat'l to Revive Chaplin Successes

THE first comedies made by Charles Chaplin for First National are to be revived, it became known this week. The comedian made four two-reelers before embarking upon the ambitious undertaking which resulted in "The Kid," and there has been such a perennial demand for the short comedies that it was decided to reissue them, with new prints and advertising accessories.

The order of release will be as follows: Feb. 6, "A Dog's Life"; Mar. 6, "Sunnyside"; Apr. 3, "Shoulder Arms"; and May 1, "A Day's Pleasure."

Vitagraph Special to Open

"Flower of the North" Booked for Broadway Premiere on January 14

"FLOWER of the North," the Vitagraph special adapted from the novel by James Oliver Curwood, will open at the new Cameo theatre, 42nd Street and Broadway, New York, on Saturday, January 14th. The strong story of the Canadian Northwest, featuring Henry B. Walthall and Pauline Starke, is reported by Vitagraph to be in great demand and is said to have been extensively booked throughout the United States and Canada, although its general release will not come until after the engagement at the Cameo.

"Flower of the North" received general commendation by the reviewers when it was shown privately at Vitagraph's executive offices, 469 Fifth Avenue, and the author himself, after viewing the picture, took occasion to telegraph Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, his delight that the screen version of his novel had been so well done.

"As the author of the novel 'Flower of the North,' I cannot fully express my appreciation of your picturization of the book," telegraphed Mr. Curwood. "It is one of my favorite books of the big north, and I am delighted with the masterly way that Director David Smith has put it on the screen; not only has he kept my story in every detail, but he has added to it a craftsmanship that makes it one of the best pictures I have ever seen.

"I am accused of being an ultra-severe critic of the picturization of my own stories, but in this instance, I cannot find words which can too fully express my satisfaction of the splendid piece of work you have turned out with 'Flower of the North.' Pauline Starke is exquisite. Henry Walthall has done his best acting. The entire cast fits in like a cross section of the Northland itself. The real Jeanne D'Arcambal and I tender you our thanks."

"Flower of the North" was directed by David Smith, who directed another of the Curwood stories, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" for Vitagraph and has since had to his credit splendid special productions.

"Jutland" Pleases Middies

Educational's Famous Battle Film Gets Ovation at Annapolis Academy

THE special showing of "The Battle of Jutland," given by Educational at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, the evening of January 7 "went over with a bang." With a midshipman's "hop" going on at the same time and a local theatre near the post running two very popular pictures, students, officers and their guests turned out in such numbers to see "The Battle of Jutland" that the Academy auditorium, which seats 1100, was jammed to overflowing. With 400 people standing in the rear of the main floor and balcony and with midshipmen sitting on the floor in the aisles, there were still more than one hundred who were unable to get into the hall at all.

Captain Kurtz, Commandant of Midshipmen at the Academy, declared the audience was the largest in his recollection at the Academy, in spite of the two big rival attractions. An official invitation to the showing had been extended to "all hands," and the turnout was remarkable.

A complete program of short subjects was given for the entertainment of the middies and their guests. After an overture, they saw a Robert C. Bruce Scenic, "Strolling Minstrels"; Kinograms, Educational's news reel, and "The White Mouse," a Selig-Rork Photoplay in two reels, before the presentation of the three reel super-special "The Battle of Jutland." The program was closed with "A Barnyard Cavalier," a new Christie Comedy.

Admiral Wilson, superintendent of the Academy, and other officials, were highly pleased. All comments by the officers were decidedly favorable. A special request has been made for an exhaustive report by Admiral Wilson for the Naval War College at Newport.

The same program was repeated at the Marine Barracks in Washington on the evening of January 9. Copies of the program, with an invitation to attend the showing, were sent to all naval officers on duty in Washington, to the Army War College and to high ranking army officers. About 300 of the enlisted personnel at the barracks attended this showing, with officers and men on duty at the Navy Yard.

Stanton to Direct for British Company

Recent reports that Richard Stanton had cabled his acceptance of an offer to direct and supervise productions for an important foreign concern are verified. Mr. Stanton has sailed on the Nieu Amsterdam, leaving New York on January 4, under contract with the British International Film Corporation, Ltd. This is an organization of comparativeley recent advent in the film world, largely controlled by English and Scotch capital, and is said to have for its executive heads several of the best known motion picture men in the United Kingdom.

A few days before sailing Mr. Stanton said that the policy of the company was to make pictures for distribution in the United States as well as abroad. His arrangement calls for distribution of "Richard Stanton Productions"—special features, for which three stories by celebrated authors already have been decided on.

Paramount So. American Distribution Arranged

THE signing of important contracts for the distribution of Paramount Pictures in six South American countries was announced this week by E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Effective April 1st, Paramount pictures will be distributed in Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru and Bolivia by Max Glucksman, one of the best known of the South American leaders in the film industry.

Through this new contract increased facilities are obtained for the distribution of Paramount pictures in the southern republics, as Max Glucksman has been an important distributor in these countries for a number of years. A New York office is maintained at 220 W. Forty-second street, with Jacob Glucksman, a brother, in charge.

Photodrama Filmed in South Sea Islands

A photodrama filmed in the South Sea Islands is shortly to be shown in New York. The production, which is titled "The Lagoon of Desire," is the initial effort of the Far East Productions Company. The picture was directed by Arthur Rosson. Hundreds of natives are said to appear in certain scenes. The principal players are Ruth Renick, Edward Hearn, Walt Whitman, and Frederick Stanton.

Shirley Mason in Story of Lower East Side

Playgoers Makes Progress in 1921

In announcing the continuation of its policy to release features on the basis of thirty-six a year, Playgoers Pictures have issued a statement calling attention to progress made during 1921, which shows that over 500 theatres have contracted for their product on that basis.

A complete list is not included in this statement, but it is evident that exhibitors in every section of the country have taken up the Playgoers' proposition and are showing their features at regular intervals. The system was inaugurated last September and has shown consistent progress.

The Playgoers product at present is: The J. P. McGowan features, "Discontented Wives," "The Ruse of the Rattler" and "Reckless Chances," the latter being scheduled for January 15th; also "Tropical Love," the big production made in Porto Rico by Ralph Ince, with Reginald Denny, Ruth Clifford and Fred Turner "Anne of Little Smoky,;" the Wistaria production, with Winifred Westover (now Mrs. William S. Hart), Joe King, Dolores Casinelli and Frank Sheridan.

Artistic Brochure Is Published by R-C

We have before us a copy of the handsome brochure just issued by the R-C Pictures Corporation, in which are described the organization's personnel and the company's plans for the first quarter of the new year.

From the viewpoint of content, the booklet is highly illuminating. In addition to giving accounts of the company's executives and their policies, there are also included photographs of R-C's leading stars and directors and members of the sales staff. Attractive views of the R-C studio in Hollywood, Cal., are also shown. Three double-truck ad displays, as prepared for leading fan publications, on R-C's early 1922 releases are also presented in the booklet.

From the typographical angle, the R-C brochure is a work of art. Printed on heavy, coated stock, with an abundance of white space, the text is accorded a high degree of legibility. The cuts are noteworthy for their detail and artistic finish.

Inserted in the booklet is a folded broadside dealing with the coming R-C Week, February 5th to 11th. The special productions available for this week are described and half-tone views given of scenes from these pictures.

Elaborate Press Book for "Theodora"

A campaign book of most elaborate proportions has been prepared by the Goldwyn home-office for its production, "Theodora." Special effort has been made to compile material in the shape of press stories, attractive cuts, etc., that will be of practical service to the exhibitor in selling the picture to his patrons. In addition to the serviceableness of the book, the most prominent feature of the compilation is the wide variety of text and cut material offered.

Paramount's Tenth Anniversary

PARAMOUNT is going to celebrate its birthday. Ten years ago Adolph Zukor founded the Famous Players Film Company, the parent company of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation known throughout the world wherever pictures are shown as Paramount.

The birthday celebration will start Sunday, March 5, and will be of two weeks' duration. Following the lines of the annual Paramount Week, it is planned by General Manager S. R. Kent and his assistants in the Department of Distribution to book theatres throughout the country solid with Paramount pictures.

Paramount District and Branch managers have been apprised of the general plan and are already enthusiastically at work mapping out the details to be followed in their respective territories. Spurred on to greater endeavor instead of being daunted by the success of the last Paramount Week, when all records for the annual event, both as to gross business and the number of theatres participating, were broken, the entire sales organization is determined to at least appropriate twice that business during the two weeks of the anniversary.

For March 5, the opening of the anniversary, Paramount announces day and date release of some of its biggest productions. These include Cecil B. DeMille's "Fool's Paradise," Gloria Swanson in "Her Husband's Trademark," Wallace Reid in "The World's Champion," and "The Dragon's Claw," the first of the spectacular UFA series, "The Mistress of the World." George Fitzmaurice's production, "Forever," adapted from "Peter Ibbetson," will also be available at that time. Hundreds of extra prints of these productions are being prepared to satisfy the demand for simultaneous showing.

Double-truck advertising announcing the anniversary event will be used in national publications and through the two weeks advertising space in more than six hundred daily newspapers will be utilized as part of the big campaign now being prepared by the Publicity and Advertising department.

It was early in 1912 that Adolph Zukor set out boldly to reorganize the business of producing motion pictures. He did more than that—he revolutionized it. He was a successful exhibitor at the time—as successful as an exhibitor could be, for the motion picture was virtually dying if its own mediocrity. Authors and actors viewed it with scorn. Intelligent, discriminating people wearying of it as a mere novelty were turning their backs upon it. Exhibitors apparently were at the mercy of the film manufacturers who claimed a patent monopoly and refused to raise the standard of their productions.

Organizing his company, Adolph Zukor plunged with vim into the task of making a reality of what most people looked upon as the dream of a visionary. The first picture to be released was "Queen Elizabeth," with no less a celebrity than Sarah Bernhardt in the title role. It was not the first five-reel production ever made, but it was the first production to be released by any company under a fixed policy of making and distributing pictures of that approximate length and quality as a standard. Its release marked the birth of the modern film play—the renaissance of the film industry.

Other features of similar length and starring such people as James K. Hackett, Mrs. Fiske, Mary Pickford, James O'Neil and Lily Langtry followed. Their appearance attracted other producers with similar ideals into the field. Among them was Jesse L. Lasky, who interested Cecil B. DeMille, at that time a successful young stage producer of the Belasco school, and others in the organization of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature play Company. Having scraped together a small amount of capital they purchased the film rights to Edwin Milton Royle's play, "The Squaw Man." So far as is known, this is the first instance on record of the purchase of rights to a play or story for the screen.

Going to California, Mr. Lasky and his associates made "The Squaw Man," with Dustin Farnum in the stellar role. The Lasky studio, Paramount's huge West Coast production center of today, was built around the crude little building where "The Squaw Man" was filmed.

To Hollywood at about that time went also other producing organizations, amoug them the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and Bosworth, Inc. In July, 1916, the Famous Players Film Company and the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company were combined under the name of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The Paramount Pictures Corporation had been formed for the distribution of the product of the Lasky and Bosworth companies. On January 1, 1917, the Paramount organization was taken over by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Bosworth, Inc., and Pallas Pictures, the Morosco output, having previously been acquired. Later the Artcraft Pictures Corporation was amalgamated with Famous Players-Lasky, as still more recently was the Realart Pictures Corporation.

With the absorption of the Paramount company and the turning of the product of the combined companies for release through the exchanges of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the former organization diseappered as a separate entity, but the name was wisely retained as the trade name for all the features released by the present corporation. Today, Paramount pictures made in the huge studios of the company in New York, Los Angeles and London, are distributed through thirty branch offices in the United States, six in Canada, nine in Great Britain, two in France, one in Denmark, one in Belgium, five in Australia, one in New Zealand, one in Mexico, two in Brazil, and on contract to every other country in the civilized world.

First Nat'l Films Under Way

WORD from the First National headquarters indicate that the various producing units affiliated with that organization are already well started on their 1922 production schedule. News of various subjects just completed accompany the announcements of productions already begun.

At the Mack Sennett studios work is now well under way on "Suzanna," an original story by Mack Sennett, which has been chosen as the next starring vehicle for Mabel Normand. A notable cast has been engaged to support the little star. "Suzanna" is being directed by F. Richard Jones, who also directed Miss Normand in her previous Sennett successes, "Mickey" and "Molly O."

Mabel Normand is ideally cast as "Suzanna," a tomboy girl. Winnifred Bryson has the role of Chiquita. Carl Stockdale, who did such admirable work in "Molly O," is cast as Ruiz, Suzanna's foster-father. Eric Hayne as Don Diego, assumes the obligation of bringing up as his daughter, Chiquita.

George Nichols, who played the part of Miss Norman's father in "Molly O" is again seen in "Suzanna" in the character of Don Fernando, a wealth Spanish rancher, with Evelyn Sherman as his wife. Don Fernando has a son, Ramon, played by Walter McGrail, who is in love with Suzanna despite his parents' disapproval of the match.

Tomaso, played by George Cooper, is another suitor for the hand of Suzanna, while Leon Barry, as Pancho, a shiftless toreador, courts Chiquita. Minnie Ha Ha, a Cheyenne squaw, known for her Indian portrayals, is also a member of the cast.

With the signing this week of Doris Pawn and Donald MacDonald for important roles in "One Clear Call," John M. Stahl completed the cast for his latest independent unit production for Louis B. Mayer. Henry B. Walthall is also in the cast. The making of the picture has been under way now for nearly five weeks, but many of the big scenes, the humorous episodes and the heart throbs are still to be filmed.

The cast is the greatest all-star aggregation ever assembled at the Mayer studio for one picture. Headed by Henry B. Walthall, Claire Windsor, Irene Rich and Milton Sills, the list includes: Joseph J. Dowling, who played "The Miracle Man;" Doris Pawn, Donald MacDonald, Shannon Day, Edithe Yorke, Nick Cogley, Fred Kelsey, William Marion, Albert MacQuarrie, Annette De Foe, Stanley Goethals and Richard Belfield.

Anita Stewart's new picture, "Rose o' the Sea," went into production this week at the Louis B. Mayer studio with Fred Niblo directing. This will be Mr. Niblo's second picture with Miss Stewart; the first being "The Woman He Married," which Mr. Niblo directed shortly after completing "The Three Musketeers."

Constance Talmadge will, within a week, complete the filming of her

Huge Covered Stage Is Added to Lasky Studio

PROOF that production activity at the Lasky studio is to be pushed forward on an even greater scale in the near future is offered by the news of the completion of the mammoth glass-covered stage—the largest structure of its kind in the motion picture world.

This stage, which will be known as No. 4, measures one hundred and twenty-five feet in width and two hundred and fifty feet in length. It has a clearance height of thirty feet and rises to a maximum of forty-two feet at the apex of roof.

The stage was appropriately dedicated by a successful employees' dance held on the eve of its entrance into practical service. Credit for the construction work on the new structure goes to Victor H. Clarke, under whose personal supervision it was erected; Charles F. Eyton, general manager of Famous Players-Lasky West Coast activities, and James Scutter, Lasky studio superintendent.

Prologue Staged for "Little Minister"

Photographs of stage settings and prologues sent in to Vitagraph's executive office by branch managers and by exhibitors who have played Vitagraph's new production, "The Little Minister," indicate a surprising intimacy with the art of James M. Barrie.

The hundred-odd theatres which played this production Christmas week in and around New York city did not, as a rule, use any prologues or stage settings in connection with the showing, but the public screenings of the past week have been coupled largely with elaborate stagings of scenes reflective of the Scotch atmosphere of the place, declares a statement from Vitagraph's home-office.

No Halt in Work on Mermaid Comedies

While a number of companies on the West Coast were forced to suspend production work temporarily during the recent heavy rains, work on the Mermaid Comedies being made for Educational went right ahead. The schedule had been so arranged that all exteriors for the latest Lloyd Hamilton picture and Jack White production in this series were obtained before the rain began. During the deluge the companies worked at top-notch speed filming interiors.

Havana Newspapers Give Abundant Space to Visit of Metro's Star

Mae Murray in a pose from "Peacock Alley," which will be distributed by Metro

THE Havana newspapers recording the arrival of Mae Murray in Cuba for the Tiffany Production of "Fascination," to be presented by Robert Z. Leonard and released by Metro, have just reached the New York office of Metro Pictures. Column after column, and, in some cases, entire pages were devoted to descriptions of the ovation she received, according to word from the Metro headquarters. Ramon Becali, editor-in-chief of La Noche, who took advantage of the occasion to interview her himself, devoting five columns to the story, is quoted as saying that no screen star had ever stirred the enthusiasm of Havana to such a tremendous extent, but that the enthusiasm was easily understood, "as Miss Murray was easily the favorite star among the Cubans."

Preliminary announcements had stirred the picture fans' curiosity and thousands of people swarmed to the harbor to await the arrival of the seaplane by which Miss Murray arrived with her husband-director Robert Z. Leonard, flying from Key West, Florida. Huge floral pieces spelled out the word, "Bienvenida!"—Welcome. Crowds lined the streets as the star motored to her hotel, the Sevilla. Banquets of welcome followed, all of which were described in detail by the Havana writers, with special compliments for the quality of champagne that was served. The climax was reached with a special showing of "Peacock Alley," the first of the series of pictures that Miss Murray is making for Metro. Everybody who belongs in Cuba's "Who's Who" was there. Miss Murray and Mr. Leonard made speeches from their box. The reviewers were highly favorable in their comments on the picture.

"Hail the Woman" in 'Frisco

Ince Production Is Acclaimed by Press During Showing at Tivoli

"HAIL THE WOMAN," Thomas H. Ince's masterpiece, which is being released under the banner of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., opened at the Tivoli Opera House in San Francisco on Christmas Day, and won unprecedented and unanimous praise from the critics of all the newspapers in the Golden Gate City.

Among the comments were the following:

The Bulletin: "In 'Hail the Woman,' Thomas H. Ince has given the screen a picture which will stand alone for a long time. This play opened yesterday at the Tivoli theatre, and notwithstanding that it comes so late in the year, it will go down as one of the big productions of 1921, and there is nothing in sight at the present time for the coming year which will to any extent equal it."

The Daily News: "'Hail the Woman' is intensely human, always natural and completely interesting. There is a gulp in your throat many times as the film unrolls and a clutch at your heart.

"The story is magnificently told, splendidly acted and finely photographed. It strikes a new note of naturalness and vigor in pictures and stands out as an example for other directors to follow."

The Chronicle: "Once in a long while, although perhaps not more infrequently than in other lines of artistic endeavor, a motion picture is produced that can be given unqualified endorsement as a genuine achievement of real merit, fundamentally sound, significant and artistically satisfactory in every detail. Such a picture is Thomas H. Ince's 'Hail the Woman,' now at the Tivoli."

The Call: "Whether or not 'Hail the Woman' sets a new standard in motion picture production may be a question for dispute. But there certainly will be no question about its attaining a standard that closely approached perfection in every phase of movie making, story, directional, settings, acting, titling and photography.

"'Hail the Woman' is a plain story of plain American people. It is told in homely language that any one can understand and deals with incidents that could easily come into the lives of the ordinary family."

R-C Posters Ready

Posters are being distributed to R-C Pictures exchanges on two productions for early release. They are "The Call of Home" directed by Gasnier; and "Why Men Forget," from the novel "Demos," by George Gissing.

Pathe's "White Eagle" in Novelized Form

"White Eagle," Ruth Roland's latest serial, released by Pathe on January 1, goes to exhibitors, accompanied by special exploitation prepared with unusual thoroughness. This is a particularly effective "White Eagle" novel, written by Herbert Crooker from Val Cleveland's scenario and furnished to newspapers in matrix form. Each of the fifteen episodes of the serial is made up for a separate matrix. These occupy on an average about the space of 2,000 words of type and make complete installments, several being accompanied by special matrix illustrations, enabling their use when space permits.

Printed sheets of the complete novelization are supplied to exhibitors for examination by their local editors, who, upon application, are furnished with the matrix installments. These sheets also are mailed direct to the many newspapers throughout the United States and Canada which have published Pathe serial novelizations heretofore.

"Boy-Crazy," with Doris May, Finished

William A. Seiter, directing Doris May, has taken the final scenes in "Boy-Crazy," Hunt Stromberg's third production with this star for R-C Pictures. The photoplay is from an original story by Beatrice Van. Harry Myers has the leading male role.

starring vehicle, "The Divorcee," an original story by Edgar Selwyn under the direction of Sidney Franklin, at the United Studios. Supporting Miss Talmadge are Harrison Ford and Kenneth Harlan. The company has been on location to Big Bear Valley as well as Catalina Island.

John Emerson, one of the most noted of directors and photoplaywrights, has become a producer also. His first picture, "Red Hot Romance," has been completed and is to be released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. It was written by Mr. Emerson and his talented young wife, Anita Loos, and their combined talents are responsible for one of the most entertaining of pictures within recent years. Basil Sydney, May Collins and Edward Connelly head the cast.

Buster Keaton has completed "Cops," his latest two-reel mirthquake for Joseph M. Schenck, which is to be released through Associated First National. The picture is now being cut and titled and will be ready for preview in New York City within a fortnight.

The casting of Richard Walton Tully's "The Masquerader," has commenced. Guy Bates Post plays the star role. Kenneth Gibson, son of Ida McGlone Gibson, famous newspaper woman, has the role of Bobby Blessington, the secretary. Brook, the valet, will be played by E. M. Kimball, veteran character man.

Paramount to Speed Production to the Limit

THE signing of Rudolph Valentino under a three-year contract to star in Paramount pictures and the purchase of what is declared to be the greatest list of dramatic properties ever acquired for motion picture production were announced this week by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, just before he left for California.

"I have stated repeatedly since last summer," said Mr. Lasky, "that the only salvation for this industry during the present widespread industrial condition lay in the production of pictures bigger than any pictures ever made before.

"I still hold to this belief, and our production department has mapped out a program for a type of pictures which I firmly believe will give the greatest support to exhibitors at this time when widespread industrial apathy is making itself felt at the box-office. I appreciate thoroughly that one of the things most needed at the present time in all branches of the industry is the strictest, most unremitting economy, and we are prepared to push our economies to the limit. In the production of our pictures the same sharp campaign against extravagance and inflated costs which has been in force in our studios will be continued in an even more intensified manner, and in announcing this program of production, big though it is, we shall not allow even the slightest excess of cost to increase the expense of our pictures. At the same time I want to make it plain, that so long as I personally have anything to do with the production of motion pictures, quality shall never be sacrificed.

"Economy must and shall be practised, but, as I said before, it is my belief—and experience this season has justified it—that only the biggest and best pictures it is possible for us to make can bring us through this period of acute stress.

"To show that we had the courage of our convictions we made for release this season a series of productions which have been the pride of the entire Paramount organization. Exhibitors who had been worrying about the slump in business found that we were justified in producing and they were justified in showing such pictures as Cecil B. DeMille's 'Fool's Paradise,' George Fitzmaurice's 'Forever,' the picture of 'Peter Ibbetson' with Elsie Ferguson and Wallace Reid in the leading roles; Penrhyn Stanlaw's 'The Little Minister,' starring Betty Compson; Wallace Reid in 'The World's Champion,' Gloria Swanson in 'Her Husband's Trademark,' Cecil B. DeMille's 'Saturday Night,' Penrhyn Stanlaws' picture, 'The Law and the Woman,' starring Betty Compson; Thomas Meighan's greatest picture, 'If You Believe It It's So'; Elinor Glyn's story, 'Beyond the Rocks,' starring Gloria Swanson, with Rudolph Valentino supporting her; George Melford's 'The Sheik,' with Rudolph Valentino and Agnes Ayres; Cecil B. DeMille's 'The Affairs of Anatol' and other great pictures which have stood out in a season of big pictures.

"These pictures I have listed are among the biggest successes of the season. But we are not content to rest on this record. With the needs of the industry in mind, Paramount intends to push ahead with a program of pictures which will give the greatest possible support to exhibitors in their present great need.

"For instance, the signing of Rudolph Valentino as a Paramount star for three years insures to exhibitors who book Paramount pictures the drawing power of one of the strongest box-office personalities in the profession today. Valentino's first appearance under his new contract will be as the toreador in Blasco Ibanez's stirring novel and play, 'Blood and Sand.' Many critics have said that in writing 'Blood and Sand' Ibanez surpassed his work in 'The Four Horsemen.' It is a colorful story of Spanish life, centering around Spain's most picturesque institution—the bullfight. The novel was dramatized and presented this season at the Empire theatre, in New York, with Otis Skinner in the leading role.

"To insure the proper translation to the screen of Ibanez's atmosphere, we have engaged June Mathis, whose adaptation of 'The Four Horsemen' was one of the finest pieces of screen writing I have ever seen. Miss Mathis is now working on the script, and from the ideas she has expressed to me for the story, 'Blood and Sand' should prove a screen classic.

"In the production of 'Blood and Sand' we plan to give Mr. Valentino one of the greatest supporting casts ever assembled. Bebe Daniels, who I believe is ideally suited for the role, will probably be seen as the Spanish vamp and May McAvoy, whose work in 'Sentimental Tommy' was the outstanding artistic achievement of last season, will be seen as the wife,

"George Melford, who produced 'The Sheik' has just returned to California to produce 'The Cat That Walked Alone,' a story of strong heart appeal, in which Dorothy Dalton ad Milton Sills will have the leading roles. Miss Dalton's work in 'Fool's Paradise' has immeasurably increased her popularity, and in 'The Cat That Walked Alone' she has a role fully as dramatic and picturesque as that which she played in 'Fool's Paradise.'

"Another big picture which will be put into production immediately is an adaptation of 'If Winter Comes,' A. S. M. Hutchinson's tremendously popular book, of which nearly half a million copies already have been sold. 'If Winter Comes' will be produced by John S. Robertson, whose production of 'Footlights' and 'Sentimental Tommy' stamped him as a director who can combine artistry with box-office power. The picture will be produced in England in the actual locale used by Hutchinson. James Kirkwood, whose performance in 'The Great Impersonation' was one of the finest pieces of acting this year, will play the leading role and will be supported by a cast of well-known American players.

"The policy of using several stars in one picture will be continued. This policy has been extremely successful in several productions, notably Thomas Meighan's 'If You Believe It, It's So,' which has, supporting Mr. Meighan, Pauline Starke, Theodore Roberts, Charles Ogle and Joseph Dowling; in 'Forever,' with Elsie Ferguson and Wallace Reid; 'Don't Tell Everything,' with Gloria Swanson, Wallace Reid and Elliott Dexter, and in 'The Affairs of Anatol.' Penrhyn Stanlaws' next production will have a cast of stars, headed by Betty Compson and Tom Moore. The picture is 'Over the Border,' an adaptation of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, 'She of the Triple Chevron.'

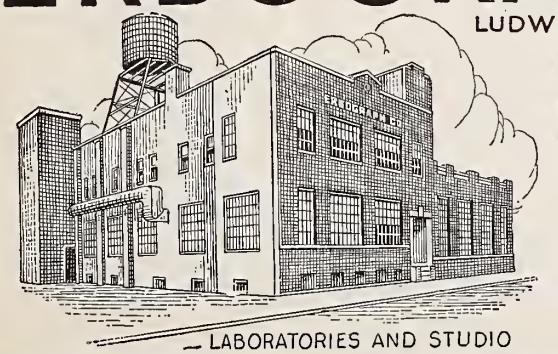
"Another picture with a group of stars in the cast will be 'A Stampede Madonna,' with Jack Holt and Bebe Daniels heading the cast. 'A Stampede Madonna' is an original story of the Klondike, written by Monte Katterjohn, whose picture, 'The Flame of the Yukon,' fixed his position as the leader of men who write about life in Alaska. I cannot think of anybody better fitted to play the leading roles of this picture than Jack Holt, typifying the heroism and virility of young American manhood, and Bebe Daniels, whose warmth of beauty and great artistic ability make her ideal for the leading femine part.

"William de Mille's new policy of making pictures from plays and stories of established box-office value is now being put into effect in 'Bought and Paid For,' which is nearing completion with Agnes Ayres and Jack Holt in the leading roles. On the completion of 'Bought and Paid For' Mr. de Mille will do 'Nice People,' Rachel Crothers' well-known comedy-drama in which Francine Larrimore has been appearing with such great success all this season on Broadway. 'Nice People' will be produced with a cast of well-known stars.

"On the completion of 'Bought and Paid For,' Agnes Ayres will again be starred. Her next picture will be 'The Ordeal,' an original story by W. Somerset Maugham, author of last year's most successful book, 'The Moon and Sixpence,' and this year's most successful play, 'The Circle.' In this picture Miss Ayres will be directed by William D. Taylor, who did 'The Furnace' and other big productions.

"On his return from Europe Cecil B. DeMille will produce 'Manslaughter,' the sensationally successful novel by Alice Duer Miller. This picture is now being scenarized by Jeanie MacPherson.

"George Fitzmaurice, who has just finished producing 'The Man From Home' in Italy, with a cast including James Kirkwood, Anna Q. Nilsson and Norman Kerry, will go to Egypt for the exterior scenes of his next picture, which is an original story by Ouida Bergere.



"Gloria Swanson is now nearing the completion of 'Beyond the Rocks,' the story which Elinor Glyn wrote for her. Rudolph Valentino plays the role of the passionate lover, and, as Mrs. Glyn has been working in the studio in close cooperation with the director, Sam Wood, and Miss Swanson, it is expected that 'Beyond the Rocks' will prove as highly successful as 'The Great Moment.' Following 'Beyond the Rocks' Miss Swanson will be starred in 'The Gilded Cage,' a novelette which appeared as a comedy with music this season under the title, 'The Love Dream.'

"As soon as I arrive in Los Angeles I expect to be able to announce several unusually big stories as vehicles for Wallace Reid and Thomas Meighan. Mr. Meighan's next picture will be 'Our Leading Citizen,' which George Ade wrote especially for him and on the scenario of which Mr. Ade collaborated."

Famous Playwright-Producer and Guy Bates Post to Film Big Hit

NINETEEN-TWENTY - TWO will witness the screen debut of two of the foremost figures in the "legitimate" field—Richard Walton Tully and Guy Bates Post. They will begin their motion picture activities by filming "The Masquerader," which was written and staged by Mr. Tully and in which Mr. Post played for years in all sections of the country, setting records for popularity and box office receipts which have been attained by few plays. "The Masquerader" will be released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Production has begun in the United studios in Los Angeles, and no effort is being spared to make the film version of the famous play one of the outstanding successes of the year. The picture is being directed by James Young, one of the leaders in his field. Wilfred Buckland, who is the art director, will be remembered as the first man in the industry to hold such a position. George Benoit, a veteran cinematographer, is at the camera.

Richard Walton Tully is conceded to be America's foremost playwright-producer. Every production with which he has been associated has registered a bull's-eye on the target of popular approval, at the same time setting a high standard of artistic achievement. No single producer on our stage has been as consistently successful. Commencing with "The Rose of the Rancho" written by him and staged in collaboration with David Belasco, his every play has enjoyed record-breaking runs on Broadway and throughout the country.

His second play was "The Bird of Paradise," originally written by Tully twelve years ago and still one of the biggest stage properties in the business. "Omar the Tentmaker," his third play, was another big money-maker. So were "The Flame," "The Masquerader"—which he is now filming in Los Angeles—and "Keep Her Smiling" which looked fair to establishing comedy records when it was closed by the untimely death of Sidney Drew. This year Tully was represented on the New York stage by "The Right to Strike."

In Guy Bates Post, the star of this film, the screen is gaining the most distinguished actor on the American stage today. His performance in the leading roles of "The Masquerader" for over seven consecutive years, added to his achievements in "Omar the Tentmaker," "The Bird of Paradise," "The Nigger," "The Challenge" and a number of Clyde Fitch's plays, places him in the foremost ranks of his profession.

Gunning Sales Drive Is Proving Big Success

WITH the Wid Gunning Month sales - drive half over, reports received at the Gunning home offices are daily piling up evidence that the exchanges are beating all their past performances for the amount of business brought in during a single month. Important first-run bookings on the big Gunning specials are being made all over the country, according to word from the Gunning headquarters, and many well-known exhibitors who had booked up solid for several months in advance, rearranged their schedule to make a place for "What Do Men Want?" "Our Mutual Friend," or other Gunning releases.

One of the features of the booking is the fact that a number of exhibitors after showing one Gunning picture to crowded houses have booked all the other releases, announces a statement from the Gunning headquarters.

"Call of Home" R-C Release

Big Flood Scenes in New Gasnier Picture to Be Released Shortly

EXHIBITORS throughout the country who have been clamoring for unusual productions with plenty of action and at least one big thrill that lends itself to exploitation are promised that R-C Pictures' latest Gasnier special "The Call of Home" will be up to specifications in every detail, according to Charles R. Rogers, general manager of distribution for that organization.

"The Call of Home," which is the picturized version of George Agnew Chamberlain's novel "Home" has been produced with one thing uppermost, says Mr. Rogers, and that is its box-office appeal. Besides unfolding a story of poignant dramatic interest that carries the beholder from the drowsy hills of New England, where the tale begins, to the distant wastelands of South America, "The Call of Home" depicts a spectacular flood scene. The scenes were filmed in the Colorado river region when that stream was swollen from storms and over ran its banks, causing widespread destruction. This enabled Mr. Gasnier to film scenes that are notable for their realism, according to Mr. Rogers.

"'The Call of Home' is unlike anything Mr. Gasnier has done for us in recent months," declared Mr. Rogers. "Heretofore he has specialized in dramatic subjects at which he is admittedly one of the most skilful directors in the industry. This time he has laid great stress on his big, spectacular scenes although not omitting a fine treatment of the dramatic elements in the love-story which forms the basis of the production.

"'The Call of Home' has been designed for one purpose. It has been made to have direct box-office appeal. It is a production the smart exhibitor can exploit very handily because of its big flood scenes that are actually the last word in screen direction.

"In addition to the flood scenes is still another spectacular episode in which Ramsey Wallace, as the wandering husband, is catapulted from a canoe in which he is paddling, and thrown headlong into the water as the craft goes over a cataract. This is all fine show stuff, and should enable all exhibitors to make a tidy clean-up."

A Revolutionary Step

The following one reel and split reel comedies and dramas are now being offered in the open market for showing in theatres, schools, churches, community centres and homes in the United States, Canada, and every other country in the world.

Fox's Eighteenth Anniversary: : : : :

EIGHTEEN years of Motion Picture Progress.

To celebrate his eighteen years of motion picture industry, William Fox has set aside the seven days from January 29 to February 4, inclusive, as "Fox Anniversary Week"—for which hundreds of exhibitors throughout the country have booked Fox pictures solid.

The following dates tell the story of Mr. Fox in the picture business:

1904 to 1913—Greater New York Film Rental Company.

1913 to 1915—Box Office Attraction Company.

1915 to 1922—Fox Film Corporation.

"Fox Anniversary Week" will, in a great measure, be a tribute to a man who not only is a pioneer of the silent drama, but who has fought for its progress—who has helped immeasurably to make it the best entertainment for the peoples throughout the world.

Mr. Fox got his ideas of what the people wanted from his early experience as a theatre patron and subsequently as the owner of several playhouses in New York City. He had keen visions far into the future, and saw the possibilities in the motion picture industry. He proceeded, along lines entirely original and independent of all trusts and combinations, to honestly achieve his goal—to secure a fair return on his great investments; to entertain and enlighten the people; and, best of all, to attain the place he now enjoys throughout the wworld.

That is the Fox personal triumph! Along with it has been the extraordinary success of the entire Fox Film Corporation, encircling, as it does, the globe; reaching out to the most remote units of civilization with the character of motion picture which appeals to every tongue and enlightens and entertains the universe.

There is no abatement in the "Forward With Fox" ideas! Always on and on to greater endeavor! That has been the slogan from the humble beginning eighteen years ago. To do something nobody else had done and to do everything else better than anybody else has attempted! With this determination in mind, Mr. Fox defied the men and the combines which controlled the motion picture industry in the old days. He questioned their claim to the ownership of patents and rights that compelled abject submission to their rule.

At that time nearly every film exchange had been bought up or put out of business. The trust left Mr. Fox for the last. Flattering offers were made to buy him out. When he refused, the combines declined to give him any more film. But Mr. Fox was not to be subdued. Within a few months he had turned up so much evidence that the Department of Justice at Washington took steps which resulted in the trust methods being wiped out entirely. Mr. Fox then determined to go into the motion picture industry on a greater scale than ever before had been attempted. He knew what the public wanted. He had been the owner and manager of several theatres, including the old Academy of Music on East Fourteenth Street, New York City, where stock productions were presented at popular prices.

Mr. Fox organized the Box Office Attraction Company. He sent Winfield R. Sheehan, General Manager, to organize exchanges throughout the country. He dispatched J. Gordon Edwards, his stage manager at the Academy of Music, to Europe to learn how pictures were made there and to get the best ideas as to studio construction.

When everything was in readiness, a studio was rented in Fort Lee, N. J., and there the first Fox picture "Life's Shopwindow" was made. Picture followed picture, and in a short time Mr. Fox was issuing fifty-two pictures a year, or one a week. Those first pictures called forth all the energy, all the resourcefulness, all the daring that Mr. Fox and his small corps of assistants possessed. While other men believed in the slow, steady, careful methods of building, Mr. Fox, with a firm faith in his knowledge of what the public wanted, plunged into picture-making on a big scale, at times having many thousands of dollars invested in a host of productions awaiting release.

It was only a short time after he bagan picture-making that he signed a contract with Miss Annette Kellerman, the Australian swimmer, to star in a picture called "A Daughter of the Gods." The cast of this picture, with the stupendous advertising campaign put behind it, staggered motion-picturedom. And when this was released to the public Mr. Fox had another picture ready—"The Honor System."

"A Fool There Was," "Carmen," "Regeneration" were a few of the other pictures of those early days that stand out in the memory of producers and exhibitors. They were milestones on the way to modern pictures.

The growth of the Fox Company was so steady and so rapid that additional floors were taken over in the building at 130 West 46th Street for offices. British branch offices with headquarters in London were opened. Exchanges were organized in Canada, in Australia, in New Zealand, in South America and finally in France. And in addition, Fox representatives were traveling throughout the far east arranging with agents to handle the Fox product, which is as popular in Japan and China as it is in the United States.

During all this time, Mr. Fox never hesitated to give to the world motion picture public the best in pictures that money and brains could develop. He had William Farnum star in "A Tale of Two Cities," which, after four years, is still being called for by exhibitors for special runs. It is today, as it was then, a classic in motion pictures.

Among the Fox other pictures that have received world-wide praise from both exhibitor and public were "Cleopatra," "Les Miserables," "Salome," "If I Were King," "The Spy," "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," "Du Barry," "Checkers," "Evangeline," "Ali Baba," etc., etc.

Early in 1919, when Fox Film Corporation had grown so big that more rigid efficiency methods were necessary to keep supplyying the demands of the world for Fox Film, William Fox began the building of his present headquarters at Tenth Avenue and Fifty-fifth Street. When the offices were in 46th Street, he had studios in Fort Lee., N. J., and several in New York and other places, in addition to the big studios in California. The laboratory for all the studios was also in Fort Lee. To Mr. Fox this meant much valuable time wasted. He wanted all the branches of production under one roof. Today he has accomplished that desire, for in the 55th Street, New York studio, he turns out a completed picture, from negotiation with the author, the engagement of star and cast, and the taking of the scenes on the third floor, to the final printing of the positive film in the most modern laboratory in the world, on the ground floor. The studios in California have been maintained to diversify the scenery and because western pictures should be made in the west.

The latest venture of Fox Film Corporation was to open studios in Rome, where J. Gordon Edwards began the making of pictures that would show great events and great figures of world history.

It is possible that other studios will be opened in the eastern hemisphere—in England, in France, in Russia. For Fox pictures have become international, like literature. Mr. Fox made "Cleopatra," "Salome," and now he has brought forth "Queen of Sheba."

But the triumph to date of all the unique achievements of Fox Film Corporation is the realization of the great aim of Mr. Fox to get into the very heart of the home, to accomplish something of perpetual benefit to humanity, to give to the present and leave for posterity the lessons of the most powerful human-interest story ever screened, "Over the Hill." Nothing gives Mr. Fox keener satisfaction than the endorsement by the press, the laity and the clergy of the world, of this masterpiece.

"Over the Hill" had an uninterrupted run of an entire year on Broadway, New York. Its intense human appeal was responsible for capacity audiences at every performance. It had a record in six of the Broadway theatres and is now being produced throughout the world. "Over the Hill" is destined to stand pre-eminent as a Fox achievement of lasting benefit and incomparable worth to the industry and to humanity.

Other big special pictures that Mr. Fox has for the millions of motion picture followers the world over are "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," "A Virgin Paradise," "Shame," "Perjury," "Footfalls," "Thunderclap," "The Last Trail." Gratified by the world-wide commendation his efforts have met with, Mr. Fox plans productions that will surpass even his stupendous successes of the present day.

The Fox Sunshine Comedies are known, too, throughout the world, and share the prestige enjoyed by the popular Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons and the Fox News service.

Bollman and Shipman Become Associated

Henry O. Bollman, the young manager of the Dial Film Company, which fostered "The Light in the Clearing," announces that Ernest Shipman with offices at 17 West 44th St., N. Y. City, has been appointed New York representative for his company. Mr. Shipman will represent the interests of Bollman in his two former productions "King Spruce" and "The Tiger's Coat" as well as in his new masterpiece.

Changes in Cosmopolitan Producing Staff

A REORGANIZATION of the Producing Department of Cosmopolitan Productions has been effected with the designation of William Le Baron as Director-General, the appointment of Verne H. Porter as Scenario Editor and the appointment of Howard Irving Young as Film Editor.

As Director-General Mr. Le Baron, heretofore Editor-in-Chief of the Scenario Department, will be responsible for the approval of stories, for the due development and dramatic construction of the story throughout the making and editing of the picture.

Mr. Le Baron, in addition to being well known in the motion picture industry, has an enviable reputation as a dramatist. He is the author of many stage productions.

Joseph Urban, besides his duties as Production Manager, is in charge of all construction, costuming, lighting and analagous matters. His settings for Cosmopolitan Productions have been accorded the highest praise in this country and abroad, his very name having come to mean perfection in scenic art.

William Sistrom, Mr. Urban's assistant, is thoroughly equipped with knowledge concerning the production of motion pictures, having won his spurs as manager of Universal City. Verne H. Porter comes to the producing company from Cosmopolitan Magazine of which he has been editor since 1918. Mr. Porter has had an interesting career as a newspaperman, magazine editor and scenario writer. Howard Irving Young brings to Cosmopolitan Productions, in his capacity of film editor, a ripe experience of motion pictures.

In the Production Department, under the reorganization, there will be a Production Board, consisting of Messrs. Urban, Le Baron, Sistrom and Porter. There will also be an Editing Board, consisting of Mr. Le Baron, Mr. Young, the chief cutter and the scenario writer of each picture under consideration.

The reorganization is aimed at establishing in the producing company a division between departments, patterned roughly after the distinction in the publishing business the editorial department and the business office. The institution has been divided into the Producing Department and the Financial Department.

Hodkinson Leaves for Coast

In Search of Pictures for Coming Year; Aims to Surpass 1921 Record

W. W. HODKINSON, president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, left New York Tuesday on his annual trip to the Pacific Coast in search of new productions for the coming year. He will proceed direct to Los Angeles, where he will make his headquarters at the Hotel Ambassador, and on his return, probably by March 1st, will endeavor to visit a number of the new Hodkinson Branch Exchanges, all of which have been established since his last visit to the Coast.

"We tried to keep our last year's product above the average run," Mr. Hodkinson said just before leaving, "and that we succeeded is borne out by a rather unusual tribute accorded our pictures by the National Committee for Better Films of the National Board of Review. Among forty-seven productions chosen by the Board's Committee as the 'finest year's group since the photodrama was created,' five bore the Hodkinson seal—'Jane Eyre,' 'A Certain Rich Man,' 'Rip Van Winkle,' 'The Man of the Forest,' and 'Lavender and Old Lace.' In other words, with about 2% of the country's distribution to our credit, we registered more than 10% of its best pictures, and I want to see this record outdistanced in 1922, for it is something that our producers may well be proud of.

This is practical proof of the soundness of the principle of selecting pictures solely on merit from various sources of supply, and it is all the more important because it coincides with one of the most ambitious moves yet made to get away from factory production on the part of screen artists desiring to form a direct contact with the exhibitor. I allude to the recent formation in Los Angeles of the Screen Artists' Guild, which also has for one of its objects the elimination of salacious and suggestive pictures from the motion picture theatre. Certainly, until the men and women who make their living in moving pictures take firm hold of this situation and insist upon a wholesome screen, there will be continually hanging over them the bug-bear of federal, state and even municipal censorship.

"If the efforts of this and other strong bodies can be merged in the common good, in encouraging serious-minded advocates of a clean screen, the producer with the off-color picture will find few doors open to him. This is the easiest, best and most efficacious way to beat censorship."

"Theodora" Breaks Record

Goldwyn's Sensation Smashing House Records Throughout U. S.

REPORTS received at Goldwyn headquarters from the large cities where its Italian spectacular photoplay, "Theodora," is showing, indicate that this film is destined to be the world's premiere money-getter, announce that company. Furthermore, it is stated that it has shattered all previous house records in every motion picture theatre where it has been shown and where reports have been received in New York. The world's greatest theatre, the Capitol, in New York City, is included in that statement.

It did $23,240 in its first two days at the Capitol and paid admissions were 37,081 for the two days.

Despite its previous four months' run at $2 top at the Astor theatre, a legitimate house, the engagement of "Theodora" at the Capitol was extended for a second week.

"'Theodora' has broken house records at the Roosevelt, the big new picture house in Chicago," states Goldwyn, in listing the sensational picture achievements, "It has broken all house records at the California theatre in Los Angeles. It has broken all house records at the American theatre in Denver. Also at the Majestic in Wilmington, Del.

"Sailor-Made Man" Set Box-Office Records

Harold Lloyd's "A Sailor-Made Man" is proving to be his greatest box-office comedy, according to reports from various first-run theatres throughout the country, declares a statement received from the offices of Associated Exhibitors, which is releasing this production.

John Hamrick of The Blue Mouse theatre, Portland, Ore., wired: "It is by far the best audience picture I have yet seen and predict it will establish a new box-office record for this town as each day tops preceding day." Mr. Hamrick also stated it to be his plan to hold the comedy at the Blue Mouse for an indefinite run.

"Harold Lloyd in 'A Sailor-Made Man' playing at the Pantages, Salt Lake, for the week of December 21st, broke all house records, and Pantages has had some mighty big weeks," reads a wire from Salt Lake City, which also describes how the same picture did more business for the Ogden theatre, Ogden, Utah, on Sunday and Monday, January 1st and 2nd, than any picture ever shown at the house in its career of seven years.

The Allen theatre and the Circle theatre in Cleveland played the comedy day and date during the week of January 1st, and both houses reported capacity business at every performance, according to the Associated Exhibitors' statement. The Cleveland Plain Dealer and the News were lavish in their praise of the attraction.

English Royalty View Educational Film

A cable was received from London a few days ago by E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., stating that Lyman H. Howe's "Famous Ride on a Runaway Train," the single-reel thriller that has proved so popular in this country, was shown before the King and Queen and all the Royal Family.

The showing took place in Buckingham Palace, London. Five hundred guests and servants of the Royal Family attended the entertainment. The picture, according to the cable, was "immensely enjoyed."

Laemmle and Stern to Plan 1922 Campaign of Big Pictures

FOLLOWING the opening of "Foolish Wives" at the Central theatre, New York, this week, Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Film, accompanied by Julius Stern, president of Century Film Corporation and second vice-president of Universal Film, will leave the East for the Coast where both executives will confer on the 1922 campaign of big productions for Universal. These plans, says a statement from Century Film headquarters, will be quite apart from the expansion that Mr. Stern has in mind for the Century comedies. The Century Film statement describing Mr. Stern's activities and policies follows:

"Julius Stern who is well known in the film business as an efficiency expert of keen ability was summoned East from his duties as Laemmle's personal representative at Universal City to superintend the speedy preparation of "Foolish Wives" for the screen. During the two months when he was in command of the West Coast Universal studios Stern not only economized on the spending of money but also on the spending of time. There was no detail he omitted to bring under his personal attention. He kept an 'open office' so that any one who wished might come in and tell him the difficulties he was laboring under or the increase of speed and efficiency that particular man might show if conditions were a little different. If the conditions warranted it, Stern saw to it that they became 'a little different.' Meantime he was sizing up the whole situation and making schedule which went toward increasing speed in production and decreasing expense.

"After he had put in ten hours or more a day listening, advising and observing he would sit in the projection room looking at the day's 'rushes' of the different directors. Stern claims, and rightly so, that by looking at the day's 'rushes,' defects may be corrected in time which if carried through a picture would perhaps entirely jeopardize its success. The next morning there would be a series of notes for directors and camera men—and before Stern left for New York there were quite a few new camera men, by the way.

"One of his theories is that while beautiful photography alone will not make a good picture, and the director and camera man who let themselves be carried away by a craving to take beautiful shots are certainly wasting both the time and the money of the firm which employs them yet a picture which has a good plot and poor photography is even more certain of failure. Well balanced work between director and camera man is an absolute necessity and to make sure of this co-operation and to save loss due to poorly balanced pictures the inspection of the daily 'rushes' by some one who has the time to criticize and to offer suggestions is a vital necessity.

"Stern engaged House Peters and Virginia Valli for Universal and as an example of how he utilizes every moment of his time may be mentioned that the ten minutes he had left while waiting for his train East in the station, he employed in laying the foundations and practically arranging the engagement of Matt Moore for one of the principal parts in 'The Storm' which Universal is about to produce shortly in screen form.

"While he was on the train coming to New York to supervise 'Foolish Wives,' he telegraphed ahead to every town where there was a Universal exchange manager to meet him, whether the train stopped for one minute or longer, and let him speak to him or give him some notes about 'Foolish Wives.' At Kansas City he stopped for half an hour, and one of the men who came to meet the train had to drive nine miles from his home, but was glad to do it at Stern's request. At Chicago he spent two hours at the exchange with I. R. Lesserman the manager, in conference.

"Stern, beside being tireless and having a passion for efficiency also believes in turning back into the production end a large percentage of profits for mechanical improvements. His own Century studios at Hollywood are admitted to be the most elaborately equipped in the way of comedy trick scenery, flies, specially designed runways for animals, cycloramas, traps, disappearing walls and doors of any in the country. He is expected to introduce some radical improvements and is a valuable addition to the Universal forces."

"White Hands" Opens in 'Frisco

Wid Gunning Feature Crowds Granada at Premiere

"WHITE HANDS," the Max Graf Production of C. Gardner Sullivan's story, a Wid Gunning release starring Hobart Bosworth, was given a pre-release showing at the opening of the new Granada theatre, in San Francisco, on Monday, January 9, before a distinguished audience, which included city officials and leading citizens.

A wire received at the Wid Gunning home offices, immediately after the opening, told briefly of the tremendous reception which was given the latest of Bosworth's appearances on the screen. The occasion, according to this information from a special representative of the Gunning organization, took on a triple significance.

First, it marked the opening of the Granada theatre, a beautiful new three-thousand seat first-run house, said to be on a par with the finest motion-picture theatre in the country. Second, it marked the first public showing of a picture which had aroused the greatest stir because of its plot and production.

But the greatest interest for the San Francisco audience which cheered the picture at its close was the fact that it is the first picture ever made at the magnificent new studios at San Mateo, near San Francisco, which were erected by business men of that city anxious to induce producers to settle permanently there. Mr. Graf was the first producer invited to take advantage of the elaborate and up-to-date equipment installed there.

The Granada was jammed at the opening, according to the report received. Every one of the 3,000 seats was taken, and standing room was at a premium. Prominent business men, office-holders, well-known society members were present among the thousands of San Francisco movie fans who attended the opening.

"'White Hands' opened to tremendous business and big audience success," read the wire from the Gunning representative in San Francisco.

The San Francisco newspapers, according to the brief excerpts available, were unanimous in hailing "White Hands" as a powerful picture of adventure and romance, one of the best vehicles Hobart Bosworth has ever had.

"Throbbing intensity. Dynamic and powerful," said the San Francisco Call.

"Strikingly effective picture. Is a thriller," was the comment of the San Francisco Journal.

"Thrills in plenty. Excellent picture."—San Francisco Chronicle.

"Dramatic power. Strong, direct story," said the Examiner.

Bosworth's work as "Hurricane" Hardy, a two-fisted sea-captain, won especially high praise from all those who attended the opening. It was said that "White Hands" gave the star the most dramatic opportunity he has ever had. The thrills which the critics all commented on include the killing of a man by sharks and an amazing fight in which Bosworth bests an entire band of Arabs.

The settings of the picture astonished the audience by their Oriental beauty, as it was known that the whole production had been made in a suburb of San Francisco. Much of the action of the story takes place on the edge of the Sahara, and the desert scenes were effective and realistic. An entire Algerian village, including native dance-halls, cafes and homes, was constructed and served as a colorful background for a swift-moving story.

Campaign Books Issued on Hodkinson Film

Advance copies of the exhibitors' campaign book on "Cameron of the Royal Mounted" were mailed to first-run accounts during the past week. The book is in twelve pages and is issued with two broadside supplements, a four-page advertising layout and a single broadside news service sheet.

"Reckless Chances" to Be Released Jan. 5

THE next Playgoers Pictures release is J. P. McGowan in "Reckless Chances," which is scheduled for January 15th. This is a Herald production, directed by Mr. McGowan, and included in the cast which supports him are Dorothy Wood, Andrew Waldron and Robert Walker.

For years, Mr. McGowan was a famous director of railroad pictures and is said to have produced in "Reckless Chances," a feature which combines all the best thrills of his experience, and is one of the most actionful productions of this class ever created. It includes a train robbery, many hand-to-hand fights, an exciting chase by engine over the mountains, and works up to a rapid-fire climax in which the hero, who had literally stolen his bride and subsequently was named as a notorious train robber, brings the real culprit to justice and wins back the affection of his young wife.

The accessories available on this production include a one sheet, two three-sheets of different styles, a six-sheet, sepia lobby photographs in large and small sizes, one and two column newspaper advertisements in cut or mat form, slide, music cue sheet and campaign book.

"R.S.V.P." Scores Hit in Many Cities

Newspaper reports and records of house managers coming to the Arthur S. Kane offices this week give an indication of the results being obtained by Charles Ray's latest release "R. S. V. P." in many cities outside of New York.

The feature was shown at the Rivoli, Baltimore; the Metropolitan ,Atlanta; the Hippodrome, Buffalo; the Strand, Cincinnati; the Des Moines, Des Moines, Ia.; the New Garrick, Minneapolis; the Monticello and National theatres, Hoboken, N. J., and other first run houses in many sections of the country.

Stanley Co. to Exploit "Jane Eyre"

Enthusiastically received by press and exhibitors alike, the Hugo Ballin production of "Jane Eyre" has added another leaf to its first-run laurels through its approval at the hands of the Stanley Company.

Reported on first by Abe L. Einstein as one of the outstanding artistic and dramatic productions of the screen season, it later ran the gamut of the entire Stanley executive critical body, and word has been received by A. W. Smith, Jr., general sales manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, that plans have been effected to make "Jane Eyre" one of the most extensively exploited productions ever sponsored by the Stanley Company.

The "Jane Eyre' deal places "Jane Eyre" in the Stanley Company's downtown Arcadia Theater for first run, immediately to be followed by a showing at the Stanley Savoy, and subsequent runs, according to present indications, throughout the Stanley Circuit.

Picturesque Procession Shown in Pathe News

In the second issue of Pathe News for the new year is shown a picturesque procession at Kyoto, Japan, in honor of Japan's representatives at the Washington conference. Huge, hand-carved wagons said to be made 800 years ago are a feature of the parade. Also shown are the dismantling of the huge Zeppelin sheds in Germany being carried out in conformity with the Armistice terms.

Vignola Preparing for His Greatest Film

Robert G. Vignola has just completed several retakes for Cosmopolitan's production, "The Young Diana," starring Marion Davies, and is now preparing for the filming of what is hailed as "his supreme effort as a director." The new production is to be a screen adaptation of "When Knighthood Was in Flower," with Marion Davies in the stellar role of Mary Tudor, sister of Henry VIII.

It is planned to make this picture not only the greatest production that Vignola has ever directed but also the greatest yet sponsored by Cosmopolitan, according to word from those associated with Mr. Vignola. At the present time Mr. Vignola is busy studying the script, assembling his cast, and passing on sets, costumes, etc. The preliminaries are so extensive that actual production will not be started for the next three or four weeks. The greater part of the picture will be made in the East, according to present plans.

Mr. Vignola's only association with "The Young Diana" has been to retake several scenes as he did not direct this picture. A huge ice carnival with hundreds of extras is among the retakes just made.

Herschel Stuart Joins Wid Gunning, Inc.

Herschel Stuart, for many years associated with theatrical interests in the Southwest, and widely known in film circles, has just joined Wid Gunning, Inc., according to an announcement from the Gunning home office, to which Mr. Stuart has been assigned.

Mr. Stuart's motion picture and theatre experience includes practically every post offered in the administration of large film interests. His first job, when a boy, was as usher in the Dallas Opera House. He stayed with that house for a number of years, finally being made treasurer.

Rupert Hughes and Bern to Address Students

Two members of the Goldwyn organization have been invited to lecture at Columbia University on phases of motion picture production—Rupert Hughes and Paul Bern.

Mr. Hughes will address the classes in motion picture production and composition on Tuesday evening, January 10. Paul Bern, editor-in-chief of Goldwyn's scenario department at the studios in Culver City, Calif., will lecture at Columbia on photoplay composition at the extension course in the Department of Photoplay.

"Way Down East" Plays Day and Date

In spite of the fact that D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East," the United Artists release, was shown for ten weeks at the Cleveland Opera House and later ran for two weeks at the Stillman Theatre, the management of six of the leading neighborhood houses booked the feature for a seven-day simultaneous run, each beginning on Christmas Day last. This, says United Artists, is the first time in the history of picture houses in Cleveland that neighborhood theatres simultaneously played any picture for a week's run. The six houses showing the feature were the Lucier, the Lincoln, the Haltnorth, the Cozy, the Rivoli and the Manhattan.

"The Sin Flood" Has Six-Star Cast

The great cast of players in Goldwyn's six-star special, "The Sin Flood," from Henning Berger's drama, "Syndafloden," has been one of the potent factors in connection with this photo-drama to arouse the keenest sort of interest among exhibitors throughout the country. Preliminary interest in this film exceeds that in any other Goldwyn film before its first showing, announces that company.

Goldwyn unequivocally tells the trade that, in the opinion of its executives, its producing staff, and its publicity and advertising departments that "The Sin Flood" is one of the greatest pictures the corporation has yet made. In its cast are six stars, while five other players measure well up to them in the distinction and brilliance of their acting in "The Sin Flood," and in their achievements upon the screen in the past.

Two players are featured by Goldwyn in this production — Helene Chadwick, one of the best liked leading women Goldwyn has ever had, and Richard Dix, its phenomenally popular new leading man but recently recruited from the speaking stage.

James Kirkwood is one of the screen's strongest and best known stars. Ralph Lewis is one of the screen's foremost character actors. He is another recruit from the speaking stage. Will Walling appeared in many roles on the speaking stage. Among his recent pictures are "The Old Nest," "The Invisible Power," "The Night Rose," "Head Over Heels," "The Killer," "Making the Grade," etc.

John Steppling's recent screen appearances were in "Madame Peacock," "Billions," "The Heart of a Child" and "Black Beauty." Other players with fine records who appear in "The Sin Flood" are William Orlamond, Otto Hoffman, L. H. King, Darwin Karr and Howard Davies. Frank Lloyd directed.

Grauman Books "Baby Peggy" Comedy

Among the exhibitors who are enthusiastic about the pictures of little Baby Peggy, the two-year-old Century comedy star, may be mentioned Sid Grauman who has booked one of her latest releases "Chums" and who is considering signing up for the whole series.

Fairbanks and Pickford Plan New Subjects

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS has summoned his technical staff to confer on the selection of his next screen subject. Johnston McCulley, who wrote "The Mark of Zorro," is enroute for Hollywood from Colorado Springs. When he arrives a conference will be held, at which Allan Dwan, Lotta Woods, and Kenneth Davenport will be present in addition to Mr. Fairbanks and Mr. McCulley. Word from the United Artists offices has it that Mr. McCulley will probably evolve a sequel to "The Mark of Zorro," and thus settle the problem. Allan Dwan will direct Fairbanks in his next subject.

In the meantime, Mary Pickford is making preparations to begin the refilming of "Tess of the Storm Country." But she may have to go back to New York soon for the final decision on the C. C. Wilkenning suit against her, and so actual work will not be started until after that is settled.

Jack Pickford will arrive sometime next week, and Miss Pickford will busy herself supervising her brother's next feature, "The Tailor-Made Man," which will go into production immediately.

"Quo Vadis" Does Big Business in Canada

"Quo Vadis," the famous Italian spectacle released in its 1922 form by Wid Gunning, Inc., is breaking one attendance record after another both in this country and in Canada, according to reports just received at the Gunning home offices. Many of the theatres played the tremendous film when it first appeared, and are bettering the business considered phenomenal at that time.

In Canada, it is reported, "Quo Vadis" opened at the Strand theatre, Toronto, for a week's run. It had as opposition three big specials—"The Old Nest," "Three Musketeers" and "Way Down East," yet it was the only picture which played to standing room, according to word received from the Canadian distributors.

Educational Releases on Opening Programs

Educational Pictures occupy prominent places on the opening programs of two new Los Angeles suburban theatres, the Rivoli, which was opened December 15, and the Granada, which gave its first program December 22.

"The Vagrant," an Educational-Mermaid Comedy with Lloyd Hamilton in the featured role, was on the opening program of the Rivoli, while the Granada opened with "Fresh From the Farm," an Educational-Christie Comedy featuring Bobby Vernon, who also appeared in person.

Five different programs a week are presented by the Rivoli. Every program through January 1, with a single exception, contained one or more Educational Pictures. These included Christie, Mermaid, Campbell and Punch Comedies, Bruce Scenics, Chester Outings, Chester Screenics and Kinograms.

The policy of the Granada is four programs a week. Educational Pictures were on most of the early programs announced to the patrons of this theatre. They included Christie, Mermaid and Punch Comedies, Sketchograf,s Kinograms and scenic subjects.

Lionel Barrymore Seen in Virile Role

"The picture with a backbone." That is the designation which has been bestowed upon "Boomerang Bill" featuring Lionel Barrymore by an exhibitor who saw it in the projection room at the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's home office. Created by Cosmopolitan Productions, under the direction of Tom Terriss, the picture is said by observers outside of the producing and releasing companies to be the best screen work of Mr. Barrymore's career.

"Boomerang Bill" is described as "the picture with a backbone" because it is virile, straight-from-the-shoulder, red-blooded character drama. It is the story of a gunman—not a narrative of crime, but an analysis of the heart of a "white" crook.

The original story was written by Jack Boyle for Cosmopolitan Magazine. The scenario was written by Doty Hobart. The cast includes Marguerite Marsh, Margaret Seddon and Frank Shannon.

Paramount Closes Big Mexican Contract

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, of the signing of a contract for the exhibition and distribution of 104 Paramount Pictures through the Circuito Olimpia, S. A., of Mexico City, one of the foremost exhibiting and distributing organizations in the republic of Mexico. The beautiful Teatro Olimpia, a recently completed million-dollar motion picture palace in Mexico City, will become the first-run house for Paramount Pictures and the ten exchanges operated by Circuito Olimpia will be used to obtain the widest possible distribution for Paramount Pictures throughout the republic.

R. P. Jennings, an American who has become one of the foremost business men of Mexico, is the president and owner of Circuito Olimpia. In addition to his other interests, Mr. Jennings has succeeded in building up the largest and most efficiently operated motion picture organization in Mexico, and he is enthusiastic over the signing of this new contract which he says obtains for his company the screen's greatest productions.

The Teatro Olimpia is said to be one of the finest motion picture theatres in the world and contains the most modern conveniences and luxuries for the proper presentation of high grade motion pictures. It is expected that George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man" will be selected as the opening attraction under this new contract.

New Chief for Hodkinson Contract Dept.

Announcement is made this week by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation of the appointment of L. W. Kniskern, formerly manager of the contract department of Realart Pictures Corporation, to become manager of the contract bureau in the Hodkinson home office, New York City.

Short Subject and Late Feature Reviews

"Her Mad Bargain"
(Mayer—First National)

IF you can make yourself believe that a struggling young artist (struggling for recognition, that is, but very wealthy) would become so deeply interested in a model, fleeing the caddish advances of another artist, that he would give her fifty thousand dollars to keep her from killing herself—why, you'll like "Her Mad Bargain"—which, by the way, may be what is called a "good box-office title."

The story concerns Alice Lambert, brought up in the lap of luxury as the adored ward of a very wealthy woman. The woman's niece Ruth resents the luxuries lavished on Alice, and, at her aunt's death, Ruth loses no time getting rid of the interloper. Alice makes her way through the stages of selling her beautiful clothes, of being a dress-model, pursued relentlessly by her employer, to that of artist model when she is pursued even more relentlessly by her artist-employer. This brings her to the door of the philanthropic artist, who bribes her with fifty thousand dollars not to kill herself, but to take a year to prove the truth of his theory that money will not buy happiness. The end is already in sight. There is a little newsboy who brings on a moment of pathos, and a few other characters—and that's about all. Miss Stewart looks beautiful, wears some stunning gowns, and therefore, the picture has feminine appeal.

The cast includes Anita Stewart, Helen Raymond, Gertrude Astor, Walter McGrail, Adele Farrington, Ernest Butterworth and Arthur Edmund Carew. Edwin Carew directed. Length 5 reels.—PEARL GADDIS. Reviewed at Atlanta, Ga.)

"The Fountain of Youth"
(Ivan Abramson-Graphic-State Rights)

AN allegorical adaptation of Faust has been made for the screen by Ivan Abramson which because of its unique photography and the power of suggestion conveyed through its array of scenes is certainly entitled to recognition by exhibitors. That it carries box-office value cannot be denied. In the first place the story and opera of Faust are well known to everyone; in the second place any wide awake showman should be able to exploit it by synchronizing it with the operatic setting.

"The Fountain of Youth" is a fantastic design to say the least. Almost all of the action is presented in an allegorical pattern with trick photography being effectively used. By its very design the spectator is disarmed from being analytical. He must simply accept it as a novelty. But beneath its shadowy, its ghostly composition, there is food for thought. The moral is dominant as it is in the operatic story. The hero sells his soul to Satan in return for worldly power and pleasure. And as he accepts his responsibilities the thought grows that his attempt to find a material satisfaction is futile. The hero must find a spiritual significance in life if he is to rise above the power of evil. Satan gives him opportunities to find passion, love, conscience and remorse. He is impatient to see into the unknown and the transitions which he experiences enable him to conquer life for a while. But the bargain is made and he is compelled to pay.

Mr. Abramson has achieved some startling effects with his interiors. It is almost as if he waved the magic wand and presto!—the photographic tricks befuddle the eye. Pictorially the offering will be appreciated. The sets are truly fantastic and for the most part have been deftly handled. The interpretation is taken care of by Russian players whose gift of pantomime is adequately expressed. Faust itself is so complicated for the average layman that its appeal along strictly dramatic lines is negligible. But the spectator in search of novelty will react to it—because of its fantastic design—Length, 6 Reels. —LAURENCE REID.

"The Glorious Fool"
(Goldwyn)

EVERYBODY who has ever read one of Mary Roberts Rinehart's delightful stories of life as lived among the doctors, nurses, probationers and, incidentally, patients, of a big hospital, will know that the subject is one which is far from being gloomy or depressing. And "The Glorious Fool," her first motion picture on this theme, proves it all over again.

Of course, a lion's share of the credit for the picture should go to the two featured players, Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix, who are rapidly becoming favorites in this line of work. The titles are in Mrs. Rinehart's favorite style, the direction (for which thank E. Mason Hopper) is smooth and even, the entire cast distinguish themselves, and the picture, as a whole, is a sure-fire hit.

It is the story of little Jane Brown, probationer, and Billy Grant, a wild young scapegrace, who is brought to the hospital as a patient following his theft, while intoxicated, of a trolley-car and his subsequent attempts to drive it.

From the opening scene, in which Jane Brown and Billy Grant together, face death for the first time, until the finish, when the swinging doors of the ward close on a perfectly good kiss between the two, there isn't a dull moment. As in all of Mrs. Rinehart's work, there are a few tears, a good many smiles, lots of pleased chuckles, and not a few down-right hearty laughs. If they liked "Dangerous Curve Ahead," they're going to like this!

The cast includes Helene Chadwick, Richard Dix, Theodore von Elz, Kate Lester, Otto Hoffman, Patricia Palmer, and George Cooper. E. Mason Hopper directted. Length, 5 reels. —PEARL GADDIS. (Reviewed at Atlanta, Ga.)

"The Touchdown"
(Century Comedy—Two Reels)

FOR the first reel of this Century comedy, there is released as snappy a line of rural hokum as has been flashed on the screen in some time. And when it comes to the country gawk, Lee Moran can portray the part with genuinely humorous burlesque. His awkward manner—his height and general countenance—all these fit in making him a colorful prototype of the bumpkin. The author and director has evolved some new hokum for the Ford and the subtitles are snappy enough to make an undertaker laugh. But the minute the rube reaches college, the spontaneity misses fire and what is revealed is rather old stuff, with little humor.

The getaway from the farm is done with a comic effect. When college is reached, the plot is fashioned around an initiation into the inner circle of the dormitory. The hayseed's rival expends a deal of energy in embarrassing him. In time he has his revenge. The final scenes show a novel touch when the hero scores one touchdown after another by simply running with the ball. Then he is photographed against one of the circus side-show mirrors. —LAURENCE REID.

"The Playhouse"
(Buster Keaton Comedy—First National)

THE stage cannot hold much illusion for the screen spectator now—what with the various stories written around the life back-stage. Buster Keaton, realizing the comedy tricks of such a life, has incorporated them for his newest offering entitled "The Playhouse." Any of those who saw him in "The Boat" are apt to be disappointed if they try to measure its fun with that lively number. Yet there is enough humor expressed to make it a really comic treat. Trust Keaton to find the high spots of such a plot as indicated by the title. Life back stage is broadly burlesqued with considerable ingenuity of stunts.

He is made up to represent a number of characters, a few of which are spectators in the theatre. He doubles—even triples and quadruples in brass, as it were. He becomes the prop boy and messes things up for fair. A diver is appearing in a tank. Can you guess what Buster does? You're right. He busts the tank and the pent-up waters flood the stage, the orchestra pit and the house proper. This is cutting up didoes with a vengeance. And shows how far Keaton will go to provide amusement. He disregards expense. Follows some funny business, after which the comedian exits himself through being chased by a giant.

"The Playhouse" is certain to score everywhere. Keaton's comedies don't come too often to be called just average. They are way above such a category because they are conceived and executed with well thought out ideas, painstaking in detail, and carefully rehearsed. At least that is the impression one gains after seeing them. Length 2 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"Fur Coats and Pants"
(Star Comedy—Universal)

PERHAPS it has never entered the office boy's head to make capital of his boss' revolving chair. But when he sees this comedy he is apt to execute the idea—that is if he lives up to the orthodox representation of always creating mischief or finding a way to avoid work. Here it is the book-keeper's chair which is utilized for a put-and-take top. The boss discovers the thing and cleans up the board. After this novel introduction the comedy twists around a fur coat. First, a blind man mistakes the wearer for his dog and the subsequent business finds the frankfurters alive when the coat passes. The comedy is not so lively as its introductory scene would indicate and it must be put down as only mildly amusing. Ethel Tears is the heroine and Bert Roach the comedian. Length 1 Reel.—LAURENCE REID.

"THE BRIDE'S PLAY"
(Cosmopolitan-Paramount)

Romantic Photoplay Sumptuously Staged

THIS picture appeals more to the eye than it does to the imagination. Pictorially, it is rich in sumptuous settings, the atmosphere of moated castles and the medieval spirit of the story being admirably suggested. Joseph Urban, who is responsible for these artistic effects, is deserving of the highest praise for embellishing the feature with such an old-world atmosphere. The story itself is a snug little romance which does not take long in carrying its lovers to the altar. The author, Donn Byrne, has had recourse to an ancient tradition of the Ireland of medieval times and in order to express it has written a story within a story.

There is not much plot substance. Naturally the picture is weak in dramatic touches. You appreciate from the moment the central figures are introduced that virtue and modesty will triumph over villainy and forwardness. Wyndham Standing, who portrays the successful lover, is skillful at interpreting pathos. Once you see him effacing himself from certain scenes you know for a certainty that he will succeed. It's a triangle plot minus the domestic complications. The villain is a poet, who, because of his gifted verse and a brilliant tongue, is able to conquer the heroine for a while. She falls under his spell until she discovers his fickle nature. The girl, having come into a rich inheritance, spurns his affection thereafter and realizes that she loves the neighboring baronet. And here comes the meaning of the title and the incident around which the entire story evolves.

The author relies upon an ancient Irish custom for a quaint drawing. The wedding guests are assembled. There is a fine spirit of joviality suggested as a few hundred of them crowd beneath the moated walls. This ancient ceremony is the Bride's Play. The guests are brought into the immediate circle and the bride passes among them, asking each man: "Are you the one I love best?" Which is the occasion for the title-writer to inject some quaint expressions. Men past the prime of life give answer in colorful terms pictured with humor. The heroine reaches the poet and this positive youth attempts to duplicate the strong-arm methods of medieval days. When he answers in the affirmative, the bride cuffs him with her slipper. So he makes a disgraceful exit. The concluding scene finds the young baron folding the colleen in his arms. There is good background, the costuming and sets being sumptuous in every particular. While Miss Davies does not suggest a piquant Irish bride—filled with the spirit and romance of her country, yet she creates a good impression in a role which calls for naturalness. Carlton Miller is the rejected poet. A colorful production pleasing to the eye and really appealing to the heart when the climax is revealed.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Donn Byrne, one of the most popular short story writers of the day, is the author of "The Bride's Play," a romantic story of Ireland, a country in which the author lived many years and in which he received his education. The picture, while modern in its setting, carries the audience back to medieval days in the portraying of a romantic incident that took place centuries before. The plot embodies a beautiful legend of Ireland called "The Bride's Play," according to which the bride at an ancient Irish wedding used to approach all the male wedding guests with the question, "Are you the one I love best?"

This is a tale of modern Ireland which uses this legend as a source of embarrassment and also recalls its use in medieval times, when men were bold and stole brides from before their groom's eyes. The story contains many thrills. The charm of the legend and the power of the romance are sufficient to make the offering highly entertaining aside from the expressive performances of the star and her capable assistants. George Tedwilliger directed and has staged the story against charming backgrounds.

SUGGESTIONS

The points to emphasize this feature are the marvelous beauty of the backgrounds which is noticeable in the settings conceived and executed by Joseph Urban, the noted scene designer and artist, the star who captivates with a charming performance and who incidentally portrays a dual role, the lavishness of the settings and the lovliness of the medieval pageants and dances. You can dwell upon the fact that this is a picture about brides and weddings. Capitalize the interest every woman and girl takes in love stories. The original story appeared in a popular magazine and the author is one of the most gifted writers of the short story. Your prologue can be really original, featuring an idea similar to the theme. It suggests all kinds of exploitation.

"LOVE'S REDEMPTION"
(Norma Talmadge—First National)

Miss Talmadge Raises Conventional Story by Her Personality

ALL of the Norma Talmadge personality is in this picture. By her personality we include her beauty, her charm of manner, her ability to wear clothes. Most of the star's pictures have their appeal because of the star, and this is true of "Love's Redemption," only more so. The story here is nothing out of the ordinary. The plot has been done countless times before—it is stereotyped screen drama. Briefly it is the story of a West Indian native girl who regenerates and marries an English nobleman. In England there is the snobbish family.

But the picture is vibrant with Miss Talmadge. She has new opportunities in her role as the Jamaican native. In her capacity as housekeeper, she takes it upon herself to save a young Englishman from drink. He is "the younger son," not wanted at home. With her help he fights his battle, and wins. They are to be married. But words come that he has inherited a fortune in England. Back he goes, taking his bride with him. This British family, with other plans for the new financial saviour of the household, does not want to receive the wife.

They try to prove to him that a Jamaican native does not belong in England—that she cannot fit into English society. Finally, the young man himself admits she is not the type for English life, but instead of sending her away from him, they both journey back to their island home, there to live happily among the palm trees and sugar plantations.

Thus it can be seen that the feature has not the saving quality of whimsy, of thrilling action, of gripping human interest, or of even intense drama. It is interesting, although the end is easily guessed. It is interesting chiefly because of Miss Talmadge. Her feminine admirers will have an opportunity to criticize a new style of hairdress and in the latter part of the picture, enthuse over some of the latest gowns. There is a beautiful scenic background to the early part of the picture. Tropical scenes make a fitting frame for the beautiful star.

In the cast with the star are Harrison Ford, who becomes recognizable when he gives up whiskers and drink, and who gives a splendid performance at all times, and Montagu Love, who is one of the heavies.

"Love's Redemption," without Miss Talmadge, would be a satisfactory program feature, and with her, it is certain of box office success. Length 6 reels. Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The latest Norma Talmadge picture which the patrons of the ———— theatre will have an opportunity to witness is "Love's Redemption." This beautiful star, who probably is the most consistently popular of any screen favorite today, is seen in a new type of picture in "Love's Redemption." She is cast as a native girl of the British West Indies who becomes the wife of a young British nobleman, who, because he is a younger son and penniless, has been disowned by his family. When he suddenly falls heir to a fortune he takes his young bride into English society.

Miss Talmadge, called by many the most beautiful and attractive star on the screen, is given every opportunity to display those charms which have endeared her to the hearts of thousands. Playing opposite her is Harrison Ford, who has been seen in many of her previous pictures and who has himself won countless admirers. The story was adapted by Anthony Paul Kelly, noted playwright and photodramatist, from the popular novel by Andrew Soutar, "On Principle."

"Love's Redemption" will be shown for ———— days beginning ————. As is usual when Norma Talmadge pictures are shown, it is expected that the ———— theatre will enjoy capacity audiences.

PROGRAM READER

Norma Talmadge's latest production, "Love's Redemption," will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————, when it will start a ———— days' run. This screen favorite has produced another feature picture calculated to increase her already large number of admirers. "Love's Redemption" is adapted from a novel by Andrew Soutar, "On Principle," and was afforded its screen version by Anthony Paul Kelly, the author of "Three Faces East." Miss Talmadge, judged by many as the most beautiful woman on the screen today, is cast as a West Indian girl, who loves and marries an English nobleman, and with him goes to England, where she is received in an unfriendly manner by his family. The picture is rich in romance and contains not a little humor, and it affords Miss Talmadge an opportunity to display her unique personality which has made her one of the most beloved characters in filmland. Harrison Ford is once more her leading man, and Montagu Love, another popular screen actor, is also in the cast.

CATCH LINES

"TURN TO THE RIGHT"

Successful Crook Play Makes Rattling Good Picture

REX INGRAM has turned to that successful crook play of a few seasons ago, "Turn to the Right," for his latest screen expression. The subject, rich in the elements which build popularity, was destined for the silversheet. The inspiring theme of redemption, coupled with the vivid characterization and the plot incident have been excellently caught by the camera. June Mathis and Mary O'Hara have made an adaptation which carries the fidelity of the spoken version, and Mr. Ingram has embroidered it with deft touches, providing happy balances, well-rounded character sketches, and a subtle vein of humor.

The central figure commands the deepest sympathy owing to the struggle which confronts him. Discouraged by his sweetheart's hypocritical father, the youth goes to the city and turns to the left. He hobnobs with the associates of crime. Yet he keeps his balance even when sent to prison for a crime of which he is innocent. Mr. Ingram draws the picture—up to the release of the country boy—with deft, sure strokes, emphasizing the rural color, the intimate scenes of family life and the romantic spark with fine appreciation of their values. Pathos and humor go hand-in-hand, perfectly balanced. The city atmosphere is highly picturesque, the underworld figures being marvelous types. It is when the youth returns home, followed by his prison pals that the action fails to maintain its compactness of the early scenes. There is too much detail and the bigger strokes are more or less sketched. Even the romance gives away to this intimate drawing, much of which reveals a peach orchard and the process of picking the fruit.

There is too much emphasis given to unimportant scenes. However, the story always entertains even with this emphasis. One becomes acquainted with the crooks and sympathizes with them. Mr. Ingram has caught the pyschology of their redemption in excellent manner. Rich with humor is the scene showing them outwitting the old skinflint, robbing his safe and giving him back his own money. With some of the later incident dispensed with—such as a few romantic touches of the pals and their sweethearts, the action would be quickened. However, it is a splendid picture, painstakingly achieved, and with a convincing moral. Everything comes out all right in the end. The little mother inspires the crooks to turn to the right. Her philosophy of life —to believe the best—is caught by the spectator. He will react to it with keen appreciation. Pictorially, the play is richly decorated with atmosphere. Some of the characters may be overdrawn, as for instance, the grocery clerk who dresses according to the stage tradition and not according to life.

The director has guided the players in a deft manner. He makes them feel their parts. The crooks played by Jack Mulhall, George Cooper and Harry Myers dominate the later scenes. All are pictures, especially Mr. Cooper. Alice Terry makes a lovely heroine, Lydia Knott, an old-fashioned mother, and Ed Connelly a vivid sketch of the old skinflint. "Turn to the Right" is a picture bound to score everywhere.—Length, 7,600 feet.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The famous stage success, "Turn to the Right," has been adapted to the screen by June Mathis and Mary O'Hara for Metro and it comes to the ———— theatre next ———— as a Rex Ingram production. This is to say that it carries all the earmarks of success despite its popularity upon the stage. Mr. Ingram has again demonstrated his skill displayed in "The Four Horsemen," with the manner in which he makes this play live again. The simple villagers, the youth, who discouraged because of his sweetheart's father refusing him permission to see her, going away to the city and turning to the left—the road to crime, the determination to keep to the straight path even when he is innocent and in jail, the prison pals who follow him home and help him in distress, the renewal of his love, the vindication which comes to him—these are intact. It is a pulsating drama, rich in its moral value, picturesque in types, colorful in intimate life of city and farm and throbbing with pathos and humor, romance and sentiment. It is splendidly staged and acted by a highly talented cast.

PROGRAM READER

"Turn to the Right" is coming to the ————. Manager ———— takes great pleasure in announcing this production which is another screen triumph. As a play it scored a marvelous success. As a picture it is certain to duplicate its popularity. This throbbing, human slice of life—this humorous and pathetic and simple little story of redemption is presented here with all its fine qualities. Trust Mr. Ingram of "Four Horsemen" fame to give it a wonderful production. Skillfully acted, admirably adapted and staged, it is bound to entertain you. So come to the ————. Be prepared to see a real screen triumph.

"CAMERON OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED"

(Ernest Shipman-Hodkinson)

Vivid, Thrilling Dramatization—Interesting Departure

ONE of the things that has not been overdone in picture making is realism. The screen version of Ralph Connor's famous book, "Corporal Cameron," deviates in this respect. It is realistic in the extreme. No "sets" nor exteriors similar to the locale depicted could be substituted for the wonderful mountainous country of Northwest Canada. Therefore, the actual scenes described in the original story, the long winding trails, dangerous declines, steep water falls, etc., have been used with splendid results.

The title role, a most difficult characterization, enacted by Gaston Glass, is a new departure for the young actor, and has been admirably done. That he is capable of appearing as a fast maturing boy in the first of the picture, and develops after he seeks the Canadian wilderness, into a rugged, well-built man, handling men twice his size and with apparently double strength, is hardly believable. Yet Mr. Glass never falters for a moment in any of the thrilling and perhaps hardest fought hand-to-hand encounters, although outnumbered many times. When he finally becomes "Corporal Cameron," his apt ability to wear a uniform and assume an unmistakable military bearing, add, consistently, to his performance.

Vivienne Osborne, who plays the only feminine role of prominence, is appealing. She is easier in her scenes as the trained nurse, than in the first of the picture when she is cast as a demure country maiden, although her performance does not carry any great amount of weight.

Here is a picture that will gratify the men. It is a man's picture, the important parts all being well played by men who look them, especially Irving Cummings, a splendid type of ability necessary to characterize his prominent role.

A word about the scenic value is due, some of the shots the most beautiful of their kind ever shown clear and intense, marvelous in length. The entire production, with the exception of a few necessary interiors, has been made in the mountains, with real snow, real Canadian woods and a platoon of real Canadian Royal Mounted Police, to great pictorial advantage.

The story relates the activities of a young Scotchman of wealth and breeding. About to complete his course at Edinburgh, he is drawn into a friendly poker game with his school pals; also induced to take more to drink than is good for him, with the result that he finds himself a heavy "loser," and the check his father had given him for fifty pounds, missing.

After the youngster has sobered up and returned to his school duties, his father's visit interrupts. The check has been "raised" to five hundred pounds. The son does not remember whether he did it or not. Unable to prove he did not, and practically disowned, he seeks to hide his shame by leaving for parts unknown. His destination, Canadian forest country, finally offers work on a farm. It is there he meets the girl. What happens before he can clear his name, marry the girl and claim his birthright, incorporates thrilling melodrama, love interest and an idea of what life in Northwestern Canada is like. Runs seventy-two minutes.—Lillian R. Gale.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Corporal Cameron," the great story of the Northwest, written by Ralph Connor has been dramatized for the screen under the title of "Cameron of the Royal Mounted." It comes to the ———— on ————. The author, known the world over for his works such as "Black Rock," "The Sky Pilot," "The Man from Glengarry" and "The Foreigner," unconsciously laid out one of the greatest screen stories ever written, when he wrote the tale of the young Scotch lad, ready to graduate from school, who, because of a moment's hesitation and weakness, endured hardships altogether unnecessary for one of his birthright. But it made a thorough man of him, made him at last, one of the envied mounted police, Canada's "Royal Mounted." It has scenic value, love interest, is commendably acted and will be most gratifying to lovers of Canada, as well as followers of stories of the rugged, brave and thoroughly manly recruits in the "Mounted Police."

PROGRAM READER

In "Cameron of the Royal Mounted," which will appear at this theatre on ———— Gaston Glass will be seen in the title role. You recall the young lad who played the idolized son of the Jewish mother in "Humoresque?" The same who played the poet, innocently causing all the trouble in "The World and His Wife?" The same, Gaston Glass, will surprise you in "Cameron of the Royal Mounted," when he indulges in some of the most realistic and hard fought hand to hand battles ever seen on the screen.

CATCH LINES

There is no use to run. If the "Royal Mounted" are on your trail—they'll get you!

A vivid story of the Northwest Mounted. A screen drama filled with action and adventure. The lure of the great outdoors. The romance of the Northwest.

THE SIN FLOOD
(Goldwyn)

A Rare Treat for the Discriminating; Fine Entertainment for All

GOLDWYN'S picturization of the stage play, "The Deluge" "Synafloden," Henning Bergsen's wonderful drama, makes as dramatic and as human a piece of celluloid as has been seen in some time. Calling Bergen's drama "wonderful" is not for want of a better word—there is hardly another way to describe it. Taking a fact of human psychology, developing it from a plot situation which is decidedly novel and intensely interesting, proving it by diversified characterizations all laboring under the same emotion, "The Sin Flood" could not possibly have turned out to be anything but an itneresting picture.

But Goldwyn has gone further. It can honestly be said that the most has been made out of this drama; every iota of interest squeezed from it. It is exceptionally well acted, and it is a feature that requires consistently good work from every member of its cast of principals. On the stage the drama did not end happily for the two principals. It was too real, too human. All the characters, suddenly reformed in the face of certain death, drift back to their old evil ways once they have won the battle with Death. In the picture the leading man and heroine alone keep to the ideals which have been reborn in the face of danger. Thus the picture is saved from leaving a depressing effect and at the same time the semi-cynical touch, which is also a most convincing touch, is not lost.

In a Mississippi town there is a basement cafe. The storm breaks, the flood alarm is given, and locked in this air and water-tight room are seven or eight characters; the town drunkard; a degenerate preacher, a crooked lawyer, two exchange traders who hate each other, a down-and-out actor, a seedy engineer, a miserly saloonkeeper, a thieving bartender, a man who has deserted the girl who loves him, and that girl. Death seems certain; they will suffocate Their characters suddenly change. They forgive one another and pledge to a "brotherhood of love." Rather than suffocate, they take their last farewells and fling open the door. But the people are walking above; the water has receded. Immediately they revert to their former characters. The brokers continue their crooked business battle. The saloonkeeper collects for the food and drink. The drunkard is thrown out, and the street preacher again begins to drink. Only the two young people have learned the lesson. They are to marry.

Not a flaw can be found in the development of the story. The logic is absolutely convincing. And all the power that this dramatic situation suggests is there.

No one of the cast should be selected as outstanding, but those two favorites, Richard Dix and Helene Chadwick, will not disappoint any of their admirers. Every one of the all-star cast gives a most intelligent interpretation.

"The Sin Flood" is a picture which will be a rare delight to the discriminating, and one which will hold to the very final moment, every picturegoer.—Length, 6,500 feet.—Matthew Taylor.

"The Sin Flood"

(As reported to the Motion Picture News by E. R. Rogers, managing director of the Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., after the picture's run last week.)

When an original screen story comes along too much praise cannot be given it. "The Sin Flood" swells the tide of better pictures. Henning Berger's "The Synafloden," intelligently and artistically adapted to the screen by Director Lloyd, is a story powerful and unsual and far off the beaten path of screen entertainment. It contains a message for the public good and gives an exhibitor something to work with for the good of the industry, as well as being an incentive to do the utmost in exploitation and presentation. Its super-character delineation and dramatic power makes a human document with all the elements of screen entertainment. Richard Dix and Helene Chadwick procure a firmer grip on stardom.

"The Sin Flood" breezes along like a southern zephyr, develops into a hurricane and exits with a booming sigh. The director has kept the suspense well sustained throughout. Henning Berger shows life. He has dared to disclose the inner man, and Director Lloyd has caught his meaning. It is the kind of a picture that will get somewhere and make friends for the exhibitor.—E. R. Rogers.

"THE LANE THAT HAD NO TURNING"
(Paramount)

Heavy Story of Revenge and Self-Sacrifice

IT is a question whether this story would have been screened if Sir Gilbert Parker's name had not adorned it. "The Lane That Had No Turning" carries a fragrant title suggestive of romance and summertime, but it stops there, and what is revealed is a morbid, depressive story of a sensitive husband who, suffering an injury, becomes hopelessly crippled, and his wife, who sacrifices an operatic career to bring him some measure of happiness in his affliction. The story starts out like a whirlwind suggesting that it might unfold action tense and interesting. But when the husband meets with his injury the suspense is lost and never regained despite the violent scenes which occur later.

The hero has become a power in the community through the death of the Seigneur. The wedding feast—a scene of quaint atmosphere is being celebrated. A drunken lout, without any real motive for his vengeance, strikes him, with the result that the affliction of his ancestors visits him. Fearing the worst, he sends his wife to Europe to pursue an operatic career; the while he works to make himself more powerful in the affairs of the community, trusting to this power to make his wife remain steadfast after she has learned of his condition. There is another figure who commands little sympathy even though he is the rightful claimant to the property. He intrudes time and again, and in the end comes into his possessions—even to the extent of winning the affection of the cripple's wife after she has become a widow. It seems like a sop thrown to sentiment or romance to find her encouraging him.

There are a number of violent scenes, for the cripple endeavors to kill his rival—does succeed in killing the man who gave him his injury, and finally kills himself in a moment of frenzy—when his tormentor informs him that his wife is unfaithful. You want to extend sympathy for the unhappy woman, but somehow she doesn't inspire you with any such quality due to Parker's drawing. He knows his French Canada like no other author. In the respect of atmosphere he is interesting. But there isn't a single vein of humor in the entire picture. Agnes Ayres makes her first appearance as a star, and while she fails to reach emotional heights succeeds in registering her charming personality. It remains for Theodore Kosloff as the cripple to flash the best performance. He positively makes the part uncanny and yet at the same time keenly sensitive. A little actory at times but quite convincing withal. Had the other man been drawn less arbitrary—had he figured more in the action as if he were a cital part of it, Mahlon Hamilton would have made the character appear more logical.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Admittedly one of the most charming of screen players, Agnes Ayres, new Paramount star, is said to achieve a triumph in her first stellar vehicle, "The Lane That Had No Turning," which appears at the ———— theatre next ————. This is a dramatic picture based upon a story by Sir Gilbert Parker, the scenes of which are laid in French Canada. Miss Ayres portrays a highly emotional role with exquisite depth of feeling and is supported by such competent players as Theodore Kosloff, Mahlon Hamilton, Frank Campeau, Lillian Leighton and others.

The story concerns the marriage of Madelinette to Louis, and his supposed inheritance of an old estate in French Canadian precincts. He is injured and develops a cripple, but his wife sticks by him until he, himself, ends it, and she marries Fournel, the rightful owner of the property. It is a romantic story with tense situations ever dominant. It is fraught with the spirit of self-sacrifice. The picture has been handsomely staged and directed in adequate fashion.

PROGRAM READER

The lovely lady of the screen—the beautiful and dashing Agnes Ayres is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in her first starring venture, "The Lane That Had No Turning." This charming actress has won recognition through seasons of exceptional performances. She appears as a star in Sir Gilbert Parker's vital and throbbing story of French Canada—which concerns a woman's self-sacrifice to give up all for the man she married—a man who became a cripple. The picture presents a feast of beauty in more ways than one. The enchanting backgrounds are set off with thrills. The story sparkles with dramatic moments and with a great inspiring love. Don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

Since this is Agnes Ayres' first starring venture, it would be a good point to emphasize this in all your notices. Play up that she is radiantly beautiful—that she is one of the loveliest ladies of the screen. Make mention that she has scored through many photoplays—many of which will be remembered because of her sterling work. After which you can present stills of her and tell that Gilbert Parker wrote the story. You can feature the fact that the author knows French Canada like no other writer. And tell that this story is a fascinating one which contains dramatic moments and a great inspiring love. Feature that the plot is founded upon a woman's sacrifice for her husband. Mention that Theodore Kosloff and Mahlon Hamilton are in the cast.

"DON'T GET PERSONAL"
(Universal)

Star Scores in Episodic and Sketchy Comedy

THERE is not a deal of weight to this offering. In fact it is brittle and episodic in construction, offering no more than a series of pretty pictures of the personable Marie Prevost, who flits around in true flapper style, wearing an array of pretty costumes and cutting up didoes like a true daughter of Eve. The plot is merely a skeleton which has to do with an untamed Broadway chorine journeying to the country and finding mischief. She only stops in her playful pranks when she bows to the call of romance. Miss Prevost is assisted by a couple of competent comedians, Roy Atwell and T. Roy Barnes. In fact they keep the comedy moving and manage to extricate a deal of humor of a light fashion from the naive scenes.

The director, not having any working plot to build from, has merely posed the players in attractive postures—with the star leading the field. The heroine flits in and out of French windows and doors and runs up and down the stairs. She has for a companion, Teddy, the great Dane. And the dog is really instrumental in bringing the hero and heroine together. There is one comic effect which has to do with the girl stealing an electric which takes her to a fashionable road-house and compelling the hero to take it back alone. The power gives out on a steep hill and he is forced to push it up the grade. There is a slight note of melodrama observed in the attempt of a portly vamp to intrigue the rich Mr. Atwell into matrimony. The Broadway girl plays him against Mr. Barnes, but in the end accepts the latter.

By keeping the star in every scene the director has managed to keep the spectator at attention. Miss Prevost can stand by herself with such a magnetic personality. Barnes manages to embrace his few opportunities for comedy. His antics are engaging throughout. There is a spirit of good-natured slapstick about the offering which helps it over the light spots. One cannot object to Miss Prevost's presence. She is always restful to the optic nerve. And some bald-headed bounders whose vision is weak may develop good eyesight through watching her adapt herself to her scenes. She wears no bathing suit here, but that is no indication that she will fail to do so in the future. The picture is prettily staged and bounds along easily. It will not tax the spectator. Its spirit of youth and fun will compensate for lack of substance. Length, 5 Reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A zippy comedy-drama of a Follies beauty who breezed into an aristocratic family and started a storm that subsided in a double wedding—that is "Don't Get Personal," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with the former bathing beauty, Marie Prevost, as the star. The plot carries an undercurrent of truth in it despite the frivolities of the piquant adventures of the heroine who is sent to the aristocratic family by her father in order that the change of environment may enable her to forget Broadway.

If it proves anything, it is that a new atmosphere always contains dangers, even though it may be a simpler atmosphere than one is accustomed to living in. The heroine's chief temptation is to meddle in the love affairs of other people. Before she extricates herself she is herself caught in the throes of romance. Her chief meddler is a big dog who starts the youth dodging until he dodges into her tight embrace to avoid disaster. Miss Prevost presents her charming personality in scenes which are rich with humor and romance. Her assistants include the capable comedians, T. Roy Barnes and Roy Atwell.

PROGRAM READER

Do you know a pretty girl who craves to protect nice, inexperienced young men from dangerous vamps? There's such a girl in "Don't Get Personal," the Universal feature which appears at the ———— theatre next ———— with the charming and talented Marie Prevost as the star. The actress has the time of her life in meddling in other people's love affairs. Having charmed Broadway, she moves to the country for a change of environment. And she brings a big dog with her. Well, she gets sinto a peck of trouble, but has a great time before she capitulates to the call of love. She offers good advice not to get personal unless you are equipped with plenty of beauty and personality. T. Roy Barnes and Roy Atwell are in the cast. Enough to state that the picture is in capable hands.

SUGGESTIONS

A snappy line of posters, catch lines, briefs, throw-aways and door-knob hangers should be exploited for the feature—which is a snappy, zippy comedy-drama of a New York showgirl who breezes into an aristocratic home and proceeds to meddle in their private love affairs. You can feature it as light, but wholly entertaining. Play up the star and exploit the feature as one that is carrying Marie Prevost ever forward. Establish the fact that she is rapidly becoming a popular favorite. Of course don't neglect to exhibit a line of stills showing her in a various array of costumes. Mention that the picture carries a fine cast featuring T. Roy Barnes and Roy Atwell. A light and breezy prologue can be exploited.

CATCH LINES

Marie Prevost, the star with the form divine, supported by the humorous T. Roy Barnes will appear at the ———— next ————. See this picture.

(Vitagraph)

Heart Interest Story with Dramatic Flourishes

THIS Vitagraph picture, written by John Lynch, carries all the ingredients for popular success. Carrying a strong note of heart interest as its dominant note it is well balanced with a good vein of romance, a few dramatic strokes and some intimate scenes of life back-stage. And gracing it all is the charming personality of Corinne Griffith. The title is misleading and does not carry out its suggestion—that it might be a finance story of Wall Street. Really the plot is centered about a conscience-stricken old man, who because of the wrong he tendered his daughter is determined to make amends to the latter's child. The idea is so compelling with him that he broods constantly and his butler is commissioned with the task of locating the heiress and bringing the grandfather back to health.

The director has not clearly established two of the characters. A secretary and a mysterious woman are quartered in the house. While their purpose is to complicate matters and intrigue the old man out of his money, in reality they do nothing of the kind. And when the secretary attempts to shoot the woman one wonders at his motive because he has shown no particular affection toward her. In fact he has attempted to assert his personality upon the heroine. The girl is really the butler's daughter, and the good servant realizing that his master must have an heiress passes her off as the grandchild. She does not take kindly to the new life because she has been told of her "grandfather's" cruelty toward her "mother." But a scene is introduced which shows her surprising the butler reading some old letters which prove her to be his daughter.

Unwilling to impose further she returns to the stage and is starred in a ballet. It is opening night. The old man has not been informed of the true facts, but when the secretary, in a stage box, attempts to shoot the other woman, the butler intercedes and receives the fatal bullet. He makes a full confession and the old man appreciates his loyalty and the girl's sincerity. He has grown to love her as his own child. The picture may be called a society drama with stage trimmings. It moves with creditable action, revealing good contrasts, some conflict and moments of deep pathos and heart interest. The hero is really a negligible character here, the bltler carrying the dominant role. But the note of romance is introduced in convincing style. It never seems arbitrarily added for the sake of balance. The director has staged the picture with proper atmosphere, the stage scenes being full of color and charm. It is a story which is logical in every particular. Miss Griffith gives an appealing portrayal of the heroine, while Charles Hammond as the butler, and David Torrance as the aged aristocrat, give effective performances.—Length, 5 Reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Celia Hughes ..... Corinne Griffith
Cary Grant ..... Kenneth Harlan
Daniel Milton ..... David Torrance
Dunbar ..... William David
Andrew Ferris ..... Charles Hammond
Roger Dayne ..... Henry Sedley
Felice Huxley ..... Regina Quinn
Mrs. Starr ..... Dorothy Walters
Starr ..... Dan Duffy

By John Lynch.
Directed by Charles Maigne.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Received Payment," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————, is a typical Corinne Griffith picture. It presents a combination of chorus girl and society atmosphere and is offered by a cast second to none. Such well known players as Kenneth Harlan, David Torrance, William David and Charles Hammond support the attractive star. The picture is based upon a story by John Lynch with the action taking place for the most part in Mrs. Starr's theatrical boarding house, the Milton home in Washington Square, New York, and the auditorium of the Colgonda roof.

The heroine, Celia, returns to her boarding house aftcr a successful season on the road and is offered a contract to star in the roof garden show. She signs it, but her father informs her that she is the granddaughter of Milton and must assume her position in the world. Complications follow and at a time when things are moving smoothly, Celia decides to leave the Milton household and fulfill her contract. At the premiere performance a tragedy occurs in which several wrongs are righted and Celia finds that real happiness grows out of great sorrow. The picture is well staged and the story unfolds with ever increasing interest.

PROGRAM READER

Love will find a way! It's a time-worn adage, but true in all ages and climes. It is a vital subject with young and old and the foundation of most stories. Corinne Griffith in "Received Payment" illustrates this old adage from a new angle. The tale is full of love, emotion, action, suspense and human interest. It is truly something different. It is a story of a toe-dancer who received a contract to star in a big New York production and then found herself a society leader, grand-daughter of one of Gotham's most aristocratic families. It presents a contrasting of society life with that in a theatrical boarding house. Miss Griffith is surrounded by a cast of screen favorites. The picture will be presented next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

Present this picture as a story of society and stage life—of a young girl who found the way to love after experiencing great suffering and sorrow. You can put over an effective prologue with a ballet dancer being featured. The background can be the entire stage with a pretty set or curtains enclosing it. Any lithographs or stills you offer with Miss Griffith appearing in ballet costume will excite interest. Bill it as an appealing romance which contains plenty of heart interest and the contrast of the ways of society and the ways of the stage. The title suggests many ideas for novel exploitation.

"WINNING WITH WITS"
(Fox)

Melodramatic Story Makes Good Program Picture

HERE is a human interest story which always excites sympathy for the heroine because of the difficult task she set for herself in securing enough evidence to release her innocent father from prison. Written by H. H. Van Loan a writer who knows the value of situation and climax, it gives to Barbara Bedford a picture which fits her pleasing personality like the proverbial glove. With such a role it is certain she could do no wrong even though for the sake of argument she possessed little dramatic expression. But Miss Bedford has demonstrated that she will go far because of the sincerity and pleasing quality of her work. Mr. Van Loan has started her here with flying colors.

Any heroine who is struggling for a living upon the stage always excites attention. Life behind the footlights is ever fascinating to the layman. The glow and color of such a life is sure in its appeal to the uninitiated. The little chorus girl learns that her father has been railroaded to prison, and obtaining a leave of absence she is determined to bring his oppressors to justice. She beards the lion in his den and through asserting her feminine qualities, leading the magnate on through subtleties, innuendoes and flatteries, succeeds in her mission. It is a task. The author has seen to it that the lion does not jump into the fire too quickly. And though you suspect that she will triumph there is enough detail of action and suspense to keep you at attention.

The magnate is a romancer as well as a crooked oil promoter. He would wi nthe girl by fair means or foul if possible. His young business partner is suspected by the girl, too. And the conflict is well established when she finds herself falling in love and for a time doesn't know what to do—whether to keep at her task or abide by the power of love. But the youth vindicates himself and works independently of her to get at the bottom of the missing funds. The action transpires mostly in the studio—with the scenes divided evenly between stage sets, the office interiors of the magnate and his home. It is told compactly and to the point without any noticeable reliance upon extraneous detail. One little flaw intrudes which shows the culprit stealing the papers and bonds from his safe while his office window is open and the curtain unlowered. He is caught in the act. And the father is released. Harry Northrup has as much to do as Miss Bedford, but he is not a good type for the magnate. He is hesitant of manner and does not suggest big business. Wilson Hummell is the aggressive stage manager and Edwin B. Tilton the father. Length 4455 ft.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

King ..... William Scott
Corday ..... Harry S. Northrup

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Winning With Wits," a dramatic story of a girl's fight to save her father from prison, is Barbara Bedford's second picture since she rose to stardom. This feature written by H. H. Van Loan, one of the most prolific writers for the screen, will be shown at the ———— theatre next ————. It is said to be brimful of thrills and action, with a novel twist and peculiarly tense climax. Miss Bedford plays a dual role. She is first seen as a young actress with a road show who, learning that her father has been railroaded to prison on a trumped-up charge, determines to free him by using her wits in punishing the guilty. Her persistence carries her through many dramatic adventures. The man higher-up has covered his tracks pretty well but he has neglected to provide for the danger of falling in love. When he attempts to intrigue the heroine—she uncovers her evidence and he is caught in the trap. She succeeds in winning freedom for her father and also a husband as well. The picture is always tense with good suspense, is capably acted and staged in a creditable manner. The leading man is William Scott.

PROGRAM READER

Do you believe it is a girl's duty to stand by her father, no matter what the circumstances? If your father were accused of a crime of which he declared he was innocent, what would you do? Would you go into the mud and mire of business life and fight for him? If you would, you'll want to see the way Mary Sudan plays the big game of wits in "Winning With Wits," the new Fox picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Barbara Bedford as the star. The story is filled with sympathetic situations, dealing with the efforts of a lovely girl to free this father from prison. H. H. Van Loan is the author. He will be remembered as the writer of "The Virgin of Stamboul," and "The Great Redeemer."

SUGGESTIONS

This is Barbara Bedford's second starring vehicle. You can exploit it as an interesting story of a girl who was determined to right the wrong done her father by his unscrupulous employers. Feature it as a story of a girl's pluck—of a girl who entered the business world to see that justice was done. Feature the star and tell that she made a hit in her first picture—and that she is entitled to stardom through her excellent work with Tourneur in "The Last of the Mohicans." Play up the author too—he is the writer of many screen successes—including "The Great Redeemer" and "The Virgin of Stamboul." The usual scheme of press notices, a little play with lobby stills will help put it over.

CATCH LINES

What would you do if your father was convicted of a crime and you knew that he was innocent? Would you fight for him? See "Winning With Wits."

The stirring story of a girl's fight to vindicate her father's honor. See Barbara Bedford in "Winning With Wits."

"FIVE DAYS TO LIVE"
(R-C Pictures)

Chinese Melodrama—Oriental Intrigue

THIS is not one of those atmospherical marathons, starting in one country, darting to another, offering a glimpse of the Chinese quarter in San Francisco, thence to Limehouse, London, which in the end usually impresses one as a travelogue with trimmings. On the contrary, it begins in China, develops in an Oriental city and comes to a satisfactory conclusion in the same place. Therefore, it is altogether a Chinese play, the principal characters representing Chinese in several different stations of life.

It is delivered by a competent cast, well staged, miserably cut. In fact, the juggling of the material borders upon serious danger. Both the star and Tsuru Aoki, who plays opposite Sessue Hayakawa, are consistently good.

The story tells of a romance between a poverty stricken dreamer, who carves idols and various images, always with the same face, that of the little slavey with whom he is secretly in love. With no funds with which to purchase the idol of his dreams, Tai Leung lives along, unhappily, until, one day, through an accident, he is brought in close contact with the girl.

Soon after, a Mandarin, of wealth, sees and desires the youngster, although it is rumored two wives are already at rest, on account of his fatal brutalities. The rich Chinaman bargains with the master of the slavey, who represents himself as her father. The marriage is about to take place, when the young dreamer appears with sufficient evidence of suddenly accumulated great wealth, in time to stop proceedings and bribe the step-father to sell Ko Ai to him.

In order to obtain this wealth, however, the youthful Oriental has solemnly promised to die, within five days, in the stead of a dangerous criminal known as "The Wolf," under penalty of death. According to law a substitute may be provided. The terror of the district has directed his successor in death to a cave where great riches are hidden in jewels and currency. As the days pass and the time comes when the young husband must shatter the bride's great happiness, yet leave her well provided for, there is a tearful scene, of parting. The bride plans to inhale poisonous incense with a view to suicide at the moment when her husband is under the great knife, used to sever heads of disobedient Chinese, when, prayers to Buddha seem to have been heard, the real criminal dying just in time to save the substitute and after a frantic race to where the girl lies sleeping gradually into eternal sleep, the young husband arrives in time to revive her. A Chinese romance, Oriental atmosphere and settings above the average. Six reels.—Lillian R. Gale.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

At the ———— on ———— the great Oriental melodrama, starring Sessue Hayakawa, will be the occasion of great satisfaction to the followers of the Japanese photoplay actor and his attractive wife, who enacts the leading feminine role. "Five Days to Live" is a romance, second only to the immortal "Romeo and Juliet." In this case, to save his beloved from life as the wife of a cruel Mandarin, a Chinese poverty stricken sculptor, substitutes for a criminal under sentence of death, for money enough to make the slavey whom he loves, independently wealthy. At the last second fate intervenes. For thrills and romance, "Five Days to Live" is sure fire.

PROGRAM READER

Sessue Hayakawa, star of "Five Days to Live," which comes to this theatre on ————, has the happy faculty of introducing something new in practically every one of his offerings, distributed by R-C pictures. For instance, in the latest picture play above mentioned, he has surrounded himself with an all Oriental cast, and those who are not Chinese, according to the story, are Japanese, identified with similar Oriental characteristics. In addition to the star, Sessue Hayakawa, his wife, Tsuru Aoki, the cast includes Goro Kino, Misao Seki, Toyo Fujita and George Kuawa.

CATCH LINES

If you had only "Five Days to Live," what would you do the last day?

Love that prefers five days' companionship with the object of one's affections, rather than life of indefinite length without that love, is the kind Romeo and Juliet experienced and the kind depicted in "Five Days to Live."

Sessue Hayakawa's latest production. A thrilling Chinese melodrama, presenting the star in one of his most interesting pictures.

Proper Care and Operation of the Motor-Generator Equipment

Common Troubles Eliminated Thru Attention to Simple Precautions

The electrical equipment supplying power to the projection machines, spot lights, flood lights and stereopticon lamp may be reasonably styled the heart of a modern motion picture theatre. An attractive entrance, pleasing interior decorations, ample ventilation and good music are all desirable and necessary but all of these count for little if poor projection is permitted. The patron of the theatre wishes to see and has the right to expect good, clear snappy pictures with a minimum of flicker and of uniform brilliancy except of course where the obvious artistic effect in the film produces less intense lighting of the screen.

To produce the desired results it is not only necessary to have installed the proper type of motor-generator equipment and control but this apparatus must be given a reasonable amount of care and inspection to assure that it will function continuously and correctly.

The care of this electrical equipment usually falls upon the shoulders of the projectionist who should acquaint himself with the apparatus by studying the instruction in the form of tags, leaflets, etc., supplied with the equipment by the manufacturers.

The motor generator should be installed in a clean well ventilated room with sufficient space around it so that all parts may be inspected readily. The question of sufficient ventilation is one which most persons especially architects and contractors fail to appreciate. If the temperature in the motor generator room can be kept from rising appreciably above that of the outdoor air, considerable more capacity can be obtained from the equipment without causing its temperature to reach a dangerous value. In this connection it is well to mention that most persons do not realize what constitutes a dangerous temperature for the parts of a motor or generator. Modern electric machines are designed and constructed of materials which does not become damaged unless the temperature exceeds 90 deg. C. or 194 deg. F. This permits a temperature rise of 50 deg. F. above a surrounding air temperature of 40 deg. C. or 104 deg. F. Obviously, therefore, if the air temperature in the motor generator room is allowed to increase much above 100 deg. F. the capacity which can be obtained from the equipment will be proportionally less.

Efficient Service

Very often considerable trouble is experienced in obtaining efficient service from the motor generator set. This may be caused through a defective apparatus. However, in the great majority of cases it is traced to lack of proper care and operation. This article, prepared by Mr. A. M. Candy, Engineering Department of the Westinghouse Electric and Mfg. Co., will be found very helpful in securing good results from the projection control equipment. The care and procedure or installation and operation as outlined in this article should save the projectionist much time and worry and the exhibitor considerable expense. While motor-generators as a rule are sturdy, reliable machines, they demand considerable attention as does any machine doing heavy constant service.—Tech. Ed.

Each time the motor generator is started up the operator should inspect the bearings to make sure that the oil rings are revolving and carrying oil upon the shaft journals. If these rings fail to roll on the shaft or if the oil level in the bearing housing is too low, the bearing and journal will become overheated and burn out the babbitt, thereby putting the set out of commission.

The motor generator must be protected from water which may come through open windows, faulty ventilators or other sources. If water gets into the windings or on the commutator a burned out machine will result.

Oil should not be allowed to collect inside the frames of the machines nor on the windings as it will cause the insulation on the windings or rubber covering on leads and cross connections to gradually disintegrate, grounding the winding to the frame of the machine, which will result in burning out the windings.

The commutator should be wiped off carefully occasionally with a clean piece of canvas cloth. If the commutator needs a little lubrication a piece of paraffin rubbed lightly across the commutator surface will suffice. Do not put oil on the commutator as it will cause the binder in the mica between commutator bars to disintegrate. It will also collect between the bars especially where the mica is undercut and will collect carbon dust which may short circuit the commutator and cause the generator to "buck over" or flash across from one set of brushes to the other.

Whenever it becomes necessary to insert new brushes they should be ground in to fit the surface of the commutator. To do this properly only one brush should be ground in at a time and the rest should be pulled out of the holders so they do not rest on the commutator. A piece of number 00 sand paper should be placed on the commutator with sand sides toward the brush. The brush should be pressed down against the sand paper which should then be pulled along under the brush in the direction of rotation of commutator. The sand paper must be kept against the commutator so that the edges of the brush surface will not be beveled off. Emery cloth must not be

These two views offer an interesting study of theatre design as practiced in British West Indies. The Empire is equipped with all the modern projection equipment and presents Paramount Artcraft pictures Some of the patrons are very well satisfied when given the comfort of hardwood benches which is contrasted to the demands of our most indiscriminating public. A spacious cool atmosphere which prevails throughout the theatre is in keeping with the climate. The Empire is located in Trinidad

Orlando's Fine New Theatre The Beacham, Opens to Public

Tribune Bureau, San Juan Hotel, Orlando, Dec. 10.—(Special).—When the first patron at the opening of the new Beecham Theatre, Orlando, Fla., walked up to the box-office and bought his ticket the Beechams Investment Company had spent $175,000 to give Orlando and middle Florida its most beautiful theatrical structure embodying the approved achievements of human ingenuity along modern lines of building and equipping this class of enterprises.

The Beacham Theatre will follow a policy of offering high-class feature photoplays and will only vary from it in so far as local insistence indicates such a doctrine. Its acoustic properties make it especially desirable for concert entertainments and the program for the ensuing season calls for a quota of these, but not sufficient in number to obscure the prevailing idea of public and management alike that it is a home for picture plays. Other equipment of stage and its appurtenances in the way of loft, fly galleries, dressing rooms, illumination provision, scenic investiture, properties, etc., make it available for the adequate accommodation and presentation of touring attractions of the highest order, and a sufficient number of this class will be offered that there may be no singleness of policy conducive to staleness but rather a variety sufficient to appeal to all amusement appetites.

The stage is the largest in Orlando, the dimensions being about 50x25 feet, and 60 feet in height, with a proscenium opening of 27x29 feet. The interior of the auditorium is finished in white and ivory, the theatre itself being a modern concrete structure, with exterior stucco trim of rainbow shell, fronting on Orange avenue and occupying 77½ feet by 141 feet. It is located just opposite the new eleven-story Ange Hotel now in process of construction and just north of the San Juan Hotel, the construction of the new ten-story wing of which began simultaneously with the opening of the theatre, when the first excavations were started for the hotel foundations.

The seating capacity of the house is 1,100, of which 266 seats are in the balcony, and the provision of ample and large exits arranged on all sides of the structure insure that a capacity audience may be deposited on the streets in less than three minutes in the event of any untoward accident. The seats come from Grand Rapids, Mich., and are said to be the most comfortable and best procurable. They are in a veneered birch, finished in a French gray, blending harmoniously with the floor coverings and general interior scheme of decoration.

In the construction of this theatre the Beachams Investment Company has endeavored to give to the Orlando public a building commensurate with the wonderful advancement and growth of the city and a theatre of beautiful architecture and breadth of plan, something to which Orlando may call its visitors' attention with pardonable pride.

The pipe organ is not only a feature of construction, but an idea of harmonies that is unusual in a theatre of the size. It was built and installed by the Austin Company, of Hartford, Conn., and is what is known as a divided organ of three manuals and pedals. The pipes are contained in two specially built swell chambers, one on either side of the stage, which have direct openings into the auditorium.

There are twenty-four speaking stops in the organ. There is a set of twenty cathedral chimes and more than 1,000 pipes, all controlled from forty-seven stop tablets. A wide range of orchestral instruments and effects is simulated and the tones of the oboe, flute, various horns, trap effects and the strings and brass are pleasingly discernible. Orlando residents may well take pride in this organ, for it is not only the largest organ in Orlando, but it is the largest theatre organ in Florida.

Prof, Herman F. Siewert, of the Criterion Theatre, on Broadway, in New York City, has been engaged as organist, and one of the popular features of the winter season will be a series of recitals by this distinguished artist on Sunday afternoons, no picture or amusement program being rendered. In addition, his solo playing will mark each weekday performance.

The projection is in charge of J. W. Russell, who came from Los Angeles for special engagement with the Beacham Theatre. The projecting machines are in multiple units, and of a type and pattern embodying recent patents, some of them under letters patent issued as late as September of this year. The Beacham Theatre projecting machines are equipped with a speed control device, under this patent, which has been said by the experts in such matters to supply the only thing heretofore lacking to make the projection of pictures perfect.

A development of marked aid in the perfection of picture producing is found in the picture curtain or projection screen, which is of the kind technically known as gold fibre minusa, which means in every-day language that the screen is so tinted with gold color that the color tints of the pictures thrown upon it are absorbed.

Reopened Christmas

Renovated throughout, the Princess Theatre at Hartford, Conn., was re-opened Christmas night under new control. Lessees of the house, one of the best motion-picture theatres in Connecticut's capital city and that part of New England, are I. J. Hoffman, of Ansonia, Conn., who is interested in five theatres about the state, and Martin A. Kelleher, of Middletown, Conn., part owner in two theatres. Henry Needles, for a number of years manager of the Strand Theatre at Bayonne, N. J., is to be manager of the new house. He intends making a feature of the "noon-hour" program, intended especially for business men and office employes. Because of the many employed in Hartford's insurance offices, it is expected that the "noon-hour" program will be especially popular and well patronized.

Improvements at the Princess have been many, including changes from top to bottom. New seats have been placed, the stage repaired, a new super-light screen installed and the latest type projecting equipment added. The house has also been repainted outside and in.

The screen, which has been erected in the most improved manner in order to cause the least eye strain, is set near the back of the stage with blue silk draperies on each side. The exit doors have been equipped with panic latches, while 12 hand extinguishers have been placed throughout the building, two of them in the operator's booth. An asbestos curtain, set in metal fire channels, has been placed. The house is arranged for a seating capacity of 850.—AGARD.

POWER'S PROJECTORS

The extra large area "cubical capacity" of Type "E" Lamphouse prevents overheating with arcs of high amperage, and permits ready access and adjustment. Ventilation is scientifically correct and two openings in front of lamphouse facilitate cleaning.

Upper carbon holder accommodates carbons from 5/8" to 1 1/8" inclusive; lower carbon holder sizes 5/16" to 3/4" inclusive and "V" shaped clamps assure a rigid hold on the carbons without breaking them.

The condensers may be easily cleaned as condenser mounts are supported on strong gray iron frame, hinged to the lamphouse—opening outwardly, thereby bringing mounts entirely clear of the lamphouse. Extra heavy gray iron holders insure a perfect alignment of the condensers, and to hold them firmly in place a "V" shaped edge fits securely into a "V" shaped groove on the condenser mount. The condenser nearest to the Arc adjusts from the outside of the lamphouse.

The lateral backward and forward adjustments are made on lower carbon, so that when adjusting the lamp the crater remains unchanged.

A heavy gray iron dowser inside lamphouse protects the condenser from flame and sudden heat when striking the arc.

Pilot light burns when door is opened and illuminates lamphouse when changing carbons and making adjustments.

The lamp is very heavy throughout and thoroughly insulated. It has been severely tested by the National Board of Fire Underwriters up to 2000 volts A. C.

Wire clamps and carbon holders are made of one piece of metal to prevent poor connections and arcing.

Rack rods are heavy, square steel bars held with a spring cover to give greater wearing surface and amply take care of expansion. This also prevents the rack bars binding when subjected to the intense heat of the Arc.

A worm wheel and gear for raising and lowering the lamp gives additional rigidity.

Both carbon holders are equipped with clamp designed to replace lugs on the wires. The clamps having a series of interlocking corrugations, top and bottom, make a perfect connection when the wire is clamped between them.

A Study of Colored Light and Connection of Light and Music

The MOTION PICTURE NEWS has been particularly fortunate in securing a series of articles which treat on the subjects of "Colored Light in the Motion Picture Theatre," "Colored Light on Colored Subjects," "Decorative Colored Lighting," "Light and Music," and "Stage Lighting."

These articles have been prepared by A. L. Powell, Illuminating Engineering Dept. of the Edison Lamp Works. Mr. Powell is considered by many as the leading authority on colored light.

The exhibitor, stage director, musician, electrician, and, in general, all connected with the theatre will find these articles exceedingly helpful as well as interesting. To the best of our knowledge the subjects of this series of articles have never before been treated so as to lend themselves to the practical theatrical man's point of view.

Our public of today is continuously becoming more discriminating, demanding of the theatre man constant improvement toward the perfection of the theatre. The subject of light perhaps receives the least attention and still many consider that light has unlimited possibilities. The general atmosphere in which we view a picture determines to a large degree the effectiveness of the picture. Light is one of the chief factors employed in producing this desired psychological effect. Also we know that there is a connection between light and music. That is to say, different lights harmonize with the various kinds of music.

It is suggested that a thorough study be made of these subjects treated in Mr. Powell's articles as they will permit the practical adaption of the theory of colored light and music and light.

New Twenty-Eight Hundred Seat Loew State Theatre a Splendid House

Los Angeles Home of Silver Screen in Southwest Chain an Imposing Edifice

With the opening of the new twenty-eight hundred seat Loew State theatre, located on tthe southwest corner of the intersection of 7th and Broadway, Los Angeles, the west coast film city, has a new and greater theatre both in seating capacity and splendor. The building of twelve floors with tan brick and terra cotta facing is one of the imposing edifices of Los Angeles. The shops and offices occupy 38 ft. front and depth fronting on Broadway and Seventh street and the auditorium and stage occupies a space of 95 x 127 ft.

Entrance to the foyer can be made from either the Broadway or Seventh Street lobbies each 25 x 18 ft.

The Loew's State theatre building, Los Angeles, recently opened

The foyer extends the full width of the auditorium on the first floor and from this there are five entrances. The 15 ft. marble stairway leads to the mezzanine floor, where there is a parlor the full width of the auditorium, 126 ft. x 24 ft. Entrance to the balcony is made over ramps from the mezzanine parlor, the landing being just above four rows of loge seats and the upper portion of the balcony. The seating is about equally divided between the first floor and the balcony, with 126 loge seats and 18 boxes of 9 seats each in the front. There are three fire escapes from each side of the balcony and three from the mezzanine parlor.

The projection machines are located 8 ft. above the top of the blocking, giving a throw of 123 ft. to the screen at an angle of 41 degs. The projection equipment consists of 3 Powers 6B type E projecting machines, each fitted with Enterprise arc controllers. There is an Enterprise rewinding machine with 10 reel capacity storage cabinet, 2 Bausch & Lomb model C dissolving stereopticon 150 amp. Watkins generator set and 2 Holtsmiller spot lamps. A special effect machine is being built and is to be installed later.

One feature of distinct advantage installed in the projection booth is that seven remote control switch panels are installed, one between each machine so that it is possible for the operator to control any machine from any position in the booth. Fire shutters over the projection and lookout port holes operated by thermostat control closing all port holes automatically in the event the temperature rises to greater than 78 degs. The projection room is in charge of W. A. Cook, who is assisted by Joe Foy and many of the devices installed were perfected by these two men.

The proscenium arch is 48 ft. in width and 28 in depth and the stage contains the standard equipment installed in all of Loew's houses throughout the country.

The theatre is equipped with a Moeller manual organ with a consol of six keyboards. There is also sufficient space in the orchestra pit for additional musicians so that a full symphony orchestra can be used if desired.

The Loew State theatre is under the supervision of Ackerman & Harris, the Western representatives of Loew theatres, and Nat Holt is resident manager. Other officers of the theatre are William Shoup, house manager; Fred McSpadden, assistant house mgr.; G. B. Lindsley, publicity manager; H. P. Cressman, auditor; Lucy Spencer, secretary to manager. The orchestra is directed by Don Philippine, assisted by J. Muliers.

Making the Most of Your Space

There may be times when you feel the need of gaining considerable space for advertising purposes. Your lobby seems too small, or perhaps it is already overcrowded.

First thing you know your entrance is "jammed" with posters and photographs from the inner door to the marquee. And there is no room to expand farther

When you bump up against the problem of conserving or gaining space, or creating elbow room for frames, and so on—then it's time to consult with those who specialize in lobby planning.

No use spending money for advice on the subject unless you are certain a complete renovation is necessary. Any maker of frames is willing to give you the full benefit of his experiences without obligation. The longer he has been in business and the more lobbies he has equipped, the more valuable his advice.

He may be able to suggest improvements that never occurred to you before. At least he can design special frames that will increase the poster capacity of your lobby. Whether you buy the frames or not is strictly up to you—get his suggestions, anyhow.

The Grand theatre, Indianapolis, called on the Newman Manufacturing Company of Cincinnati for advice not long ago, and the illustration shows the four special photograph frames they bought. The columns were so narrow that ordinary frames were almost worthless. So these special deep cabinets were devised to exactly double the capacity.

For best results consult with manufacturers who know their business from A to Izzard.

In convenient but inconspicuous places place fire extinguishers, buckets of sand and rubber blankets. Over same place a red cardboard sign, so when needed they can be located at once. This not alone affords protection, but keeps down the insurance rate.

EASTMAN FILM CEMENT

Cut where you will, splice with Eastman Film Cement and for all practical purposes the reel's original resistance to strain both in projection and re-wind is restored. The splice is secure against break or buckle.

Eastman-made and Eastman-tested as the presence of this seal on the container testifies:

Eastman Film Cement is the only cement that may be used successfully with either Regular or Safety film. It may be obtained in 1 oz. and 16 oz. bottles, and gallon containers.

P. M. Abbott,
Technical Editor Motion Picture News:

I have just read with much interest your article on Mazda Projection, as I am using the same equipment. We installed the Mazda Equipment a month ago and have given it a thorough test, and it has more than proved satisfactory. I am projecting a picture eleven by fourteen feet on a level with a Crystal Bead Screen with a sixty-five foot throw, the picture is clear and distinct from all parts of the house, and all eye strain is relieved. A clear, steady picture all the time, which is the pride of all Operators.

This equipment should be welcomed by all Managers and Operators, as it is a great saving in the light bill and a boon to the Operator, for the intense heat and the carbon gas from the arc is done away with. It is truly an ideal equipment, and I cannot praise it too highly. As you say, there are many yet who are in doubt as to this equipment and I will admit that I was one that was hard to convince that you could obtain good results with it. Now I am a strong booster for it and I feel sure that as the boys try it out they will praise it also.

I hope to hear from some other Operator who is using this equipment and his results. This is my first letter to this Department (although I have been a constant reader of it for five years), and hope it will find space. We take all the Trade Journals here, but we READ the News.

Success to your Department.
Yours for better projection,
C. B. Boughton.

Friend Ed.:

I am enclosing a few samples of film taken out of the Goldwin Feature "The Penalty." What do you think of an exchange that will send out a film in such condition? Almost any kind of an inspection would have detected such

Cooperation

It is the aim of this department to be of the greatest possible aid to the projectionist. The projectionist is in a position to help the motion picture industry in its general advancement. The more perfect the mechanical presentation of the picture becomes the more pleasing will be its effect on the audience. Everyone should feel a pride in his work, striving constantly to become expert.

There are innumerable subjects that could be treated in these columns which would better acquaint the projectionist with his profession. None of us know all there is to be known on any subject, the person with foresight is constantly watching for opportunities to enlarge upon his general knowledge especially upon subjects treating on his own field.

To make our department as useful as possible to its readers it would be well for the projectionists to suggest the articles or discussions that would be of most general interest. We would like you to feel that this department is at your service, just ask us all the questions you can think of or if you have in mind an article that would be of value, just write the Editor. Go to it fellows, let's hear from you.

places. I put 1½ hours of my time putting the film in shape to run, only to have it tear, so I had three stops in one show. Now members of the N. A. M. L., let's go after such prints, let's do all in our power to eliminate them.

Hoping I may be of assistance to the N. A. M. L., I remain,
Yours truly,

National Anti-Misframe League, New York:

In order to start the new year off right, myself and assistant are sending in application for membership in the National Anti-Misframe League, of which we hope to become members soon.

Although we are not members of the I. A. T. S. E., as there is no local here, but if there is a chance for us in the N. A. M. L. we would like to become members soon, as we think that it is a great thing, and think that every man in the projection room that has his mind on better screen results, should be a member of the N. A. M. L.

Yours truly,
Joe Dill.

Dear Editor:

I want to call your attention to a picture that I ran December 15th. I removed 58 Misframes, which made me sore, as we know there is no need of any misframes. An operator that can't patch a film without misframing, I figure is no operator at all. I hear of so many operators kicking because they can't get a light on their screen. Always keep your machine clean; don't have them floating in oil. This throws oil all over the film and makes a poor picture. I have been told I have as good as any light in the state. Respectfully yours,
Arthur Nally,

Gentlemen:

I am writing you a few lines to say I got your letter about a week ago and was glad to hea from you.

In my operating room I have 2 Powers 6 machines and a Fort Wayne Compensarc. M booth is large and well ventilated. I am chie operator for the Rand R. Lyric and Lindse theatres and it keeps me busy to keep four ma chines in good shape.

The Rand R. Lyric has a Powers 6B and Motiograph De Luxe and a Fort Wayne Com pensarc. The wiring is good in both operatin rooms. I have been operating for over a year.

I have seen some good equipments in th News in some of the letters which the operato have sent in.

I think this National Anti Misframe Leag is the best league I have seen and I think th operators who are not members should join It is the thing for operators.

Yours very truly,

Dear Sir:

I am a projectionist at the Empire theatr Mercedes, Texas, and would like to join th league. I have been receiving some very ba films and I think the N. A. M. L. is a very goo thing. We have some projectionist here, up th valley, that uses punch marks, they don't onl ruin the film, but they make it hard for me an others, so I think I will join the league and t to make it easy for the other fellow.

NEW STATE THEATRE OPENING

Playhouse Ready for Premiere on Thursday Night

Declared to be the finest and one of the most complete and thoroughly equipped playhouses in this section of New York state, the State theatre will be formally opened at 7 o'clock on Thursday night.

The moving picture booth, which is one of the biggest features of the theatre, was equipped and installed by the Independent Movie Supply Company, of New York City. It is the last word in the art of picture projection and is complete in every detail with the most modern automatic appliances, and is housed in an absolutely fireproof booth.

up with its progress and I class it as the best thing that was ever organized both for projectionists and exchanges.

I am member No. 1269, having joined while employed in the Regent theatre, Marianna, Ark., and am now with the same manager, Mr. R. T. Megibben, in the Capitol theatre of this city. My projection equipment consists of two Simplex machines, Gundlach lens and a D 50-50 transverter and I really believe that I have as good projection as will be found anywhere. My throw is 106 ft. and we are using a Gold Fibre screen. I have run the above named machines for more than a year and we have yet to spend anything for their upkeep, although they have been through a fire which practically destroyed the theatre.

I have noticed B. C. Harrington's argument as to what causes film scratches and I wish to state that "A" is correct. Film can easily be scratched by tightening while rewinding—very easily. Regardless of how clean you keep your operating room there is always dirt and grit present which will get on the film and of course when you hold a film to "tighten" it you are causing friction.

Well, fellows, I guess I had better "cut this" for this time as I'd hate for my first letter to hit the basket. Next time I'm going to send in a drawing of my motor rewind and a few other things I have devised to help me in my work.

Here's to the League. May it prosper! Believe me I am doing my best to live up to my pledge.

Each exit must be kept clean, also the regulation illustrated sign placed over same.

On steep stairways affix a hand rail. People become confused at times, and also feel more at ease when assisted by the above. This especially applies to the invalid and the aged groping in the semi-darkness of a motion picture theatre.

NATIONAL ANTI-MISFRAME LEAGUE PLEDGE

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Good Business in Texas

The weekly reports which are constantly received indicate a very brisk business in motion picture theatre construction throughout the central southwest.

The Gayety and Princess theatres at Dallas, Texas, closed their doors on December 18th, for the reason that the building is to be torn down to be replaced with a modern structure, which will house a clothing store and a movie theatre. The theatre will be called the Fox and will show pictures exclusively at popular prices.

Harry Simon will erect a new theatre at Akard and Pacific Streets, Dallas, Texas, in the near future.

The Buffalo theatre at Pawnee, Okla, was remodelled and will show both pictures and vaudeville.

Slocum & Blackmore have opened a new movie theatre at Woodward, Okla.

The Dixie theatre at Coleman, Texas, has closed down for remodelling, wiring and the increasing of its seating capacity.

A new movie theatre will be built at Fairview, Okla.

Proper Care of Motor Generator

used for this work because the emery dust will embed itself in the face of the brushes and cause rapid wear of the commutator.

The ballast rheostats provided with the equipment require very little attention. However, it is advisable to inspect the contact arm occasionally to assure that the contactor portion presses firmly against the buttons. If the buttons or contactor are burned or pitted they should be polished with sand paper.

Especially in the case of a new installation after the contractors have turned the new theatre over to the management all the connection should be checked against the diagram, Figure 1, to assure that the generator ballast, rheostats, control panel and lamps will function properly. It is particularly important to have the positive side of the circuit connected to the upper carbon in each lamp so that the crater will be formed on this carbon. This white hot crater produces about 80 per cent. of the total light in the arc and therefore it should be formed on the upper carbon so it may be effectively directed toward the condensers. The wiring to the control panel mounting and the meters should be also inspected. It is particularly important that the leads from the ammeter to the shunt be those supplied with the meter and provided with special slotted cable terminals. The meter is calibrated to read correctly with the shunt and these particular leads. If the leads are exchanged for others, or if they are altered by cutting and splicing to change the length, the resistance of the leads will be changed and the meter readings will be far from correct. For the same reason the voltmeter terminals should not be connected to the ammeter leads but should be connected by individual wires to the generator circuit.

Premiere Presentation of "Sin Flood"

Complete Music Score with Editorial Comment by E. R. Rogers, Manager, Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn.

"MUSIC hath its charms" in a motion picture theatre only when intelligently adapted to the picture projected on the screen, and not directed to the aesthetic surroundings of the theatre. Interpretation of a motion picture with music calls for not only careful thought but arduous duties on the part of those who have that portion of the entertainment in their care. A photoplay must be expressed as the author and director conceived it, or it dies aborning in a celluloid mausoleum so far as the public is concerned.

There are many fine productions which fairly scream for expression, but yet some theatre directors permit the temperaments of their orchestra leaders to dominate, and as a result the musical programs are in the nature of concerts, and ingenuity of author and director are lost in meaningless sound and flickering screen lights.

Visualization of a picture before any attempt is made to lay out the score is the essential thing, as the writer sees it. Then the various situations can be intelligently expressed. Many a picture has been made morbid with musical renditions when the idea of the author and director was to the contrary. If the music is directed to appeal to the emotions of the spectator and at the same time harmonize with the dramatic situations of the play, then it has been successfully handled. But—how many exhibitors get this result from their orchestras?

"The Sin Flood" is a picture that makes a high bid for proper music motifs. The Tivoli theatre, so far as the writer knows, is the first theatre in the states to play this unusual production. (Correct me if I am wrong.) The picture was booked for January 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th. Arrangements were made for the first screening—the initial step in our process of visualization—both orchestra director and organist were called into the screen room. The picture was viewed, but no notes taken. Then a general discussion ensued—a policy to which we always adhere. Screenings beings conducted at night, the next day was employed in searching out themes that would cover the general idea of the story. Here are our first notations:

Poppy's Theme—"Poppy Blossom Dreams"—Pascal.
Minister O'Neill's theme—"Grail Motif" from "Parsifal" and "Palms."
Fraser's theme—"Kundry Motif" from "Parsifal."
Billy Bear's Theme—"A Young Man's Fancy" from "The Music Box."
Nordling's theme—"Norwegian Serenade."
Higgins' theme—"He May Have Seen Better Days."
Levee Joe's theme—"The Arkansas Traveler."
Charlie's theme—"On the Mississippi."
Flood theme—"Flying Dutchman."
General themes for group situations: "The Land of Beginning Again Where Broken Dreams Come True." "Friends" from "The Rollicking Girl." "Blessed Be the Tie That Binds."

Now for the musical interpretation of "The Sin Flood." The picture opens with a view of the Mississippi River. What is more appropriate than "On the Mississippi"? The town of "Cottonia" is shown. Here "Waiting for the Robert E. Lee" is interposed. Our next direct cue is the demonstration of the water tight doors in the Stratton Cafe. The flood theme is suggested. The scene then shifts to the Cotton Exchange exterior. Billy Bear, the young clerk, appears. An atmosphere of liveliness precedes the tremendous action that is to follow. "The Missouri Waltz" lends to the happiness. Then "Poppy of the Chorus" is introduced, which is a signal for "Poppy Blossoms." A flash back to the saloon and "On the Mississippi" is taken up again. Poppy and Billy appear. "Poppy Blossoms" is used again. Then comes Levee Joe into the story. The director's idea was not only to put over a clever bit in the wreck's inability to sense what is happening around him, but to inject humor to break the tense situations. "The Arkansas Traveler" must be appropriate, for are not Arkansas and Louisiana closely located? We then flash back to the cafe. Billy, Poppy and the girls are here. "Poppy Blossoms" is a tuneful and suggestive air. Into the story walks Fraser, an abrupt, ominous character, which bids for something heavy like the Kundry Motif from Parsifal. Immediately follows the appearance of Levee Joe, and "The Arkansas Traveler" is a decided contrast to the Kundry Motif. Brandy Swift is next on. He meets Fraser. They have been enemies for ten years. Fraser's theme again. The scene then shifts to the luncheon party. The cue is "Poppy Blossoms." Billy Bear gives a toast, and here we use "Absinthe Frappe." A flash back to the bar. Fraser's theme. Levee Joe walks in and turns around and walks out again. "He Walked Right In and Turned Around" is immediately suggested for comedy relief. Scene shifts to luncheon party. Billy Bear is gay. He kisses Poppy—"A Young Man's Fancy" is appropriate here. Poppy asks, "Do You Love Me?" "Poppy Blossoms." The title—"Monday in Offices" is expressed by "Al Fresco." Fraser enters—Fraser theme. Billy Bear's siesta is interrupted. In next scene he is shown at desk. Telephone operator becomes ill. "There Little Girl Don't Cry" is the cue. Fraser and cotton brokers in conference. Billy takes phone and listens in. Fraser's theme is used to make situation ominous. Billy leaves office. Billy shown in conference with Swift—Agitato. Title flashes—"The Next Spring"—"In the Spring a Young Man's Fancy" seems just the thing. Title flashes: "Poppy has no place in the new life"—a cue for "Forgotten." Swift's daughter appears in limousine. The selection is "Beautiful Lady" from "The Pink Lady." Billy drives off with her. The theme "Forgotten" is used again. Here the light atmosphere is arrested. O'Neill, the itinerant preacher, appears. The roll of timpanis forebodes the ominous speech of O'Neill. A close-up of some darkies is shown. Four measures of "Old Black Joe" are used here. During the harangue of the preacher, the minister's theme is employed with much stress upon the timpanis. Poppy is shown approaching Stratton's Cafe. The title is "The Road to I Don't Care" followed by "The Morning of Billy's Wedding." We revert to "A Young Man's Fancy." The saloon interior again calls for "Waiting for the Robert E. Lee." Close-up of group reading newspaper. Flood theme. The question is asked—"How about the levee?" The selection—"I've been working on the Levee." Preacher, actor and Norwegian appear on the street. Minister theme and "Better Days." The telegraph station above the city is shown. The storm is on. The orchestra starts at this point for a fifty-five minute session. The storm and rushing waters is expressed with "Il Guarany" by Gomez. From here on the action is intense.

I list the cues as we worked them out. You will notice that we did not fail to take advantage of the humorous situations; nevertheless, we keep the timpanis in a sullen roar most of the while. When the itinerant preacher and other principals start singing "Rock of Ages," the orchestra pauses while the organ takes up the selection. This is very impressive. Later "Lead Kindly Light" is sung and the organ is again used. When the climax is reached the organ joins in with the orchestra and a chord from "Pagliacci" is held for half a minute, crashing off as the door is thrown open to the supposed lurking waters. What better selection could one make than "Pagliacci?" The words are: "So you will see love shown as human beings do love each other. You will see too of hatred, the direful ending. Witness woe's sharp agony. Howlings of rage will reach you, and scornful laughter."

The cues and musical selections for the dramatic moments from the point the storm breaks until the prisoners are released:

The telegraph station—6/8 allo. tempestuoso—Scotch Poem—McDowell.
The flood starts—4/4 allo.—Il Guarany Overture—Gomez—at letter K.
Poppy enters saloon—4/4 allo. agitato—Erl King—Schubert.
The levee's gone—6/4 allo.—Overture—"Flying Dutchman"—Wagner—at 7.
Bartender closes door—4/4 allo. storm—Furioso No. 1—Langey.
They'll keep the air out—4/4 adagio—Selections from Faust arr. by Serdy-Fischer—1st movement.
Robert Sharpe—4/4 agitato—Fourteen Fathoms Deep—Lake.
Billy looks at Poppy—4/4 modto.—"In the Land of Beginning Again."
Hour after hour—3/4 cendte—Waltz Pathetique—Bason—Very slow.
Start singing—"Rock of Ages"—organ alone.
There is one long path—Largo—Largo from New World's Symphony—Dvorak.
They join hands—"Abide with Me."
Close-up of Poppy—"Lead Kindly Light"—organ alone
Suffocation is slow death—4/4 modto.—"Land of Beginning Again."
Now Poppy—4/4 modto.—"Poppy Blossoms"—PP.
At second close-up—Pause—until—"Lay On MacDuff"—Tympani for awakening.
Champagne cork hits tramp—"Arkansas Traveler."
Fade to minister—Prelude Deluge.
Tramp with bottle—"Arkansas Traveler."
It has come—Selections—"Pagliacci"—Schirmer. Long chord at end of Piu Mosso for opening of doors—Pause.—6 seconds.

The organ takes up the remainder of the action, as relief for audience. The selection "The Land of Beginning Again." This is very colorful. Close-ups follow. Poppy awakens. "Poppy Blossoms." Close-up Bartender. "On the Mississippi," Fraser—his theme. Title—"Brothers in Love"—Fraser theme. Norwegian and old actor move up to counter for another hand-out. . . . "Auld Lang Syne" is just the thing. "Should auld acquaintance be forgot, etc.," lends a touching element to the action at this point. Billy Bear is called on the telephone by Priscilla. The selection: "Beautiful Lady." Poppy leaves. Here we use "Forgotten" theme. Title: "You robbed me, eh?" As a bit of sarcasm we interposed "Friends" from "The Rollicking Girl," the words of which start as follows: "Friends that are good and true, etc." Levee Joe is waked from his sleep. "The Arkansas Traveler" here. Poppy is seen on the street. Poppy's theme. Billy arrives on the scene—his theme is used. Continue action, closing with scene on steps of public building.

IN publishing this special article on the musical score prepared by Managing Director E. R. Rogers, Prof. I. R. Summers, conductor and Miss Jeanne Wilson organist of the Tivoli theatre for "The Sin Flood" Chattanooga, Motion Picture News expresses appreciation to Mr. Rogers as author and his co-workers. The article was prepared at our request as a service to the exhibitors who will play "The Sin Flood" later and is the first of what we shall attempt to secure from the orchestra leaders and managing directors who play premieres on pictures that may be expected to secure more than an average number of bookings.

Advance notice of premieres will be appreciated.

Simplex

WHY SIMPLEX GAINS

Somewhere near you is a man operating a Simplex that has been in service for eight or nine years.

Ask him to open his mechanism doors and show you the original working parts.

Examine each gear, bearing and shaft.

Ask the owner what his Simplex up-keep has been during all the years of service.

Then you'll know why we say that we have never heard of a worn-out Simplex.

AND IT ALSO SHOWS WHY THE GREATER NUMBER OF REPRESENTATIVE AMERICAN CITIES ARE TODAY OVER 75% SIMPLEX.

State Right

Buyers agree with what the Moving Picture World in their issue of January 21st said—Read it:

". . . these distributors could not have selected a more opportune time to release such a picture. There is adventure galore, an exciting horse race, a shipwreck, and, in fact, everything that goes to make the sort of melodrama that never misses in throwing the patrons into a spontaneous outburst of applause and cheer.

"Without any warning the spectator is treated to a thrilling race and in rapid succession come a series of fistic fights. There is plenty of grappling, but nothing to which even the "bluest" of censors can object to, reflected on the silver sheet."

"Travelin' On"

A MELODRAMA as sure-fire as Bill's own guns; a tale as big as the plains it's played on; with a punch as powerful as Hart's own fists!

A western story with a new twist. Made up of scenes that thrill you, scenes that touch you, and scenes that make you shout with glee.

Another record-breaker for any theatre in the world.

A Paramount Picture

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION

Why I Show Paramount Pictures

THEY say that a picture is only as good as its story. The same is true of a theatre. No matter how large and beautiful an edifice an exhibitor may erect, when it comes to box office receipts it simmers right down to bare facts—the kind of pictures that are shown therein.

That is why I believe that any exhibitor is foolhardy who builds a motion picture theatre without some concrete idea of what kind of pictures he is going to show therein. People today want something besides beautiful decorations, sweet smelling incense or merely pictures that move. They must be insured of a finished production in every respect, something that is up-to-date or just a little ahead of the times.

To me Paramount pictures represent the ideal product for the motion picture patronage of today. Because the public knows Paramount pictures and knows what the trade mark stands for—consistent quality—Paramount service is the one best bet for the exhibitor. It is theatre insurance that grows more valuable every day.

The Fitzpatrick-McElroy theatrical interests are represented in Benton Harbor, St. Joseph, Three Rivers, Ludington, Manistee, St. Johns, Cadillac, Traverse City, Big Rapids and Cheboygan and I know personally that Paramount pictures are better known in these towns and draw more people than any other brand on the market.

I believe this big following for Paramount has been built up, not alone by advertising, but by backing the advertising with the real goods. Anyone can put on a big advertising campaign, if they want to spend the money, but it doesn't take the public long to discover whether an advertiser has the goods. It is this consistently good service, together with a knack of keeping the name Paramount before the public in the most psychological places, that makes it a winner for any exhibitor who plays the service.

My experience has always been that it is the service in every instance that counts and not the size or class of the theatre. And Paramount service in any theatre is pretty positive insurance against failure. The public wants it. And that is the thing that counts.

What's your biggest worry, Mr. Producer?

That next story, isn't it?

Why shop around? The Palmer Photoplay Corporation's unequaled facilities are at your disposal—the cream of the world's stories, ready for you to read — carefully selected originals — magazine fiction — stage plays—novels—stories backed by rare judgment of picture values.

THE Palmer institution has saved the day for more than one producer. Directing every ounce of its energy toward the creation of better screen stories, in three years it has grown to be the largest clearing house for photoplay material in the world.

It has become the most unique and one of the most indispensable factors in modern filmdom. Visualize one hundred busy people, many of them trained intensively in but one phase of the work—screen story values; imagine a constant flow of ideas and stories of every description pouring into this great clearing house from all parts of the world. That will give you some conception of the magnitude of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation.

Why we train Photoplaywrights

If you have thought of the Palmer organization as merely a "correspondence school" you have a vague idea of its scope, service and chief purpose.

Its Department of Education is for the training of new photodramatists. It is under the supervision of Thos. H. Ince, Frank E. Woods, Frederick Palmer, C. Gardner Sullivan, Allan Dwan, Lois Weber, James R. Quirk and Rob Wagner. This department is but an adjunct to the big idea back of the Palmer organization.

The future Jeanie MacPhersons, Frances Marions, C. Gardner Sullivans, Rex Beaches, Mary Roberts Rineharts and Rupert Hugheses are numbered among the earnest, cultivated men and women who are now studying photoplay writing through the Palmer Course and Service. This department is the only school teaching any subject by correspondence that compels its students to pass a literacy and psychological examination before admitting them to training. We first discover natural talent, then develop it. Unusual screen material is the result.

The three prize winners in the J. Parker Read, Jr., $5,000 scenario contest were Palmer students. They won against a field of nearly 10,000 scenarios entered.

But the big idea of Palmer service to producers is to judge every story—published or original—upon its merits as a screen story. No partiality is shown Palmer students.

Our relations with Big Authors

Recognized authors—hundreds of them—have found in this organization the service they have long sought. They like a straight commission of 10 per cent on sales—never any more—with its assurance that they will receive all but the 10 per cent, and no less. It is good business—a square deal for buyer and seller.

Some day you will need a good story for your next production. It will not cost you a cent for this service; the author pays the commission, you know.

"FUNNY STUFF

The hardest thing to produce in the moving picture business is a STEADY SUPPLY of really good comedies.

Every producer who has gone into the comedy business has made MORE POOR COMEDIES THAN GOOD ONES, always making an exception of Mr. Chaplin.

The Universal has made its share of poor comedies along with other producers. We have made more poor ones than we ever released. We have a vault full of discarded ones.

But a little over a year ago we started to hit the right stride in short comedies.

I refer to the CENTURY COMEDIES.

All through the year the Centuries have held up to a surprisingly high standard. Most comedy brands put out a few good ones and then take a frightful slump. But not the Centuries. They have hung on like a bulldog, so that I can honestly say I think they are the STEADIEST SUPPLY OF GOOD COMEDIES IN THE BUSINESS.

Some exhibitors like them so well that they feature them bigger than their feature! That's the kind of expectations the Century Comedies must live up to—and they are doing it!

No live-wire exhibitor should overlook them! No exhibitor who judges Century Comedies by any rotten comedies produced in the past (by other producers, or even the Universal) is doing justice to himself.

We spend a goodly sum of money to make Century Comedies good. But we don't pay the extravagant prices that others do. As a result we are booking them at "live-and-let-live" prices.

Have you ever seen two-year-old Baby Peggy? Have you seen Brownie, the most lovable dog in pictures? Have you seen Harry Sweet and Lee Moran in their newest Centuries? If not, you've been missing one of the biggest bets in the business.

The Good Things of Men—step up!

Meet the short feature novelty hit of the year!

"The Good Things of Life" is a weekly feature that will go over in your town with the speed of a Kansas cyclone.

And here's why!

"The Good Things of Life" is hot off the griddle from the pages of "Life"—the most widely read humorous weekly in the world.

Variety is the spice of Life.

Each release contains a section in which real actors appear in usual moving picture fashion to snappily illustrate a joke; a section of animated cartoons; a section of plastic work; silhouettes; pretty girls, and other features that afford real entertainment and sure-fire humor.

Never before have you seen such a line-up of famous stars to guarantee success for any picture.

Unlike many single reel releases, "The Good Things of Life" will never grow monotonous. The work of many of America's foremost artists, writers and humorists assures a continuous sparkle of wit and humor for this greatest of all single reelers. George Ade, Wallace Irwin, Walt Mason, Caroline Wells, Oliver Herford, Meredith Nicholson, Don Marquis, and other famous humorists contribute to this laugh-producing "fun-reel." Charles Dana Gibson, Coles Phillips, F. X. Leyendecker, Maxfield Parrish and H. T. Webster are some of the illustrators who add a touch of life and action.

"The Good Things of Life" is the greatest short subject box office bet of the year. Get your share of the good things of life—book "The Good Things of Life" now.

The Story

She was a spirited, spoiled girl. She married and was soon dissatisfied because she missed the attentions of a crowd of suitors. She asked for a divorce. Hubby sat tight and said, "Sure, if you can get one of your old sweethearts to run away with you." She tried, and the fun began. But when Hubby took a hand she changed her mind and stuck. Why? Because Hubby knew that the only way to treat women is to "Handle With Care."

The Production

A powerful theme treated as a light drama; directed with consummate skill and produced with lavish settings. A wonderful box office title and a perfect audience picture.

Is There a Real Japanese Peril?

Does war threaten between United States and Japan?

Nearly everybody says: "Yes—some day." How right are they?

Nobody can give facts. Because Japan has always been a country of mystery—of closed doors.

FOX NEWS, in this amazing series of pictures, supplies these facts for the first time—throws open the doors of mystery, lifts the curtain of secrecy, revealing the secrets of Japan's Army and Navy for the first time!

William Fox felt that the true conditions of Japan should be revealed. On the 6000-mile journey he sent Al Brick, the FOX NEWS cameraman, who braved death, prison and other perils to secure this colossal news beat—to present this most amazing series of informative motion pictures in history.

The WALL

A GOLDWYN PICTURE

While Others Danced She Decorated the Wall

A weed in a garden of roses, is Idalene Nobbin, a wistful figure, awkward and pigeon-toed.

We laugh at her sad attempts at the toddle, but we are moved at the cruelty of youth which makes her the butt of practical joking. Young love and the sensitiveness of the wall flower is the theme of Rupert Hughes' latest original photoplay, a mirth-making pantomime, treated, however, with gentle sympathy.

Mr. Hughes says of it, "The world is full of girls who are crushed with lack of encouragement at home and who need only to be flooded with sunshine and praise and taught a little grace and self-confidence. The Wall Flower is the story of such a homely thing and of her swift blooming when her desperation threw her by chance among strangers who were kind to her. It is a love story, of course, but of more than one kind of love."

"For Those Who Learn How to Use It"

160,000 Trade Paper Advertisers

TRADE papers are a product of the last 75 years —and so it is to be expected that their remarkable growth has not been recognized by everyone. Yet how many advertising men, who are supposed to keep in touch with the most effective methods of marketing, are familiar with the strength of the trade paper as an advertising medium? Dress Essentials reminds us that "in the entire country we have less than 10,000 so-called national advertisers. Would it astonish you to learn that there were in 1915 160,000 advertisers in trade and technical papers? How many more there are now we do not know. . . .

"Bear in mind that these thousands of advertisers are using papers with five and ten thousand circulations. There may be some who have allowed the glamor of big general circulations to blind them to the concentrated buying power of the average business paper reader.

"A certain business paper has completed an investigation of the financial ratings of their subscribers as given by R. G. Dun & Co. The average was found to be $297,668.

"The buying power of the readers is what counts, not the number of them. . . . The thousands of advertisers in business papers are there for one reason only—they get results.

"Even poor copy, and there is some of it, brings results, because of the brute power of the mediums and the lack of waste circulation. . . . If your problem is one of retail distribution, talk directly to the retail merchants in their own language, about their own business, in their own papers. . . .

"The average business paper is regarded almost with affection by its regular readers. They read it even when they have not time for other kinds of reading.

"It concerns their bread and butter, and the thing which occupies their minds during most of their waking hours.

"The advertising commands as much attention as the editorial contents. Frequently it is read first and most closely. Everything from cover to cover concerns the business of the reader, the biggest thing in his life. There is nothing to distract or divert his interest. What a wonderful advertising medium for those who learn how to use it!"

SHOULD BE PARTICULARLY WELL LIKED BY ADMIRERS OF NORTHWEST STORIES

There are a good many picture patrons who admire stories of the Northwest and the Mounted Police. For them, "Cameron of the Royal Mounted" will offer a fine entertainment with the usual action and plenty of it. You can promise a few thrilling fights, one taking place in a river, with the snow-covered mountains in sight all around. It's going to make them shiver to watch the hero battle with the villian under these circumstances. The title itself is sufficient to let them know about what the story is like, and you can back it up by saying that "Cameron of the Royal Mounted" contains some of the prettiest backgrounds that have been seen in a picture of this kind. Some worthwhile suggestions for advertising and exploitation can be found in the Hodkinson press book.

—FILM DAILY.

PACKED FULL OF DIVERSIFIED AND THRILLING ACTION

"Cameron of the Royal Mounted" is a genuine Northwest drama, packed full of diversified and thrilling action. It unfolds a typical rugged story that we feel will be entertaining to patrons of average picture houses. It abounds in exciting situations, wild rides and several combats which are realistic even to the hurting point. It is an absorbing tale faithful in detail against a background of scenes of the wonderful and beautiful Canadian Northwest.

Points of Appeal—The author, Ralph Connor, is known all over the world for his absorbing and thrilling tales. Hundreds of thousands of readers are numbered in his following. These will welcome this latest photoplay and revel in the unraveling of the plausible though exciting story it tells.

VIVID, THRILLING DRAMATIZATION— INTERESTING DEPARTURE

One of the things that has not been overdone in picture making is realism. The screen version of Ralph Connor's famous book, "Corporal Cameron," deviates in this respect. It is realistic in the extreme. No "sets" nor exteriors similar to the locale depicted could be substituted for the wonderful mountainous country of Northwest Canada. Therefore, the actual scenes described in the original story, the long winding trails, dangerous declines, steep water falls, etc., have been used with splendid results. Here is a picture that will gratify the men. It is a man's picture, the important parts all being well played by men who look them, especially Irving Cummings, a splendid type of ability necessary to characterize his prominent role. A word about the scenic value is due, some of the shots the most beautiful of their kind ever shown clear and intense, marvelous in length. The entire production, with the exception of a few necessary interiors, has been made in the mountains, with real snow, real Canadian woods and a platoon of real Canadian Royal Mounted Police, to great pictorial advantage.

—MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

THIS PICTURE IS JUST ONE KNOCK DOWN AND DRAG IN AFTER ANOTHER

The picture is just one knock down and drag in after another with enough perilous situations to make a fifteen-episode serial. Well acted and the Canadian scenery is beautiful. It is a good picture for those who like the thriller type of thing. Gaston Glass is quite a model hero of this kind and Vivienne Osborne is the heroine necessary for kidnapping purposes and for the final close-up.

—MORNING TELEGRAPH.

RALPH CONNOR'S STORY IS SPIRITEDLY PICTURED BY HODKINSON WITH A GOOD CAST

A strong cast, headed by Gaston Glass and Irving Cummings, is responsible for a performance that is sincere and unusually energetic.

A Fitting Start for the New Year Is Ince's "Hail the Woman"

Thomas H. Ince presents
"HAIL THE WOMAN"
Associated First Nat'l Pictures

DIRECTOR .....John Griffith Wray
AUTHOR .....C. Gardner Sullivan
CAMERAMAN ..... Henry Sharp
SCENARIO BY .....C. Gardner Sullivan
AS A WHOLE.....Ince starts the new year appropriately with an excellent picture—the best he has made in years
STORY.....Mainly a familiar situation, but one made new by superb acting and skilful handling
DIRECTION.....Noteworthy for the most part; remarkably fine detail; smooth and consistent
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Excellent
LIGHTINGS .....Fine; some unusual effects
PLAYERS.....Theodore Roberts' performance a triumph; Florence Vidor does the best work of her career; Madge Bellamy a second Lillian Gish; fine cast throughout
EXTERIORS.....Good; winter scenes studio sets
INTERIORS.....Those in New Hampshire homestead realistic; generally suitable DETAIL ..... Splendid
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Religious fanatic forgives son's wrong but drives daughter from his home. Years later he realizes his mistake and all is forgiven
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....7,460 feet

Without a doubt, Thomas H. Ince is offering in his new production, "Hail the Woman," a picture that not only starts off the new year right for Ince, but also gives to exhibitors a feature that promises to appease all the desires of hungry box offices everywhere. For "Hail the Woman" is that kind of a picture. It is without doubt the best thing that Ince has done in years and will probably rank among the best of the coming year.

C. Gardner Sullivan has written a story that does not deal with a theme that is new, but it is his treatment, skilful composition and exceptional fine detail that freshens it and overcomes any tendency that it might have to becoming hackneyed. The biased and unflinching New Englander of the old school is the central figure or pivot about which the remainder of the characters revolve. This religious fanatic is played by Theodore Roberts, who, minus his customary cigar, gives to the screen one of the most interesting and convincing portrayals that it has ever seen. His part carries the picture, really. His make-up is particularly effective and his acting a genuine triumph. The next highest honors go to Florence Vidor, as his daughter. Her work is sincere and very well done. Madge Bellamy has a pathetic and a typically Lillian Gish role. Lloyd Hughes as Roberts' son, and Gertrude Claire as his wife, are the two characters who are likely to cause folks to lose patience with them for what their respective roles require of them. The cast throughout is an unusually fitting one.

John Griffith Wray, who has directed the production under Ince's supervision, has taken a big step toward the directorial hall of fame for what he has done here. His direction is skilful and the manner in which he establishes a premise lends an intelligible and appreciated foundation, a quality that is so frequently lacking in film productions. He acquaints you with the characters and facts and proceeds to unfold the story smoothly and interestingly. There are one or two instances where too much stress is laid upon facts, scenes held too long and the effort to secure pathos slightly forced, but those are minor defects.

The story has to do with a type of man, a sort of remnant of the old Puritan school, when they punished folks for flirting on Sunday. Oliver Beresford, of Flint Hill, New Hampshire, was one of these. When his son David was accused and admitted that he was the father of Nan Higgens' unborn child, the elder Beresford bought the boy's freedom, while Nan went to the city to fight it out alone. But Beresford refused to judge his daughter likewise, and sent her from his home, stubborn and refusing to believe in her innocence. Years later the truth in both cases comes to Beresford, he realizes the fallacy of his creed and, repentant, takes his daughter back into the home.

Real Box Office Possibilities in Sullivan's Forceful Drama

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The above synopsis is a most meagre outline of the story of "Hail the Woman." There is much more to it than the slight outline given here. It is the sort of picture that will appeal to thousands of people all over the country, everywhere. It is a problem drama, a problem that is more or less familiar, and particularly will it strike "home" in the outlying districts, places not yet grown to city size. The story has appeal, but regardless of that, the acting of an exceptionally capable and splendid company, headed by Theodore Roberts, is well worth while seeing. It isn't often that so many uniformly fine portrayals are contained in one production.

"Hail the Woman" will certainly win the favor of women everywhere. It is essentially a woman's picture. Exhibitors will do well to put forth their best efforts as showmen to put over Ince's latest.

My dear J. D. :-

It has been a long time since I have seen a picture go so well with an audience as D'Annunzio's "Cabiria" We have just finished one of the hottest weeks of the summer and I am glad to write you that the business with this picture was splendid. Even the terrific heat could not keep them away.

The picture is as big as any spectacle that has been made in the past five years and still has the same "punch" and the thrills — that made it famous. It is a masterpiece without doubt and I am glad for having played it.

Everybody remembers "Maciste" and they applauded him all over again.

Motion Picture News

A MAN who is successful in this business, who always will be successful, left New York suddenly last week because, he said, its pessimism made him sick.

The talk he heard, in his opinion, was either insincere or unintelligent. Anyway, it was loose.

"Go to work!" was his advice.

And, we believe, he's about right.

* * *

It has been the policy of this paper not to editorialize optimistically during the so-called period of hard times.

We are having our own tough sledding—and we know why. We know of other fellows in the same boat—there's no denying the individual cares—but we figured they knew more about their business than we did, and, anyway, we didn't want to preach. Above all we didn't want to sound a lot of hollow platitudes about "bracing up," "business is good," etc., etc.

So, for the exhibitor, we instituted a "Seeing It Through" contest, the idea being to let Exhibitors tell Exhibitors how to get out of the wood.

And, we believe, these articles have helped a good deal—much better than preachments, at least.

* * *

But we have some figures to go by, now.

The Government tax reports. And figures don't lie—if you know what they say.

* * *

From June 1st to December 1st, 1921, the distributors in this business—all of them—took in $58,674,010.80.

In the same period in 1920 they took in $59,205,708.20.

It is useless to compare rental receipts month by month, because some monthly periods are five weeks and some are four. Some months, too, get better pictures than others.

But, surely, you can compare two six months periods to a pretty definite conclusion.

And we find here that the income of the distributors for the past six months (up to December 1st) is less than 1% under the income for a similar period a year ago.

Less than 1% off!

Is business bad?

* * *

Someone is apt to say: "Yes, but business went to pieces in December."

Vitagraph, however, informs us that its business from December 3rd to 31st—four weeks—is larger by a substantial margin than ever before in that concern's history. Not only that, but present indications are that the January period will beat December by 15%.

There's one sure conclusion here, anyway. Either business is good, or Vitagraph is on the right track. There's a lesson one way or the other.

* * *

Now as to theatre admissions, for the same periods in 1920 and 1921. Remembering, of course, that the tax is based on all forms of amusement, legitimate, vaudeville, cabarets, etc., as well as pictures which make up the great bulk; but the comparison between 1920 and 1921 practically eliminates this factor.

Theatre admissions (six months), 1921—$385,899,799.70.

Theatre admissions (six months), 1920—$449,336,657.30.

The theatre business, in other words, has been off about 14½% since June 1st last. Which doesn't agree very well with some very rash and unsupported statements we have recently heard.

The percentage is enough; but it isn't alarming, considering the fact that the fall of 1920 still saw us in much of the war wage period.

But there's the drop-off—14½%. Just that.

Compare it with the situation in other fields.

Is it large enough to make due pessimism?

As a matter of fact, isn't it small enough to make sound optimism?

* * *

Of course this 14½% drop hasn't affected all exhibitors alike. Far from it. Ever since the war decline began the country has been spotty, as various industries one after another were hard hit. The situation is still spotty.

So, while some theatres are as well off as ever, and others are holding up, a number are badly hit by local unemployment. There's no question about it. Some have gone back to receipts of those days when film service cost fifty dollars or less a week.

These theatres have got to be helped. Perhaps they should lower admissions to get business. Perhaps they should do other things. These exhibitors must work out their individual problems. But they do need rental adjustments; they need them for the distributor's own sake. He wants them kept open. That's argument enough.

* * *

Frankness and sincerity will help a good deal right now.

It will pay to put individual blindness and greed aside.

The war is over.

But some exhibitors don't know it. Some are shouting losses when they merely mean that they are making less money than during the flush war period; others are losing because they've still got themselves down at fat war salaries, which isn't losing at all.

Percentage playing—a right and reasonable system—would help a lot these days. It will eliminate the bartering and the bunkum.

We advocated it three years ago; and it is no small gratification to see the business getting nearer and nearer to it every day.

* * *

14½% off!

The elimination of the 5% rental tax will help some. And the elimination of the theatre admissions tax would clear up the entire deficiency.

But, failing that—

Many theatres can cut house expenses—and must.

Rentals can and must be adjusted here and there, where the exhibitor is helpless against industrial depression.

The super-salaried star must come down from the dizzy clouds.

A lot of other overpaid people must get down to hard earth.

Overproduction will go on working out its salvation—just one way, by the slow moving laws of supply and demand; so will the duplication of distribution and selling effort.

* * *

We are all taking stock of ourselves right now; and it's a mighty good thing. It had to come, sometime. We've been driving ahead at breakneck speed. Now we're beginning to look where we're going, and to study about the cost of gasoline.

The situation isn't bad; the figures prove that. And the outlook is fine. The writer has seen more good pictures recently—they're out now mostly and more are to follow—than ever before in nine years' experience. Far better!

* * *

So the one general answer is: take off the silk shirts, and all they typify—

And go to work!

One Man Leadership—and Victory

COLLIER'S says of the appointment of Will H. Hays:

"The Allies couldn't beat Germany until they subordinated their national jealousies to the one-man leadership of Foch. . . . And now they are talking of Will Hays . . . as official head of the motion-picture business.

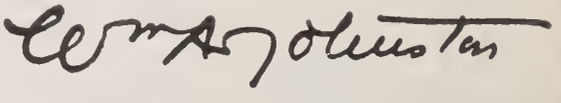
"Slowly the world of business is learning what the military world has always known—that a lot of men without a leader can't run a ship, or fight a battle, or win a war, or build an empire."

And the Washington Times says:

"Senator Harrison opposes the choice of Postmaster General Hays for head man and adviser of the Moving Picture Industry. The Senator fears it may mean using the moving pictures in politics.

"Mr. Hays is not chosen by the Moving Picture men with any political idea. He is selected because he has proved that he has brains and knows how to use them; that he has judgment, energy, and thinks quickly."

Now for a ringing statement from Mr. Hays:



That he doesn't come as a Judge Landis, because the Motion Picture differs as much from baseball as does the newspaper from open-air parks.

That the Motion Picture, after having been kicked at will by a puny minority, is about to marshall itself under single leadership and march with the great majority.

That the Motion Picture has discovered at last its huge relationship and will meet it like the big American institution it is.

That in stepping from the Postmaster Generalship to that of Motion Picture production and distribution interests, he is performing a public service than which today there is none greater nor more pressing.

Let's have publicity at once—lots of it—while the iron is hot. Not merely in the metropolitan press, but all over the country. Publicity to counteract the bad start Mr. Hays got through the misstatements of the newspapers; publicity that will simply tell the truth about the industry and its new effort to progress rightly and largely in the public eye; and for the public good.

Postmaster General Hays Associates Himself with Picture Industry

Met Film Executives This Week; Statement Issued by M.P.T.O. of A.

WILL H. Hays, Postmaster-General, has definitely decided to associate himself with the motion-picture industry of America. The Postmaster-General met the executives of nine of the leading producing and distributing organizations at the offices of the Roosevelt Memorial Association, New York City, on Monday, January 16th, and formally expressed his decision to head the new producers-distributors' association.

In reply to a speech by Senator Harrison of Mississippi, in which it was intimated by the Senator that the Postmaster-General's association with the motion-picture industry might mean the use of the screen for political propaganda, the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, in session at Washington, D. C., issued a statement on behalf of the 12,000 exhibitor members of this organization, assuring the public that their theatres will never be used for the advancement of partisan politics "No political propaganda of any kind will be permitted on our screens, except where the welfare of the theatre-going public and the progress of our industry is threatened," declares the statement. It was also pointed out that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is an organization distinct from any association of motion-picture manufacturers and has therefore not been a party, in any sense, to the accession of Mr. Hays as the head of the producing or manufacturing branch of the industry.

Following the meeting of the producing and distributing executives with Postmaster-General Hays at the Roosevelt Memorial Association headquarters on Monday, a signed statement was issued as follows:

"The undersigned producers and distributors of motion picture films make the following announcement, with deep gratification:

"Mr. Will H. Hays, Postmaster-General, has definitely decided to associate himself with the nation's moving picture industry, on a basis suggested by the undersigned.

"In order to raise to the highest point the educational and moral value of our great industry, we desired to secure the co-operation of the man best adapted to inspire public confidence and interest, as a guiding and directing mind, in all questions effecting simultaneously the public welfare, and the interests and duties of our industry.

"We know that we have secured the right man and the best man in Mr. Hays, the man selected by President Harding for the place of greatest moral and business responsibility in his cabinet.

"As director and supervisor of the mails, as promoter of the national service that touches daily every citizen, Mr. Hays has shown himself a master in management and good judgment.

"We represent an industry that deals directly with the entire nation, an industry destined more and more to form and influence national taste and interests, and to promote national education.

"We consider ourselves and our industry most fortunate in securing one whom President Harding chose, for his cabinet, as of such high ability and integrity, as to be entrusted with the nation's most important service, its universal service to the citizens.

"The President, in releasing Mr. Hays that he might undertake his new, nation-wide task, has expressed his appreciation of that task's importance and the responsibilities attached to it.

"We, the undersigned, are also mindful of the responsibility that weighs upon us, and we welcome, gratefully, in our work the co-operation, advice and association of Mr. Hays. His knowledge, ability and judgment will be devoted to making of the moving picture, carrying its message direct through the eye to the brain, the complete force in spiritual, educational and moral development that it was predestined to be.

"Hiram Abrams, President, for United Artists Corporation; Rufus S. Cole, President, for R-C. Pictures Corporation; William Fox, for Fox Film Corporation; Samuel Goldwyn, President, for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; Carl Laemmle, President, for Universal Film Manufacturing Co.; Marcus Loew, for Metro Pictures Corporation; Lewis J. Selznick, President, for Selznick Pictures Corporation; Percy L. Waters, President, for Triangle Distributing Corporation; and Adolph Zukor, President, for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation."

The members of the Board of Directors of the M. P. T. O. of A. were in session at Washington, D. C., for the purpose of arranging for the national convention of the exhibitors' association in May, when attention was called to the speech of Senator Harrison of Mississippi. It was thereupon decided to put the organization on record both with regards to politics and the screen and the appointment of Mr. Hays to the executive position of the new producers-distributors' association. The following statement was accordingly issued from the conference headquarters at the Hotel Washington, Washington, D. C., on Thursday, January 12th:

"Members of the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America met Thursday in Hotel Washington, this city, for the purpose of completing arrangements for their national convention which will be held in May. This convention will bring to Washington thousands of theatre owners from all parts of the United States.

"During the session attention was called to a copy of the Congressional Record of Saturday, January 7, 1922, containing a report of a speech by Senator Harrison of Mississippi, to the effect that arrangements were being made with Postmaster-General Will H. Hays to: 'Be at the head of the whole motion picture industry of the country, at a salary of $150,000 a year,' and suggesting the possibility of the screen being used for political propaganda.

"The motion picture theatre owner realizes that the success of our business enterprise and the progress of our industry is dependent upon the good-will and support of all the people, comprising those of every shade of political opinion, and we desire to assure the motion pic-

Will Hays to Become Film Chief March 4th

AT a dinner tendered to Postmaster General Will H. Hays at Delmonico's, New York City, on January 18th by thirty of the leaders of the industry in the city, the head of the new national association stated that he will take over his new duties on March 4th. The purpose of the dinner was to acquaint Mr. Hays with some of the executives with whom he will work and to allow him to discuss his hopes and plans for the new organization.

Those who attended the dinner besides Mr. Hays were: Adolph Zukor, Marcus Loew, R. H. Cole, Lewis J. Selznick, Percy L. Waters, Carl Laemmle, John D. Williams, Samuel Goldwyn, W. R. Sheehan, T. B. DeWitt, Myron Selznick, R. H. Cochrane, A. Herman, Robert Leiber, Nathan Burkan, A. H. T. Banshaff, L. Lehar, Gabriel Hess, Francis A. Gugger, C. C. Pettijohn, J. Robert Rubin, J. M. Quinn, Courtland Smith and Hinckle Hays.

Mr. Hays issued a written statement to the press in which he stated that he would begin his new work on March 4th, and formally announced that he had signed a contract to serve as executive head of a producers' and distributors' organization.

Emerson Defends Increased Tariff before A.M.P.A.

John Emerson addressed the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the Cafe Boulevard last Thursday (Jan. 12) on the Fordney tariff bill in its relation to the motion picture industry.

Mr. Emerson, who was one of the leaders of the industry appearing before the Senate committee recently, is a strong advocate of the proposed 30 per cent. ad valorem tariff, basing his position on the belief that the industry in this country will be definitely imperilled if the tariff is not enacted. He declares that, within the last 18 months, since foreign pictures first commenced to be brought in here in bulk, production activities have been reduced 64 per cent. in the United States, with resultant un-employment; and he predicts that, if the tariff is not put on it it will not be long before the majority of American producers follow the lead of Fox and Famous-Players-Lasky in sending stars and directors to Europe, where actors and studio labor can be employed for about one-tenth of what they cost here.

"I wish to emphasize the fact that we are not asking for a prohibitive tariff. We welcome the better European films, as providing a healthy artistic stimulus and competition. But we do ask a tariff sufficiently high to bring the cost of these imported films somewhere near what they would cost if made in America, and thus not only secure from these importations funds for the Government, but also protect from destruction this great industry in America," declared Mr. Emerson.

Production Extravagances Frighten Investors

"Dollars and the Movies" was the principal topic under discussion at a recent session of the Western Motion Picture Advertisers, at which cinema finances were discussed by Laurence A. Lambert, president of the recently organized National Motion Pictures Finance Corporation; a million dollar company formed to aid in the independent star and producer in making pictures in Los Angeles.

Lambert pointed out to the publicity men that capital could either be attracted or repelled to the motion picture industry according to the type of press matter sent out from the studios. He condemned stories of directorial extravagance and temperamental stars as frightening away possible investors, and prejudicing the conservative business men against the business. The report of the nominating committee offered as candidates for officers for the coming year, Arch Reeve, of Lasky Studios for president; Peter Gridley Smith, Marshall Neilan studios, vice-president; Harry Hammond Beall, Benjamin B. Hampton productions, secretary; Malcolm Stuart Boylan, Universal City, treasurer. Ten other members were nominated for the board of directors, five of which will be elected.

"Get Together or Perish"

THAT leaders forget their differences and "meet on a common ground" for the good of the industry in general is the appeal urged by a small-town exhibitor in a letter received this week by William A. Johnston, editor of Motion Picture News. The letter, the writer of which desires that his name be omitted, heartily endorses the stand taken by Mr. Johnston in the editorial caption, "A Round Table Year," which appeared in the January 7th issue of the News. The letter follows in full:

"I read your article in last week's issue of 'A Round Table' yarn and believe it strikes home more than anything that I have yet read for the good of this wonderful industry. I do want you to know that your ideas are being read and appreciated.

"I believe that in Sidney we have a wonderful leader who may not always be right as no human can be. However, he is honest and fearless, and his organization is the child of his heart. If the wonderful man referred to in the dailies is chosen and accepts that position which has been suggested by the producers and distributors, I believe men like yourself—that must of necessity have your finger on the pulse of the great exhibiting body—can with a great deal more ease approach such leaders and get them to meet on a common ground.

"Danger signs are springing up all around, and if this business is left much longer to the tender mercy of short-sighted stars, producers, distributors, and, last, but not least, some exhibitors, there will be nothing worth saving. And this is not written by a pessimist by any means. Thirty years of the show business, from property man of a wagon show to the humble position that I occupy now in the industry, has taught me a few things so that I have always been able to have the lights lit at the proper time to welcome the visitors, but I cannot help seeing it all around me, and I know that a lot of fellows knowing nothing about this great business and being 80 per cent of it at that. How they have been oversold and victimized by false promises and dictatorial methods brought to bear upon them. Such practices would not be allowed in any other business in the world. I certainly agree with you that we need a Moses and that we need him quick, or perhaps this industry needs two or three Moses. At any rate, it certainly must get them quickly or many lights will go out, never to be flashed again.

"I hope that you write more and more article like 'A Round Table Year' and that your voice may be heard and heed taken of your warnings before it is too late.

"The history of our country shows that in every big trial we have always had a leader who sprang up from somewhere to lead us out of the dark. Let us hope that we find one for the great moment that we are now verging upon."

Benefit Bureau Offers Its Services to Producers

The Film Mutual Benefit Bureau, with headquarters at 4 West 40th Street, New York City, is an organization which in cooperation with motion-picture producing companies aids financially the American Committee for Devastated France and the Maternity Centre Association of New York. The Bureau, upon application, secures desirable location sities for producing companies, furnishes "extras," and helps in obtaining permits for the filming of various subjects such as city and government property. The fees paid for the services of the Bureau in securing locations on private estates, etc., and the wages paid the "extras" furnished by the Bureau, are devoted entirely to the two philanthropies mentioned above, declares a statement from the Bureau's offices.

The Bureau has already established contact with many producing companies, but there are still others with which connections have not been made. The Bureau is anxious to add to the list of companies using its services.

Church Pictures Menace Springfield Theatres

Churches showing pictures on Sunday afternoon and evening gratis in Springfield, Ill., are becoming serious competitors to the motion picture theatres in that city, according to reports. No admission is charged by the churches. Features like "The Copperhead," "Humoresque" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" are the kind selected. So great have been the crowds at the evening shows that it has become necessary for afternoon performances to be given to care for the large numbers of children anxious to see the films.

One of the most prominent of the downtown churches, located almost in the heart of the theatre district, is temporarily closed for repairs. Rumor has it that it is being remodeled so that an auditorium and motion picture outfit can be installed.

Victor Shapiro Made Commander of Drew Post

Victor Mansfield Shapiro, Pathe's exploitation manager who is also the treasurer of the Association Motion Picture Advertisers and one of its organizers, has been elected Commander of the S. Rankin Drew Post of the American Legion. The Drew Post is regarded as one of the largest and most important Legion posts in the country. Having as its membership only persons engaged in and about the allied theatrical arts, the Drew Post has utilized the professional qualifications of most of its members in connection with its numerous activities in furtherance of the aims and purposes of the American Legion.

N. Y. Censors Seek $30,000 and More Powers

Appropriation to Provide for 12 Inspectors and Reviewers; Five Amendments Urged

THE New York Motion Picture Commission has made request for an appropriation of $30,000 to pro-de for twelve inspectors and reviewers. his fact was disclosed in the submission the annual budget and which will not acted upon in all probability before me time in March. Incidentally, the ommission figures that it will cost the m of $134,265 to meet its running ex-nses for twelve months, that is from ly 1, on. This is $64,265 above what as appropriated for the commission's penses last year. At the present time e Commission is badly handicapped in inspection work, according to its legis-ive report, there being but one man who assigned to do this and who is also sup-sed to be in charge of the Albany bu-au. These new jobs, if they are cre-ed through the granting of the request, ll pay $2,500 each.

There have been but few increases in e way of salaries asked by the commis-n, and they are for minor positions. he budget carries a request for $8,000 r two deputy commissioners, at $4,000 ch, but one of these positions has been ed for several months.

For the projection of films to be viewed the censors, there is an item of $7,500. hile no mention of the way this is to be id out is made, it is presumed that the mmission will follow its present prac-e of paying the operators fifty cents per el rather than going to the expense of sing one or two more rooms, installing paratus and hiring operators who might busy but a small part of each day.

It is evident that the Commission ex-cts to broaden its activities, for in place its present force of 15 employees pro-sion is being made for 28.

The report of the Commission covering e five months from August 1 to Decem-r 31, made public on Monday afternoon, nuary 16, shows that producers paid the m of $158,085.97 to the Commission ring the five months, and that during e same period of time the Commission ent $36,687.80. Of this latter amount, e sum of $16,535.26 went for personal rvice; traveling expenses amounted $4,012.29; projection amounted to ,818.75; while leaders for permits costs ,624.98 and license leaders the sum of ,494.04.

The report contains five recommenda-ns for amendments to the present law. irst of the would empower the Com-ssion to furnish the film for the exhi-bion of the serial number as a part of e license or permit leader. The second ves the Commission power to refuse a ense or permit for any film which con-ns unpatriotic or seditious matter. The rd seeks to more clearly define what are educational, scientific, religious or charitable films in that the Commission can more easily determine what pictures are exempt from the payment of the required license fee. The fourth gives the right to the Commission to charge producers of such films a sum sufficient to meet the cost of the permit or license leader. The fifth and concluding proposed amendment allows the Commission to retain the fee paid for the examination of a film which is later on condemned in its entirety.

The report contains the significant statement that comparatively few of the films presented violate the standards fixed by the statute. Concerning violations and prosecutions, the report has this to say:

"The number of violations has materially decreased as producers and exhibitors have become familiar with the statute and the Commission's requirements. There has been a desire on the part of the producers as a class and particularly the exhibitors, to co-operate with the Commission in its work. There are, however, some wilful violations of the law; and certain exchanges, undoubtedly in connivance with some of the producers, have undertaken to escape the payment of the fee by transferring seals and interchanging serial numbers, and also by exhibiting pictures for which neither a license nor a permit has been issued. We feel that the trade has now had sufficient time to comply with the statute and that the same should be vigorously enforced. It will, however, be necessary to provide adequate inspection in order to accomplish this result.

"The leaders in the industry are coming to recognize that merit in pictures brings its reward the same as in other fields of endeavor. It has been demonstrated to the satisfaction of the producer that clean and wholesome pictures are the ones that bring the largest financial return and while there are a few producers who evidently desire to cater to the lower instincts of the human race and present unclean, immoral and salacious films, yet that number is in the great minority.

"We regret very much that many of the producers of films seem to deem it necessary or wise to incorporate in films, in such a marked degree, the vices of the human race, and also to depict violations of law in the commission of various crimes. The Commission endeavors to enforce the law concerning films of this character and to discourage their exhibition."

The report also points out that there has been a marked impetus in the production of educational pictures and declares that producers should be encouraged in this field in every possible way.

Summary of Work Done by N. Y. Censor Commission

THE following table shows, in brief form, the work done by the New York State Motion Picture Commission from August 1 to December 31, 1921:

Number of permits granted without examination	6,194
Number of licenses issued	1,330
Number of films approved without eliminations	1,170
Number of films from which eliminations were made	160
Number of features condemned in toto	5
Total number of eliminations made	745

Scenes eliminated by the Commission numbered 477, and titles eliminated numbered 268, while a total of 3,630 reels were examined.

The eliminations made by the Commission, according to its legislative report, were classified as follows: Indecency, 85; inhumanity, 35; tending to incite crime, 54; tending to corrupt morals, 61, and sacrilegious, five.

Eighty-one eliminations were made from dramas, 43 from comedies, 20 from comedy-dramas, 7 from serials, 4 from news reels, 3 from educational, and 2 from cartoons.

Grand Ball to Be Feature of N. Y. Exhib Convention

From present indications the Motion Picture Ball, which will be held at the State Armory in Albany, N. Y., on the night of February 15, in connection with the Annual Convention of the New York State Exhibitors, will be one of the social events of the mid-winter season in the Capital district. Society has taken up the ball and already a large list of patronesses, including the city's elite, has been assured. All state officials are planning to attend.

Owing to the tremendous interest which is being taken in the ball it has been decided to spend the sum of $3,500 on decorations. A New York firm of decorators has been given the contract.

The past week has brought a heavy demand for hotel reservations, indicating a record-breaking crowd. All requests for reservations are being handled by Samuel Suckno, owner of the Albany Theatre.

Another thing that is being urged is for the exhibitors to bring their wives and daughters to the convention. A committee of Albany women, headed by Mrs. George Roberts, has arranged an elaborate program of entertainment for visiting members of their sex.

Exhibitors and Exchangemen Stage Banquet and Dance in Detroit, January 10th

A "MOTION PICTURE DAY" celebration was observed in gala fashion by the exhibitors and exchangemen of Detroit, Mich., the evening of Tuesday, January 10, at the Hotel Statler. A banquet, dance, and speeches by guests prominent in governmental and motion picture circles were among the features of the occasion. The purpose of the "get-together" was to promote a spirit of cordiality between the Detroit exhibitors and exchangemen. The arrangements were taken care of by Jack Flynn of the local Goldwyn office acting for the exchange forces and by H. M. Richey, general manager of the Michigan Exhibitors' Association, for the theatre owners.

Senator Walker, counsel for the M. P. T. O. of A., acted as toastmaster. The speakers included Mayor James Couzens, Police Commissioner James W. Inches, Marcus Loew, President Claude E. Cady of the Michigan Exhibitors' State organization, and Eugene O'Brien, the Selznick star.

Senator Walker, following his introduction by Mr. Cady, complimented the attitude taken in many cases towards such productions as those featuring Clara Hamon and Fred Beauvais. He said that while both these pictures had been passed by censor boards, he knew of exhibitors in Michigan and many other states who had united in refusing to show them on their screens because of the association of their principals with sensational crime and divorce cases.

Mr. Loew was greeted with enthusiasm. He touched upon censorship and emphasized the diversity of standards among censor boards in making eliminations. He mentioned specific instances of scenes in "The Four Horsemen" being accepted by one board and ruled out by another. He also urged exhibitors to be more careful in booking pictures—not to overbuy and to give dates for all pictures within a reasonable time after they have been booked.

Wires expressing regret at not being able to be present were received from Sydney S. Cohen, president of the M. P. T. O. of A., and A. J. Moeller, general manager of the educational organization. About 400 attended the function which was so successful that plans are being laid to make it an annual event.

Hays Formally Accepts Leader's Post

ture-going public that our theatres will never be used for the advancement of partisan politics.

"No political propaganda of any kind will be permitted on our screens, except where the welfare of the theatre-going public and the progress of our industry is threatened.

"For several weeks newspaper reports indicated that an arrangement was being effected between the producing or manufacturing branch of the industry and Postmaster-General Hays, through which he was to succeed Mr. William A. Brady as president of their Association.

"As theatre owners (organized nationally in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America) and comprising a membership of 12,000, representing every state in the Union, we did not feel called upon to make any public comment upon this matter until the speech of Senator Harrison was brought to our attention.

"We have no connection as theatre owners with the manufacturers of the pictures, being separate and distinct from them and controlling in every way our own division of the industry, and therefore were not concerned with Mr. Hays' accession to the head of the producing or manufacturing branch. The President of our organization receives no salary.

"If the advent of Mr. Hays or any other capable man into the manufacturers' division will correct some of the unsatisfactory business relations now prevailing, it will meet with the approval of every theatre owner and real friend of the industy.

"Our only purpose in presenting this statement now is to correct the erroneous impression that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is in any sense a party to any arrangement now under way affecting Mr. Hays. This we state that it may serve to clear up any misunderstanding which may exist, and make it perfectly plain to every official and individual in this country that the owners of the motion picture theatres are separate and distinct in their relation, have no affiliation with the manufacturer or producer of pictures, and therefore have in no sense been parties to the move under discussion.

"The month of November is considered a banner month in the motion picture business. Consequent to the efforts of the theatre owners to bring this form of entertainment within the reach of all the people, box office receipts were approximately $12,000,000 less in November, 1921, than in the same month in 1920, while motion picture producers exacted from motion picture theatre owners nearly $4,000,000 more for their pictures in November, 1921, than in the same month of the previous year. This fact is clearly substantiated by Government reports.

"As theatre owners we have the direct contact with the public. We meet and serve the people of the United States daily and in this relation we established the Public Service Department of our organization under the direction of Dr. Francis Holley, of this city, whose efforts along these lines amply prove his efficiency in promoting and extending this highly commendable work. We feel responsible to the American people to maintain the freedom of the screen in every way. We realize that the motion picture is a medium for a high order of public service, and it is our determination to keep th theatre screens of this nation so free fro partisan and kindred influences as t render this wonderful visualizing forc the Screen Press of America, of suprem value to all the people of the country.

"We also want to make the theatr owner the sole judge, guided by the pe ple of his community, of what shall appea on the screen of his theatre, and we hop to be able at all times to guarantee th kind of service to the public. We, there fore, stand in an independent position an would be opposed to any moves, no matte how well intended, which militate agains this generally accepted American att tude."

The executive officers present at th Washington meeting were: Nationa President Sydney S. Cohen, New York W. D. Burford, Aurora, Illinois; W. A True, Hartford, Connecticut; E. M. Fay Providence, Rhode Island; Charles I O'Reilly, New York; John T. Collin Rutherford, N. J.; John Manheimer, Ne York; W. A. Steffes, Minneapolis, Minn. D. A. Harris, Pittsburgh, Pa.; H. H. Lus tig, Cleveland, O.; Edward T. Peter Dallas, Texas; A. R. Pramer, Omaha Nebr.; H. B. Varner, Lexington, N. C. M. J. O'Toole, Scranton, Pa.; C. E Whitehurst, Baltimore, Md.; and G. C Schmidt, Indianapolis, Ind.

New Wage Scale of Chicago Operators Is Ratified

MEMBERS of the Chicago Motion Picture Theatre Owners and the Allied Amusement Association met at Schaefer's Projection Room Monday of this week and ratified the new wage and working agreements which had been negotiated by the joint committee representing the motion picture theatre managers and a committee from the operators' union.

The original demand of fifteen per cent increase, made by Tom Maloy, business agent of the operators' union, was withdrawn after a flat refusal of the theatre men's representatives to consider it, and the final agreement arrived at continues the basic scale of $1.50 per hour, effective from January 11, 1922, to January 11, 1923, with working conditions the same as during the previous year.

Certain concessions, however, were given the operators. They included a raise of pay in de luxe houses, outside the Loop, from $66.67 per week to $75. This will effect such houses as the Pantheon, Riveria, Tivoli, Central Park, Howard, Broadway Strand, Senate and Stratford.

The Loop houses, according to the new agreement, will pay the uniform scale of $80 per week to two men in six-hour shifts and $75 to three men in five-hour shifts. The 1921 State street rate had been $66.67 and Madison street houses had been paying at a higher scale, but now Loop houses will be on an even basis.

Another provision in the new wage contract, is that non-theatrical institutions, which show motion pictures on Saturday and Sunday shall pay $3 per hour to operators, or double time.

National Exhibitor Convention Set for May

Will Be Held in Washington, D. C.; M. P. T. O. of A. Directors Meet in National Capital

DEFINITE arrangements were made at a meeting of the Executive Committee and the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, held in Hotel Washington, Washington, D. C., on January 12, 13 and 14, for the next national convention of the organization, which will be held at the Nation's capital in May. The exact dates for the meeting have not been announced as these are to some extent contingent upon different matters appertaining to the affairs of the organization in several states. The national convention will summon exhibitors from all parts of the United States and will be so arranged as not to conflict with any state meetings.

National President Sydney S. Cohen presided at the sessions, and the convention accommodations of the capital were explained by Julian Brylawski and other Washington theatre-owners. Mr. Cohen named a convention committee with power to make all necessary arrangements for the meeting, and due notice will be sent to all exhibitors from the national office of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. It is the purpose of the national officers and the committees to make this convention the most notable and important gathering yet held in connection with the motion picture business of the United States.

The formal call for the convention will soon be issued. This will contain information of a detailed character, for the benefit of all theatre owners and others interested. It was agreed at the meeting of the Executive Committee and the Board of Directors that special provisions would be made for the exhibition of accessories during the convention. It is likely that because of the large amount of business to be handled the convention will take up an entire week.

President Cohen presented a report to the meetings of the Executive Committee and the Board of Directors of the condition of the organization since the last annual meeting was held in June, 1921, in Minneapolis, Minn. He showed that the growth of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in that time has been remarkable and that it now embraces a membership of nearly 12,000, and is organized in every state, but three, in the Union. Its influence for the benefit of the theatre owner and the industry generally, he said, is felt in all cities and towns and extends in a beneficial manner to the nation's capital and every state capital. This report was approved and the actions of the national officers endorsed, and plans were made for the complete organization of every exhibitor in the country. Reports were also submitted by different state presidents, indicative of the splendid condition of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners in the state units.

The work of the Public Service Department was endorsed, and Dr. Francis Holly, the Director General, commended for the excellent showing made and the manner in which this line of helpful work is being accepted and approved in all parts of the country. Arrangements were made for a tour of members of the Executive Committee and Dr. Holley to different parts of the country, for the purpose of extending this form of service.

The attention of the conference was called to a speech made a few days before by Senator Harrison of Mississippi in which the Senator intimated that the association of Postmaster General Hays with the film industry might mean the use of the screen for political propaganda. The members of the conference decided a statement putting the M. P. T. O. of A. on record as opposed to the use of the screens for political purposes was advisable under the circumstances. The statement also pointed out that the M. P. T. O. of A. is an organization distinct from any manufacturer's association and that the exhibitors' organization has not been a party in any sense of the word to the accession of Postmaster General Hays as an executive for a new producers-distributors association. The M. P. T. O. of A. statement will be found in full on page 713. Copies of this statement were sent to the Senate and the House of Representatives.

National Film Theft Bill Introduced in Congress

A NATIONAL film theft bill which seeks to protect the motion picture industry from film piracy, both here and abroad, has been introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman Joseph Walsh, of Massachusetts, on behalf of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. The bill was drawn by Chairman H. Minot Pitman, of the National Association's Film Theft Committee, after a conference in Washington with Department of Justice officials, members of Congress and Jack S. Connelly, the Association's Washington representative.

The measure provides heavy penalties for persons convicted of trafficing any stolen or duped films, either in interstate or foreign commerce and holds responsible also the buyer or receiver of any such film, providing a fine of $5,000 or imprisonmet for five years or both.

There will be a hearing shortly on the national film theft measure.

Banking Report Shows Situation in Southeast

A LETTER received by William A Johnson, editor of Motion Picture News, from T. O. Tuttle, general manager of the Southeastern Pictures' Corporation, tells plainly the conditions confronting the motion picture industry in the Southeast and the methods his company is adopting to meet the situation. The letter encloses a financial report of the Atlanta Clearing House Association, which reads in part as follows:

"Atlanta bank clearings for 1921, as announced Saturday by the Atlanta Clearing House Association, totaled $2,108,951,591.61, as against $3,256,765,739.48 for 1920."

Commenting on this report the general manager of the Southeastern Pictures' Corporation says in part:

"When you take into consideration the fact that the clearings for 1921 were approximately $1,150,000,000 less than during the year of 1920 you will appreciate the conditions with which the Southeast is confronted.

"We've got to face the situation by pricing our product down to the point where it will permit the exhibitor a modicum of profit. At the same time, we must have a small margin of profit if we expect to continue in business.

"We are adjusting ourselves to the new order of things by revising our prices downward, by reduction in operating expenses, by practical economy along intelligent lines, in order that we may survive, and, at the same time, assist the Southeastern exhibitors to survive. All of this refers to the product we now have in our library. We are wondering what the independent manufacturer and producer proposes doing during the year of 1922 in the same direction.

"We have recently been visited by several representatives of various state rights distributing organizations in New York, and, in every instance, their quotations are just as high as during the year of 1919-1920.

"I hope some of them will be influenced by the enclosed figures. If they are not, what's the answer. . . I don't know."

First National Releases Booked for Two B'way Theatres

"RED HOT ROMANCE," the special John Emerson-Anita Loos production, which is being released through Associated First National, has been booked to open in the Criterion theatre, New York, for an indefinite run, starting January 22.

The cast includes Basil Sydney, Frank Lalor, Tom Wilson, Snitz Edwards, May Collins, Carl Stockdale, Olive Valerie, Roy Atwell, Henry Warwick, Lillian Leighton and Edward Connelly.

S. L. Rothafel has selected "The Silent Call," a Lawrence Trimble-Jane Murfin special production released through First National, as the feature at the Capitol, New York, for the week of January 29.

"The Silent Call" was adapted by Miss Murfin from a Saturday Evening Post story, "The Cross Pull," written by Hal G. Evarts. Mr. Trimble directed the production. John Bowers and Kathryn McGuire head the cast, which also includes William Dyer, James Mason, Nelson McDowell, E. J Brady and Robert Bolder.

Companies Incorporating in N. Y. Few in Number

The slump in the number of motion picture companies incorporating in New York state still continues, there having been but seven companies incorporated the past week, with a total capitalization of $91,000. These companies with their directors and amount of capitalization, follow:

A and L Amusement Corporation, $5,000, L. D. and David Cohn, Alfred Schwarts, New York; Explor-Research Corporation $15,000, Michael Schliesser, Martin Green, Robert Kastl, New York; Great Lakes Film Corporation, $10,000, Sol E. Rose, Herman Goodman, Albany; Emil A. Kuper, New York city; Myriad Exchange, $500, Edwin Grower, A. H. Kestenbaum, Esther Friedman, New York; Park Amusement Corporation, $50,000, C. W. Lyon, S. M. Moisan, Douglas Morris, Buffalo; Arverne Theatre Corporation, $500, G. S. Wittson, Selma Johnson, Max Schellitzer, New York; Eddie Polo Serial Corporation, $10,000, Eddie Polo, Los Angeles; Ivy Ostrow, H. G. Kosch, New York.

Bill at Albany to Define "Educational" Picture

One of the first bills along motion-picture lines to be introduced in the New York State legislature this session will more clearly define just exactly what constitutes an educational picture. While in Albany a few days ago, Chairman Cobb of the State Motion Picture Commission declared he could not tell just how broad or restricted the definition would be.

Another bill will prohibit the exhibition of unpatriotic films in New York state. None such have been produced, according to the Commission, but that body desires to safeguard the future in this respect.

Trouble Brewing on Sunday Shows in Montreal

Trouble may yet be encountered in Montreal, Quebec, through the action of the civic administration in extending permission to local theatres to hold any form of show on Sundays with the exception of burlesque. It is right in this apparently minor exception that trouble is brewing. Manager Harold Hevias of the Orpheum theatre, Montreal, one of the local houses in which burlesque is offered, is dissatisfied, according to his own declaration, because he can give Sunday shows and because other theatre managers in Montreal have made no move to compensate him for the loss. He would offer vaudeville or pictures if these were provided by the managers of others houses, he declares.

It is explained that the stand taken by Mr. Hevias is apparently due to the fact that Sunday shows in Canada are considered "illegal under the Lord's Day Act," but are "tolerated" by the City of Montreal, and that Mr. Hevias feels he is being discriminated against.

Federal Board to Promote Trade Abroad by Films

Motion pictures showing the activities of American Industries are to be produced by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the United States Department of Commerce for circulation abroad, according to advice received by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry through its Washington Bureau. By this method the Government seeks to stimulate trade in foreign countries.

An anouncement by the Department of Commerce says that the co-operation of American industries will be required to insure the success of the undertaking, as it will be necessary for the various manufacturers to pay the entire cost of production.

All inquiries regarding the details of the plans are to be addressed to M. F. Leopold, U. S. Bureau of Mines, Washington, D. C.

Myron Selznick Returns From European Trip

Selznick pictures will have a new distributing medium in Great Britain and Ireland as a result of the recent trip abroad of Myron Selznick, vice-president in charge of production of Selznick Pictures Corp. Mr. Selznick returned recently and announced that he had consummated a deal whereby all Selznick pictures will be distributed hereafter by Pathe Freres Cinema, Ltd., which operates a string of exchanges in the British Isles.

Mr. Selznick announces that he purchased the rights to a popular novel while in England and also signed a London stage favorite to appear in Selznick pictures. Announcement of the details will be made in a short time, stated Mr. Selznick.

Wire Briefs from Coast

M. C. LEVEE, president of the United Studios, announced this week that stage space would be materially expanded and both organization and production facilities increased at the United plant.. Announcement was also made of the purchase of $50,000 worth of electrical equipment. All this comes just at a time when reports are rife of the closing of independent studios in the near future.

Four of the Selznick units are expected to arrive on the Coast this week.

G. E. McCormick, of the Charles Ray studio, was elected president of the Electrical Illuminating Engineers' Society. Howard M. Ewing was elected vice president, and Joseph C. Reynolds secretary and treasurer.

Jesse L. Lasky arrived in Los Angeles this week.

Relief and Protection Ar Sought at Washington

Matters of importance to the film in terests were taken up with the Federa authorities last week by representative of the National Association of the Mc tion Picture Industry.

On Tuesday, January 10th, an applica tion was made for an extension of si months in which to comply with ordinanc compelling housekeeping improvements i the Washington exchanges. The ord nance is at present effective March 1s It was also suggested to the District Com missioners that the rule requiring fibr lined, corrugated, metal-film containe be modified. It was pointed out that cor tainers without fibre-lining afforded ever needed safeguard. The Commissione were also urged to allow distributors to r place the worn-out containers with a typ made of heavy metal corrugated on th tops. The Commissioners took the appl cations under advisement.

The introduction of a national filr theft bill to prevent interstate transport tion in stolen or duped films and copyrig protection for American films in forei countries were also discussed with Fe eral officials.

H. Minot Pitman, chairman of the filr theft committee of the Nationl Associ tion, conferred with Department of Ju tice officials in an endeavor to stop t pirating and duping of films for Japan.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 910 S. MICHIGAN AVE.

Representatives of forty-three more Chicago motion picture houses have joined the Chicago Motion Picture Theatre Owners, according to President John Silha, who states that the strength and firmness manifested by his organization in its negotiations with the operators union impressed Chicago exhibitors and brought home to them the desirability and benefit of becoming members. The new members include Lubliner and Trinz, Circuit of seventeen houses; Philip Frank, Illinois; J. Cooper, 20th Century; L. A. Ulbrick and Chas. H. Ryan, Ben Hur; V. T. Lynch, Tiffin; A. Marks, Jr., Apollo; Ed. I. Bloom, Jackson Park; Franklin Amusement Co., Lyceum and Franklin; Diamond, Grayland; C. Heinen, Crescent; Louis Blume, Crystal; Dissen and Pekin, Aristo; J. Schwartz, Hamilton; J. Pailey, Empire; Elmer E. Benesch, Bell; John Boleng, Armitage; H. Lutz, Century; C. F. Fricke, Karlov; O. E. Hamond, Vendome, Pickford and Phoenix; Tom Petrulas, Lawndale; G. Petrulas, Weneeda; Thos. A. Murray, Thalia; Hollender and Halper, Triangle; Hak Amusement Co., Regent; Al Lyons, Peoples; Michael Siegel, New Home; Geo. Goumas, New Mabel.

Richard Fox, hustling Universal salesman, is in the city for a few days after covering the western part of the state, and reports that Manager E. R. Cummings, of the Fort Armstrong theatre, Rock Island, has started for his home in Oregon where he will spend a two weeks' vacation and rest up after his hard work of the past several months. Joe Hopp, according to Mr. Fox, will take personal charge of the Fort Armstrong theatre during the absence of Mr. Cummings.

Alfred Berlin, of Rock Falls, opened his handsome new Lyric theatre in that city on Saturday, and got away to big business. The Lyric is a four-hundred seat theatre, and a modern, cozy house with up-to-date equipment for the comfort and pleasure of its patrons.

Brayton Bradford, of the Majestic theatre, at Streeter, Illinois, is back on the job after a short vacation.

Cecil Maberry, Chicago manager of Goldwyn, has reengaged Ralph Ravenscraft, press representative for "Theodora," during its run in Chicago to handle press and exploitation for this super feature throughout the territory. The picture opened to big houses in a number of key cities last week, and indications are that it will rank high in the list of January box-office attractions.

Danny Gray, Marshall Neilan's editor, brought the negative of "Penrod" to the Rothacker Chicago laboratory for release printing. He expects to pay New York a short visit before returning to the coast.

A scene from George Fitzmaurice's production for Paramount, "Three Live Ghosts," featuring Anna Q. Nilsson and Norman Kerry

Short Service Department Manager Roy Alexander, of Universal, is meeting with considerable success in his efforts to interest theatre owners in running a "short reel subject night" once a week, and has received very favorable reports from exhibitors who have been trying out this plan.

Bill Alexander, of the Alexander Film Corporation, has been in the city for several days in the interest of his Sherlock Holmes two reelers. While here he made his headquarters at the Morrison Hotel.

R. N. Abbey, formerly connected with the Pathe Exchange at Kansas City, has arrived to take charge of the newly organized educational department of Pathe's local exchange. He will devote his attention exclusively to the non-theatrical field.

The sales force of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has organized a bowling team. Its members are under the impression that there is no team along "film row" that can give them an argument. In fact they are so "chesty" that they dare any film bowling team to challenge them to combat.

Manager Harry Willard, of Wid Gunning, Inc., local exchange, has added E. S. Rowley to his sales staff and assigned him to city territory. Mr. Rowley formerly was connected with the Realart exchange under the management of Mr. Willard and was considered one of the best business producers of that organization.

W. D. Burford, secretary of the state organization, has returned from Washington, where he attended the conference of Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America officers, at which it was decided to hold the annual convention of the national organization at the nation's capitol. Mr. Burford extended Chicago's invitation to hold the national convention in this city and received assurances that the Windy City would be earnestly considered for the 1923 convention, although it was not deemed advisable to meet in Chicago this year. Mr. Burford is enthused over the plans which have been made for the Washington convention and believes that the delegates will have a fine program of entertainment offered them, as well as an active business session. A. R. Palmer, of Omaha, and Al Steffis, of Minneapolis, who were among those attending the meeting, passed through Chicago on their return trip and both agreed with Mr. Burford that the convention will be top-notcher, and praised the plans being drawn up for the comfort and entertainment of delegates and visitors.

Clyde E. Elliott, of the Clyde E. Elliott Amusement Enterprises, has organized a sales staff composed of H. W. Peters, D. A. Kohn, H. J. Corbett and A. J. Normal, who will cover Illinois in the interests of the Dempsey - Willard championship pictures. This attraction had a very successful run at the Band Box theatre, Chicago, where it opened on Christmas day.

President Rhode, of the Wisconsin Motion Picture Theatre Owners, was a Chicago visitor this week and reports a slight but steady improvement in business throughout Wisconsin. While the gain in theatre attendance is only apparent in spots, the renewed activity of manufacturing concerns in the different industrial centers of the Badger state is already benefiting theatres in those localities. An indication of the hunger for amusement felt by many of the workers, who have been out of jobs, was shown when in several instances, on receipt of their first pay checks, they came direct to the theatre to cash the check and see their first movie in several weeks.

Fisher and Ashbach, of La Salle, Illinois, who operate a chain of theatres, including houses in La Salle, Kewanee, and Madison, Wisconsin, have opened offices in the North American Building, Chicago, where booking and buying of pictures for their string will be done. Mr. Ashbach, who has been managing the La Salle theatre at La Salle, will be in charge of the new Chicago headquarters of the concern.

Three thousand school children told about their movie attendance and tastes in response to a questionnaire sent out by the Better Films Committee of the Illinois Council of Parent-Teacher Associations. Of these, 87% attended from one to seven or more shows every week. "I go to the movies nine times a week, every night and also in the afternoon on Saturday and Sunday," was the answer of one youngster to the query, "How many times a week do you go to the movies?" Answers such as, "I always go two times a week except in Lent; I never go in Lent," and "I always go every Friday night as there is no school the next day," indicated the regularity of their movie-going. The question, "What kind of pictures do you prefer?" brought out some interesting data. "The pictures I like best are those which scare you," "Good sensible pictures where people are very poor and grow rich," "Guns and police wagons, because people are all sad and excited," "Travels with Burton Holmes," "Mystery, but not too deep," "Lots of fighting when men are brave and fight for a girl," "Good books like Pollyanna," "How things are made, pictures of fisheries, etc., and good western scenery," "Educational pictures like The Lincoln Highwayman." are types of the answers received.

'Frisco Ladies Compete for "White Hands" Prize

A tie-up contest with the San Francisco Examiner got columns of free publicity for "White Hands," playing at the Granada theatre, recently.

The Examiner advertised that prizes, including a platinum ring, and the opportunity of appearing in the next Graf Production, would be awarded to the women judged to have the most beautiful hands. Those who wished to enter the contest were instructed to send a photograph to the paper.

The contest was started a few days before the picture opened, and continued for a week. During that time thousands of photographs were received from all parts of California.

The judges of the contest were: Haig Patigian, sculptor; Hobart Bosworth, the star of the picture; Jack Partington, managing director of the Granada, and Max Graf, producer of the picture.

The Examiner ran many stories giving information about the white hands contest, in each instance mentioning the name of the production, the theatre, and the play date. On the day when the picture opened, it carried four pictures of pretty girls in a four-column layout, with a two-column story.

Gould Gets Florists' Aid on "Night Rose"

On the opposite page is shown a picture of the window display on "The Night Rose," originated by Harry J. Gould, manager of the Hippodrome, Fort Worth, Texas.

Mr. Gould tied up with local florists, on the title of the photoplay and got an entire window. In the window was erected a small stage, five feet high, six feet wide and two feet deep, with a background of black plush. Flowers and ferns were arranged all about the little stage, while in the center of the stage was a single large rose, with a big card identifying it as the night rose.

The only light in the window was a spot centered on the rose, the title of picture and the place of showing. The beauty of the display attracted the attention of all passers-by and Mr. Gould and the florists received many compliments on it.

Good Campaign on "My Boy" Put Over at Los Angeles

During the run of "My Boy," at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, a number of exploitation stunts were put over by Henry D. Wilson of the United Studios.

During the first week of the run, 3,000 poor and orphaned children were given a free show with attendant word of mouth and newspaper publicity forthcoming as a result thereof.

A "Garment Matinee" was staged under the auspices of the Assistance League of Southern California. The matinee was held in the morning and did not conflict in any manner with the usual show routine. The admission price was one wearable garment or bundle of clothing to fit a poor child, boy or girl, and the accompanying cut showing the amount of clothing received will attest that the stunt went over big. Also more publicity, free and on the front pages for the "My Boy" engagement.

The Kinema management also made arrangements with the Los Angeles Evening Express whereby the theatre and Jackie Coogan were hosts to over 1,000 newsboys.

Three days advance publicity on this gave the Kinema and the Coogan production a great send off in the news columns of the Express with special art every day.

A parade with the boys started things off, permits from the police being granted for a line of march down the main streets of the city. Banners bearing the words "We are going to see Jackie Coogan in 'My Boy' at the Kinema Theatre" were on each and some twenty-five of these were successfully put into use.

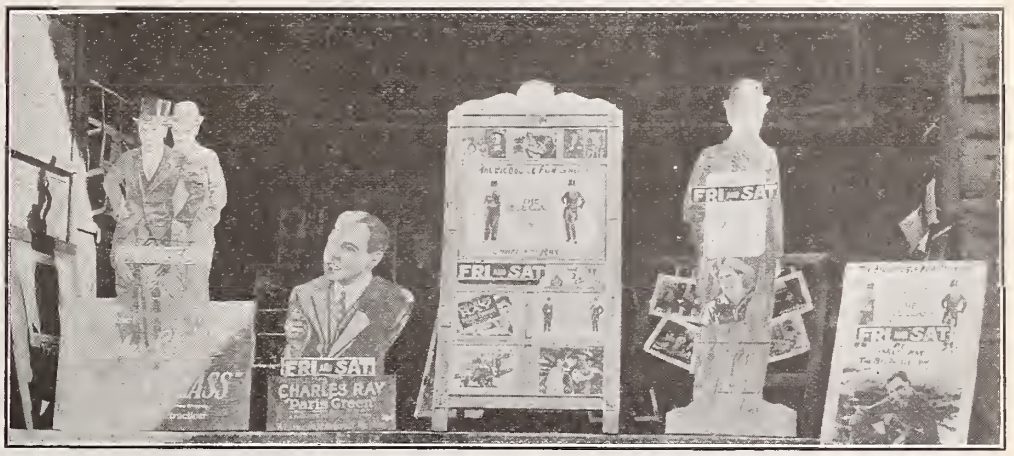
Home Made Crosses Used as "Man—Woman—Marriage" Exploitation

THE use of about fifty home-made crosses or millposts designed from the cuts in the press-book and set up in conspicuous spots of Pomeroy, O., proved an inexpensive campaign which helped put over "Man-Woman-Marriage" for A. W. Kaspar, of the Electric theatre, that city.

The crosses were made of plain wood about 30 inches high, were painted in black and the title was lettered in white. The cost, according to Kaspar, did not exceed $5. In addition to this Mr. Kaspar made his campaign effective by inserting teaser ads in the daily paper—enlarging the space from day to day.

Talking Machines Playing Tune Exploit "Old Oaken Bucket"

A NOVEL stunt was used in the showing of "The Old Oaken Bucket" at the Regent theatre, Corning, N. Y. A phonograph store a block away from the theatre in one direction played the song so it could be heard a considerable distance, while a block on the other side, a candy store did the same thing, so that anyone approaching the theatre from either direction was greeted by the famous old tune. In the lobby was another phonograph grinding out the melody. The stunt was effective and inexpensive.



Hyman Stages Atmospheric Prologue for "Peter Ibbetson"

Apple blossoms fell in profusion from the branches of a gnarled old tree upon the stage of the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre in a stage prologue which Managing Director Edward L. Hyman designed to beautify the film version of "Peter Ibbetson."

The falling blossoms actually fell, too, feathery colorful things. Mr. Hyman contrived this origination through use of a concealed fan which at a designated time began revolving and sent the artificial blossoms floating from the cut-out branches of the tree, even upon two dancers who achieved a pretty dance while two operatic stars sang the pretty Jacobi-Kreisler number "Apple Blossoms," in duet.

Mr. Hyman reproduced the Peter Ibbetson garden as described in the novel and as pictured in the film. For a center piece he used a huge gnarled old apple tree cut-out set showing the tree in full bloom. The adult Peter and the grown-up duchess were the central figures and were revealed on left stage. At the right they were shown as frolicing children at play beneath the ancient apple tree. The pair of youngsters sang the duet from the Kreisler-Jacobi number, "Apple Blossoms." The grown Peter and the duchess were in period dress.

The lighting offects were focussed generally upon the apple tree thus bringing out the natural blossom tints. This was done by a combination of hues, namely, amber and pink with green and white lights streaming through the branches of the tree.

Inexpensive Stunt to Exploit "Alf's Button"

A simple but effective stunt for the exploitation of "Alf's Button" has been devised by M. P. Wetherell, manager of the Empress theatre, Vernon, B. C.

Mr. Wetherell got out a herald on which among other things was printed the offer of a reward of $3.00 and two tickets to the Empress for the person who would return "Alf's button" to the theatre.

Some specific instructions were given, besides the inference that a button belonging to an "Alf" had been lost. The herald said in part: All you have to do is to inquire at the house where you suspect Alf's Button is held, and say "strike me pink," "Have you got Alf's button? It's to be shown at the Empress next Wednesday and Thursday." Whereupon, if you have hit upon the mysterious house of concealment, the holder will at once hand you the button. Don't forget what you have to say and be polite.

You must wear this paper ribbon as an identification that you are authorized to search for Alf's button.

The paper ribbon was the herald which had been printed in narrow width and about ten inches long. The other side of the herald had a comedy cut, a big catch line reading "Have You Got Alf's Button?" and some billing for the showing at the theatre. The stunt went over in great shape, every youngster in town donning his paper ribbon and starting out on his search for the "button," which Mr. Wetherell had planted at the home of one of his friends.

The button was painted on card board to resemble the one that "Alf" of the picture held in his hand. When the button was found, the boy who was successful was instructed to mount same on a pole and march to the theatre for his reward.

Mabel Normand Imitator Sells "Molly O" to St. Louis Fans

The New Grand Central theatre of St. Louis used a clever exploitation stunt for the showing of "Molly O." A young lady who closely resembled Mabel Normand in size and features was secured to wander about the down town streets dressed as is the heroine of the picture. At every store where a window display of unusual attractiveness was shown she stopped and soon attracted great crowds of people by her apparently unsophisticated and naive comments on the goods shown and the beauty of the displays. As soon as a crowd had congregated she threw back the folds of a cape to display a legend reading, "I am Molly O. See me at the New Grand Central this week."

The merchants fell rapidly in line with the exploitation and invited the young woman into their stores in many instances to further spread the propaganda of the picture.

This is the way Will Steege, manager of the Capitol theatre, Great Falls, Mont., advertised his recent showing of "Three Word Brand."

An Apology for Mixing "Mets"

PAGE 506 of the January 14th issue of of the NEWS, exhibited a reproduction of an ad for "R. S. V. P." with a caption alleging that the cut was made from a newspaper display used by the Crandall Metropolitan theatre, Washington, D. C., whereas the credit should have gone to the Metropolitan theatre, Atlanta, of which Willard D. Patterson is the managing director.

Correction is herewith made with apologies for the error.

Another of Cutts' Mechanical Lobby Displays Described

On the opposite page will be found three views of a lobby display, a unique combination of painted flats, cut-outs and electrical lighting, on "Conflict."

The lobby was in two parts. The right hand cut on the page shows the left hand part of the lobby, the feature of which was the log jam. Mr. Cutts describes his lighting and mechanical effects in connection with this portion of the display as follows:

"I designed a lighting effect which operates for 10 seconds every half-minute, to the accompaniment of a howling wind. The log transparency over the box office is also illuminated during the storm, showing Miss Dean with the startled expression of the one sheet. At other times the log is illuminated with a red glow from below and the face was invisible.

"Two central trees were made from porch posts sawed in two and painted.

"The effect of waterfalls in motion with logs rolling over the edge was produced by a stereopticon arrangement of my own design. The river was also illuminated, as was the moon and house windows.

"Colors on the left were natural wood colors. On the right blue and yellows. The left outside column copy was worked around Red Book magazines containing the story. In the right hand column were carried excerpts from the New York papers, with the actual headlines of each paper dividing the comments.

"All effects were automatic—no expense for operation and none for installation, except our own time."

"Dream Street" Lobby Front Finds Favor with Mansfield Fans

"We decorated the posts of the entrance with elaborately hand painted scenes, which boxed in the pillars. In every one of these boxes, something with a light in it, was featured. Two of them had lamp posts. Transparent paper indicated the lamps, and red lights were placed behind them. In another one, Chinese lanterns were featured. Again the lanterns were made of transparent paper, and various colored lights shone through. It produced an excellent effect. It wasn't very expensive, and it brought us the crowds."

"Over the Hill" Essays Part of Bijou's Campaign

A NEWSPAPER contest which aroused a large city's Council of Mothers to favorable endorsement was recently conducted by the management of the Bijou theatre, El Paso, Tex., in connection with the exploitation of "Over the Hill."

Using eight photographs of Mary Carr, the El Paso Times, the city's best newspaper, was induced to conduct an essay contest. Each of the eight photographs show Mrs. Carr posed as a famous woman in American history. In the contest, which lasted nine days, one picture was published daily, and prizes of cash and tickets to see "Over the Hill" were offered to the school children who discerned the identity of the women portrayed and wrote the best essays on her life.

Essays were received from more than 75 per cent of the school children of El Paso. Teachers in the schools took up the idea and gave lectures on the famous women. This added fuel to the publicity fire, and as a result the educational value of the contest grew to such proportions that the Council of Mothers of El Paso, through their president, praised the manager of the theatre in the daily newspapers for his constructive work, which combined advertising and true education.

Circle Theatre, Indianapolis Stages Big Campaign for "Molly O"

From Indianapolis and the Circle theatre comes another account of an exploitation campaign for "Molly O" that neglected no opportunities and brought the engagement of the picture to every fan of the city.

Here is an abbreviated account of what was done:

One hundred window displays, advertising both the "Molly O Biscuit," and the motion picture.

A contest among all the grocery stores in the city for the best window display on "Molly O."

An advance campaign in the newspapers; on the screen at the theatre; through one sheets and tack cards, programs and other printed matter.

Five thousand letters, written in a personal vein, to a selected clientele.

"Molly O" Exploitation Interests Kansas City Merchants

Here is another account of a "Molly O" exploitation campaign, for which H. G. Hill, representing First National Exchange of Kansas City, and Howard E. Jameyson, publicity director of the Liberty Theatre, Kansas City, are entitled to credit.

The usual cooperative window display advertising in connection with the Loose-Wiles "Molly O" biscuit.

A tie-up with a local song shop, in which the song and picture, "Molly O," were given publicity.

One hundred stores competed in a window decorating contest, in which the best decorated windows featuring the picture, song and other "Molly O" products drew prizes of $25.00, $20,00, $15,00 and $10.00, respectively.

In conjunction with the window displays, considerable free publicity was obtained through the press. A 2 x 8 inch ad was run a week in advance of the picture, featuring the theme of the picture.

Racing Car Cut-Out Feature of Lobby Display

FOR a two-day engagement of "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" at the Rialto theatre, Augusta, Ga., Manager Frank Miller secured a small red racing car as much like the one used in the picture as possible, and placed it in the lobby.

A dummy dressed somewhat like Johnny Hines, in his racing togs, was placed back of the wheel. The engine of the car was exposed, and was running. The noise of the motor, and the mud-stained, somewhat battered appearance of the car never failed to attract attention.

Lobby display tie-up for "Molly O" a part of the exploitation campaign for this picture put over for the recent showing at the California theatre, San Francisco

Movie Carnival Carrier's Latest

Small Town Exhibitor Gets Aid from R-C Pictures' Exploiteer

A "MOVIE CARNIVAL WEEK" was the idea that R-C Pictures exploiteer Eddie Carrier originated at Batesville, Ind., when he arrived in town to help Managers Charles Gibson and Frank Messmer of the Gibson theatre put over a solid week of R-C pictures.

An unusual newspaper and advertising campaign for Batesville was carried out. The newspapers had much larger display space for the Gibson theatre than had before been carried by any theatre. There was a lot of special publicity reading matter in both papers for some time before the carnival.

The billboards bloomed out with 24-sheets, 6-sheets, 3-sheets and 1-sheets. Each billboard carried this slogan: "This R-C Production Presented During Grand Movie Carnival Week —Entire Week January 1st to 8th."

Across the stage were placed cardboard boxes, with a letter cut from the front of each, backed with red tissue. An incandescent was placed in each box, and the patrons, for ten days before Carnival Week, read during the showing of the comedy: "Grand Movie Carnival." One hundred special window cards were used about town. Taxis carried canvas banners advertising "Movie Carnival Week at the Gibson." Special cards were printed and placed beside the time clocks in offices and plants, including seven big furniture factories, announcing the shows and requesting, under Mr. Gibson's signature, all employees to participate in the carnival week. Mr. Carrier also visited the various industrial plants during the noon hours and gave brief talks on the picture industry, working in publicity for the Gibson attractions in an effective way.

The "ten names" circulars used in other campaigns were adapted for use in this one. This form of advertising already has been described in Motion Picture News.

Three hundred postcards, handwritten, were mailed to a special list in Batesville. Those addressed to men were signed with a woman's name and those to women were signed with a man's name. Mr. Carrier also inaugurated a rebate ticket system entitling all patrons who presented them to a reduction of five cents on every adult admission.

The theatre and lobby were decorated profusely in the carnival spirit, and this air was carried throughout the house during the week. The result of these efforts was that the house was filled every night, and the "take" at the afternoon shows more than paid the cost of the campaign.

Gersdorf's "The Sheik" Ballyhoo Gets the Business

The above cut shows an effective ballyhoo on "The Sheik" used by Manager Phil. Gersdorf, of the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., which stimulated much interest in addition to lavish newspaper space. The only expense was the hire of the horses, as his two boy ushers were glad to "show off," and some old but serviceable cheese cloth of loud colors furnished the Arab costumes. In addition to uptown parading, Gersdorf sent them out to a big football game, where they were a great hit, and were invited to head the "snake dance" put on by the fans.

"Foolish Wives" Lobby Decorations Attractive

PERHAPS no lobby display ever used to exploit a motion picture in New York is as attractive, artistic, or as intrigueing to the eye as the one which is getting the attention of Broadway's throngs at the Central theatre where "Foolish Wives" is the attraction for an infinite engagement.

The accompanying cuts will show in part what has been originated in the way of using cut-outs with artistically lighted backgrounds reproduced from the picture, but plain black and white cannot give an adequate idea of what has been accomplished by clever artists, and especially in connection with the mechanical display illustrated at the right.

Above

Showing a picture of a mechanical display which reproduces an actual scene from the picture. Cut-outs of principal characters in the production are shown about a roulette wheel. The wheel is practical as is also the hand of the keeper. The figure "rakes" intermittently as the wheel stops. The painting used for a back drop for the scene is a faithful picture of the exterior of Monte Carlo.

Back lighting with tiny concealed spots in colors bring the figures into effective relief and aids in giving depth and life like realism to the whole display. This with the other displays except the mechanical contrivance appearing above are located in the lobby. The mechanical display stands outside the storm doors next to the sidewalk.

"Queen of Sheba" Campaign Sells Picture to Uniontown Fans

Two lines of effort were utilized by the management of the William Penn theatre, Uniontown, Pa., for the publicizing of the recent run of "Queen of Sheba." These were newspaper space and window displays.

Because it was decided that these two should be the only avenues of exploitation, it was necessary to concentrate upon each. The newspaper campaign began two weeks before the opening of the picture, with teaser ads. For an entire week the dailies of Uniontown mysteriously referred to "the glaring wealth of the deserts," the "caravans of Bible fame," and the "great kingdom of Solomon."

About six days before the picture was scheduled to open its run, eighth-page ads began to appear describing the picture by singling out the details. Two days before the opening half-page ads were used. The splurge came as a climax to the long series of interest-compelling advertisements and culminated in the creation of county-wide attention.

The campaign was so successful that many hundreds of people in the surrounding territory drove into Uniontown to witness the production.

Cleverness featured the window displays, which appeared in almost every merchant's window in one form or another. The window cards printed at the expense of the theatre were distributed among the stores and were used in every instance. The box-office returns justified the concentration on the two forms of exploitation to such a degree that it was determined to try it again.

Cut-Outs Advertise Comedy Attraction at Strand, Seattle

THE Strand theatre, one of the Jensen and von Herberg chain in Seattle, last week used especially good lobby advertising when they adopted the almost life size cutout of Bobby Vernon and Josephine Hill in "Pure and Simple" for one of the main attention getters in front of the theatre.

Personal Letters Sell "Hail the Woman" for Clavier

W. C. Clavier, manager of the new State theatre at Fargo, N. D., conceived a novel scheme to induce the townspeople to read his personal letters to them advertising "Hail the Woman." He realized that the picture was of particular appeal to the women and so decided on the personal letter. But he didn't want these letters to find the waste basket. After considerable study his plan was worked out on the theory that the average business man's time is worth three cents a minute. Feeling that a woman's time was just as valuable, he incorporated this fact in his letter and enclosed a check for three cents to cover the time needed to read the letter.

Each check carried Clavier's signature and was genuine and it is safe to wager that the novelty and originality of the stunt caught the recipient's eye and that the letters were read and saved. According to all reports Clavier's little idea was a huge success from a box office standpoint.

Skinner Interests Children with Special Animal Herald

Arthur L. Skinner, manager of the Victoria theatre, Buffalo, has all the children in the neighborhood talking about "The Adventures of Tarzan," which he has booked for showing at the Saturday matinees. In order to attract the youngsters, Mr. Skinner had a large number of heralds printed with pictures of animals on them. These he pastes on cardboards, cuts them up into many pieces, and each Saturday afternoon distributes the pieces by the handful to the eager youngsters. To those who paste the pieces together as they should be he gives a free admission as a prize. You can bet every kid in the neighborhood is pasting.

Tabloid Light Opera Presented at Cleveland

PAUL GUSDANOVIC, of the Strand, Orpheum and other Cleveland (O.) theatres, has adopted a policy of light opera in tabloid lengths in connection with his picture program at the Circle.

His first tabloid was an hour version of "Mikado," presented with elaborate costumes and a capable cast of people. The second presentation was "Pinafore," used in connection with the showing of "A Sailor-Made Man." The musical program is proving a successful innovation and Cleveland picture fans are enjoying the music immensely.

Omaha Theatre Builds Classy Lobby Display

One of the most attractive ideas in lobby display was executed by the management of the Sun theatre, Omaha, Neb., in connection with the run of "Queen of Sheba."

Near the front of the Sun lobby is an enclosure used as a waiting room for patrons and visitors. Marble columns and walls frame the enclosure and give it a somewhat impressive atmosphere. With this as the nucleus, a large painting of the Queen of Sheba, made by the staff artist and lettered in Hebrew, and some black satin, were used to complete the setting.

The painting, which measured 3½ by 6 feet, rested on an easel about six feet to the rear of the threshold of the little rest room. The border was covered with neat strips of the satin, which was also used as a background for the entire display, being attached to the rear of the picture frame and running diagonally forward to another and much larger frame standing three feet in front of the portrait.

Hidden from view were a series of electric lights which illuminated the painting, thus making it even more noticeable against black background.

Above the entrance was a small placard with the words, "Sun Parlor." The display was one of the best of the season.

Bears All the Ear Marks of Being New

PROCTOR'S theatre, Plainfield, N. J. has devised a bit of courtesy that promises to add much to the box office statement.

Manager Richard B. Sheridan, by "hook or crook" and much inquiry among fraternal orders, public records etc. has found out the birthdays of a host of Plainfield residents. So when one these events come along he sends Mr. Plainfield Resident, a nicely engraved swell looking which congratulates, him on his birthday and presents him with an invitation to attend Proctor's as a guest of the management.

Sheridan has gone crazy over the stunt. It means only five to ten pairs of free admission which is dirt-cheap for the good-will and the word-of-mouth advertising which has made the stunt the talk of the town.

The letters are sent out every evening so as to be delivered in the early morning mail the next day. No additional help was required in the office.

Fred Greene, the New York exploiteer invented the stunt, and sold it to Sheridan.

Fine Presentation of "Theodora"

Saenger's Neglect No Opportunities in Putting Over Goldwyn Spectacle

W. R. FERGUSON, Goldwyn Exploiter, recently gave the engagement of "Theodora" at the Tulane theatre, New Orleans, his official attention.

The arcade of the theatre was decorated with more than 500 flags of all nations, the American, French and Italian predominating. Linked up with a fine lobby frame display, this gave a most striking appearance.

The next step in the campaign was to secure the services of a lion that had been a part of a circus which had closed in New Orleans. The lion in its cage was sent about town on a float that carried appropriate banners tying the stunt up with the picture.

A special prologue was devised for the Tulane screening. A popular singer, costumed as Theodora, appeared sitting on a high throne, with the Palace as a background. She sang "Forbidden Love" in Italian, starting the song as the curtain rose, with stage and house in complete darkness. Then a dim light appeared at the stage centre as a fade-in, with cut-out box effect wings separating and widening, as the lights grew stronger, showing the singer on the throne through an opening resembling the dome of a mosque. House lights were still out and as the mosque was painted jet black, it gave an artistic contrast.

As the singer finished the song, the opening dissolved and the lights dimmed out and the picture faded in on the set without a moment's being lost. This prologue was received with great applause at every performance.

The same effect was worked at the moment in the photoplay, when Theodora let the lions loose in the arena. Just as the lions are coming out of the cages, in the picture, the aperture was gradually opened, disclosing a wild lion roaring and trying madly to break out of the cage. The aperture was left open for about a minute and it was faded out into the picture with the lions rushing into the arena. The stunt was most effective, making the audiences gasp. The lion was not fed until after the stunt was over, but he was allowed to smell the meat just before the scene took place, with the result that he was always furious to break out of the cage and get to the meat.

At the tag of the picture, the soloist rendered "Se" in Italian, the words and music fitting in perfectly with the execution scene.

"Gobs" Advertise "A Sailor Made Man"

Billy Exton, formerly Sells-Floto circus publicity man, of Cleveland, and lately secured by Eddie Zorn, manager of the Temple theatre, Toledo, O., as exploitation representative, began his duties on his new job by putting over "A Sailor-Made Man," a recent Temple attraction.

Six ex-service "Gobs" were secured to display banners on which had been printed: "To help a few unemployed ex-service men, the Temple theatre is paying us to advertise Harold Lloyd in 'A Sailor-Made Man.'"

Ottawa Merchants Help Brooker Put Over "The Sheik"

THE music stores and book shops of Ottawa, Ontario, co-operated with Manager Fred Brocker of Loew's Ottawa theatre in boosting "The Sheik" which was the film attraction at this theatre during the week of January 9. All of the local music houses used special window displays in which "The Sheik" music and records were featured along with cutouts for the picture while the stationers had displays of the book along with large signs advising the people to read the book and see the film production.

On the same program at the theatre was a picture showing the visit to Ottawa of George Melford, the director of "The Sheik" during the week that the feature was shown. Melford is a native of Ottawa and he arranged to visit his home town when the picture was being presented.

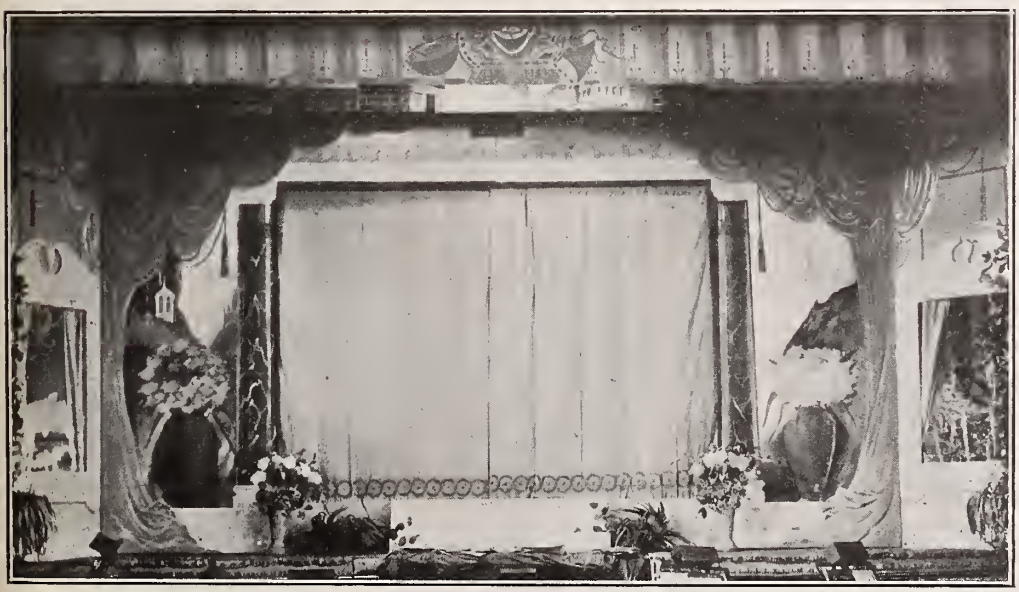
"Connecticut Yankee" Goes Fishing in Ohio

The exploitation campaign for "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," at the Columbia theatre, Dayton, O., included an original and attention-compelling cardboard hanger which was attached to door-knobs, automobiles, and streetcars throughout the city during the run of the photodrama.



The hanger was about seven inches in length and was cut to resemble a fish. The lettering was in white on a background of crimson. The cut-out dangled from a blue string drawn through the mouth of the fish.

On one side of the figure was the inscription, "GET IN THE SWIM—BUT—DON'T BE A FISH—FOLLOW THE CROWD TO THE COLUMBIA THEATRE. On the reverse side was "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court—MARK TWAIN'S GREATEST COMEDY."

Ten thousand of the fish were distributed by boys, who were rewarded for their services with passes to the theatre.

Schatts Holiday Stage Setting Makes Real Hit

Judge John W. Schatt is one of the livest small town exhibitors in western New York and his opera house in Gowanda, N. Y., has been the subject of many stories on unusual presentation. At Christmas time the Judge extended himself on "building in" the Yuletide atmosphere. The entire theatre was decorated with wreaths and Xmas garlands, but the feature of the decoration was the stage setting. At each side of the screen Judge Schatt built two little rooms in which he placed Christmas trees, beautifully lighted and decorated. A large frame with silk curtains gave the finishing touch to these sets. Trellis work was placed up the side of the stage, with greens entwined in the lattice. Large baskets of flowers were placed on each side of the stage. Judge Schatt also had a large Christmas tree in the lobby and the front of the house was appropriately decorated in red and green. Music appropriate to the season, including vocal and cornet solos, was also prominent on the program. Judge Schatt has one of the most attractive little theatres at the western end of the state and it is the rendezvous of folks not only in Fredonia, but for miles around.

McClure's "Molly O" Exploitation

Winnipeg Exhibitor Goes After Normand Picture with Plenty of Pep

MANAGER J. M. McCLURE of the Allen theatre, Winnipeg, used a prelude of his presentation of "Molly O" that was not only most effective, but also very reasonable—a thing most exhibitors are taking into consideration during these hard times.

The accompanying cut shows in detail the stage setting, comprising a practical fence half way across the stage set about two feet in front of a painted drop representing "Tenement Row's" back yard. Practical post and clothes line upheld the garments shown and a practical ash-can served as atmosphere and bench for the little singer, who sang one verse and two choruses of the song "Molly O." During the introduction to the number she was seen walking behind the fence—only the top of her hat showing. It was so timed that she peeked around the fence corner just at the opening notes of the verse of the song which she started singing, accompanying the words of the song with special business. About four bars from the end of the second verse she arose and started off stage, ending the song to big applause at every show. The prelude was inexpensive and very effective.

Mr. McClure used every possible means of exploitation for the picture. Tie-ups were made with soda fountains, shoe stores, millinery shops, silk shops, hat shops, music stores, grocery stores and department stores. Practically every line of merchandise was represented by a special "Molly O" style in Winnipeg and pretty near every shop on the main streets had window cards in their display windows and inside their stores in tie-up with the theatre. In addition the newspapers were used extensively with slugs over ten days in advance—thirty-one inch slugs being used daily for five days with "Molly O," the theatre name, and the date. The following five days good-sized display space was purchased, ending in a big spread, Saturday and then coming back Monday with another big spread.

Mr. McClure used 25,000 postal cards with his mimeographed signature, guaranteeing the picture, and an equal number of heralds were distributed.

Putting "Peck's Bad Boy" Over "Down Texas Way"

"Peck's Bad Boy" was recently booked by Manager C. R. Sullivan of the Fair theatre, Amarillo, Texas. The next step was to plan an exploitation campaign that would make Amarillo sit up and take notice.

Here is what Mr. Sullivan did with results that made the box office fat:

A sixty-foot window of a local furniture store was painted so it would appear from a distance that a few stray bricks had been thrown through it. At various places on the window were placed which said that "Peck's Bad Boy," or "Jackie Coogan" had done the job. This stunt was pulled two weeks before the showing.

A week before the opening, Mr. Sullivan billed the town with stock paper, like a circus.

The next step was to start a Jackie Coogan contest, with four prizes of ten, five, three and two dollars each to be given for the best imitation of Jackie Coogan. The contest was to be staged at the Fair on the opening night and was billed as a part of the evening's entertainment. The audience enjoyed the children's part of the show quite as well as it did the picture.

The newspapers were utilized to good advantage with display ads and reader notices, slides were used and a special trailer run for a full week before the opening.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The Little Minister—

A splendid drawing card when well exploited for most people have read Barrie's book and want to see tbe picturization. (Middle West.)

I consider this a wonderful picture and as we had average business on it, I cannot understand this, as it should draw much better. (West.)

Very good picture to very poor business. (East.)

Fine production which drew well. (West.)

Very good picture. Business fair. (Middle West.)

Under the Lash—

Picture went over very well. At any rate, attendance was fair. (South.)

Proved excellent box office attraction and played to big business. (Middle West.)

Rent Free—

Not up to Wallace Reid standard. Story too thin; comedy too forced. Business not up to average. (Middle West.)

The name Reid is only thing that held up this business. Average business. (West.)

Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford—

Tbis was a very good picture. Tbe comment we beard was uniformly good and apparently quite sincere. (South.)

Picture well liked by manager and critics but pulled off before end of week. Business bad. This house is especially a woman's house and they did not seem attracted by it. (Middle West.)

Humoresque—

Drew better class of people who bad heard much of the picture from previous run. Did not attract general patronage. Belief that people are afraid of weepy pictures. (Middle West.)

The Toll Gate—

Drew fair audience, especially the shoppers and passers-by for second run showing. Author of scenario once located here. Attracted all classes. (Middle West.)

Three Worad Brand—

This picture comes up to the usual Hart picture. It went strong with the regular Hart fans. Others greeted it with a perceptible touch of indifference. Business about as usual. (South.)

The Sheik—

Second run here, but business was tolerably good. That's about all that could be expected, of course. (South.)

Exit the Vamp—

An average feature with business about as usual. (West.)

The Bride's Play—

Pleasing picture. Business only fair. (East.)

The Last Payment—

Terribly punk. Receipts average. (East.)

Back Pay—

Very fair. (Middle West.)

A Prince There Was—

Fairly entertaining picture. Average box office receipts. (West.)

White Oak—

A fine picture but poor business. Hart not the box office card he used to be. (Middle West.)

ASSOCIATED FIRST NATIONAL

Tol'ble David—

Greatest picture in months. We turned people away on many performances so great was its drawing power. Will book this for early return engagement. (Middle West.)

One of the best box office attractions in months. Star very popular here. (Middle West.)

Her Social Value—

Had to pull it off on fourth day. (Middle West.)

The Lotus Eater—

Nice picture, but business was not so good. (East.)

R.S.V.P.—

Poor picture. Our patrons didn't like the picture nor Charles Ray in it. Business showed the disapproval of the public. (Middle West.)

Greater Than Love—

Run in on short notice at end of week, drew very well. Business quite satisfactory. (Middle West.)

All for a Woman—

Splendid. Receipts swell. (East.)

Two Minutes to Go—

Fine production with good business. (West.)

Molly O—

Extended run went over good. (West.)

FOX

Queen of Sheba—

Played to over 45,000 in two weeks, and still going strong, at 50 cents. (Middle West.)

Beautiful picture. Did well during second week. (Middle West.)

It's a dandy. Beautiful business. Running for second big week. (Middle West.)

Over the Hill—

Business just fair for the third week. (East.)

On second week at popular prices and going fine. (East.)

Thunderclap—

Business bad. Surely not fault of picture as those who saw it seemed to like it very well. Not type of picture for this house. (Middle West.)

Winning With Wits—

An exciting tale, fairly well done, which held the crowds to the end. Good title to bring in the passersby. (Middle West.)

Connecticut Yankee—

Biggest and best thing since "Over the Hill." Patrons delighted. (East.)

The Devil Within—

Picture only mediocre, but on account of star, business very good. (East.)

UNITED ARTISTS

Dream Street—

Picture lacks noted stars. However, it did good business for week. (Middle West.)

Marvelous picture but our patrons did not care much for it. Lost money on it. (East.)

The Iron Trail—

An average picture which flopped at box office. Patrons did not like it. (East.)

Fair picture with fair business. (West.)

The Three Musketeers—

Best picture with Fairbanks is what our patrons admitted. Played it for one solid week at advanced prices to good business. (East.)

UNIVERSAL

Conflict—

The most wonderful picture of the season. Drew capacity houses all week. (Middle West.)

Not as good as we expected but business was pretty good. (East.)

The Fox—

Mighty good Western picture. Plenty of dash and pep. Our patrons like Carey and they attended strong. (East.)

Playing With Fire—

A real live picture that pulled the crowds. (Middle West.)

Shattered Dreams—

Good picture which brought fine business. (West.)

SELZNICK

A Man's Home—

Good picture but no special drawing power. Fair business. (Middle West.)

Opened strong, but fell off at end of week run. Those who saw it, enjoyed it. (East.)

A Man and a Maid—

Good comedy drama. Elaine Hammerstein is becoming a favorite with our patrons. (East.)

Handcuffs or Kisses—

This was a very good picture and the catchy title it bears seems to be a valuable asset. Business was good for the run. (South.)

GOLDWYN

Theodora—

Too spectacular to appeal. Lacks heart interest. Too big. Movie fans like things more personal. Did fairly well but not what we expected. (Middle West.)

Very disappointing. Rather a bad failure. People did not seem to enjoy it. Evidently local patrons are getting tired of spectacular films. (Middle West.)

One of the most lavish spectacles ever seen here. Played to capacity houses during two weeks run. (Middle West.)

Failed to hold up for second week run at advanced prices. (East.)

METRO

The Conquering Power—

Very fine picture. Valentino splendid. Business very good. (East.)

REALART

The Speed Girl—

Well liked. Crowded houses every performance. (East.)

Morals—

A good picture but brought only poor business. (Middle West.)

VITAGRAPH

The Little Minister—

Consider this one of the best pictures of the season and played to splendid business in spite of fact that same picture under different production was being played at another theatre nearby. (Middle West.)

Fine production. Pleased patrons. Business fair. (West.)

Flower of the North—

Fair picture. Business quite off. (East.)

HODKINSON

Jane Eyre—

Unusually good picture. True picturization of classic novel. Exceptionally well directed. Business was splendid all week. (Middle West.)

The Sin of Marth Queed—

Very poor picture. Impossible plot. Patrons laughed at it and asked how long it was made. (East.)

R-C PICTURES

At the Stage Door—

Splendid picture. Business was good. (Middle West.)

The Lure of Jade—

A good picture and a good box office value. (Middle West.)

The Barricade—

GRIFFITH

The Birth of a Nation—

Came as a life saver to start off tbe new year right. Drew well all week and on last night could not accommodate crowd. Was held over for second week but could not hold entire week though many inquiries were sent us after it was takeh off. (Middle West.)

Did fair business considering its former showings here. (Middle West.)

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS

A Sailor-Made Man—

Great. One of the best pictures on the market. Our patrons were delighted with it. Some came more than once to see it. (Middle West.)

STATE RIGHTS

The Parish Priest—

Fine. We played to good business although it was the third consecutive week. Had the support of the Bishop. (Middle West.)

The Heart of the North—

Picture with an interesting plot whicb pleased our audiences greatly. Played to better than average business. (Middle West.)

The Black Panther's Cub—

Went over big for second week. Is powerful picture. (Middle West.)

Girls Don't Gamble—

Mediocre picture. Business not very good. (East.)

Burn 'Em Up Barnes—

A real good picture. Played to extra good business. (East.)

Mickey—

Did not draw good business for second run. Too many similar pictures presented since. Not believe type that people will see second time. (Middle West.)

This "Any Wife" display was used by the Terminal theatre, Newark, N. J.

"Saturday Night" Offered

Paramount Launches Drive on De-Mille Picture, February 5th Release

THE Paramount publicity and advertising department has launched a big advertising campaign for Cecil B. DeMille's newest super-special production, "Saturday Night," which is scheduled for general release February 5. The picture, incidentally, has been booked for simultaneous pre-release showing in New York at the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres commencing Sunday, January 22.

Heralding the general release of the picture, the Saturday Evening Post in its issue of February 4 will carry a double-page advertisement announcing that it will be shown during the following week at more than 250 theatres throughout the country. In this day and date booking Paramount is following the policy used so successfully with the "Affairs of Anatol."

One of the most complete lines of accessories that Paramount has ever prepared is now available at the Exchanges. This consists of special posters, many of them done by Henry Clive; lobby displays, newspaper and teaser ads, slides, etc. These are all reproduced in the "Saturday Night" press book.

It will be recalled that "Saturday Night" is the picture which Cecil B. DeMille declared was the best he had ever made. It is from an original story and scenario by Jeanie Macpherson and treats the subject of mismated marriages in a manner which is said to give the picture a widely popular appeal.

The four leading characters are played by Leatrice Joy, Edith Roberts, Conrad Nagel and Jack Mower. The picture was filmed with the customary sumptuousness which distinguished the productions of Mr. DeMille, and in addition it is said to contain an unusual number of thrills. For instance, almost the first thing that Miss Joy was required to do in the filming of the picture was to drive a high-powered automobile into a dangerous skid, then run it out on a railroad trestle a hundred foot above the ground, abandon the car as an approaching electric train menaced it, and with her fellow player, Jack Mower, swing suspended below the trestle as the train rushed overhead, crushing the car to junk above them.

Metro Special Due Feb. 27

Indefinite Runs for "Turn to the Right" in Chicago and on Coast

TWO theatres, the Mission, Los Angeles; and the Randolph, Chicago, have secured from Metro Pictures Corporation pre-release bookings for indefinitely long exhibitions of "Turn to the Right," the Rex Ingram production of John Golden's great Broadway stage hit, written by Winchell Smith and John E. Hazzard.

With these two exceptions, "Turn to the Right" will not be shown to the American public generally before February 27, the date set for opening the distribution of the newest Ingram masterpiece.

The number of inquiries, either by telegraph or by letter, which have come to the exchanges and to the home offices of the company, regarding "Turn to the Right," promises to exceed even the multitude "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" called forth, declares a statement from the Metro headquarters. The tenor of the communications regarding "Turn to the Right" is that the exhibitors had looked forward to getting a flying start toward a big year by showing the newest Ingram picture, declares Metro.

The adaptation was done by June Mathis who is responsible for the screen versions of "The Four Horsemen" and "The Conquering Power." The cast assembled by Mr. Ingram for this production, which is said to be the most expensive picture yet produced by Metro, includes Alice Terry, Jack Mulhall, Harry Myers, George Cooper, Edward Connelly and Lydia Knott. John F. Seitz did the camera work, and Harold Grieve and Amos J. Myers were in charge of the settings.

Wm. Russell Picture Is "Strength of the Pines"

William Russell, the Fox star, is soon to be seen in a picture based on the novel "Strength of the Pines." The production is finished and is said to be one of the best in which Russell has been seen. Irene Rich is his leading woman.

Private Showing in St. Louis for "Jane Eyre"

Dr. Arthur A. Bostwick, secretary of the libraries of St. Louis, Mrs. John S. Payne, chairman of the Federation of Women's Clubs, and more than three hundred members of the representative civic and literary organizations of that city were guests at a private showing of the Hugo Ballin-Hodkinson production, "Jane Eyre," at the Delmar Theatre last Friday.

Mrs. John S. Payne, secretary of the Federation of Women's Clubs, who spoke at the close of the showing, pledged herself to use her influence with every woman's club in the city in behalf of the picture during its week's run at the Delmar and Criterion, which started January 14th.

"Fauntleroy" Reviewed by Former Diplomat

When Mary Pickford's film version of "Little Lord Fauntleroy," the United Artists release, was shown recently at the Lucas Theatre, Savannah, Ga., it was reviewed for the Savannah Press by Pleasant A. Stovall, editor of the newspaper, and formerly United States Minister to Switzerland.

A. L. Selig, exploitation man for the Lucas, persuaded Mr. Stovall to write his views of Miss Pickford's picture.

"Mary Pickford's interpretation of the double role of 'Dearest' and 'Little Lord Fauntleroy' will probably never be excelled by her in the picture realm," wrote Mr. Stovall. "And when we say that Mary Pickford cannot surpass it, it is as much as saying that the role is unapproachable."

Gunning Acquires Novelty Reel

Weekly Release Will Illustrate Selections from "Life"

WID GUNNING, INC., announces that it has acquired for distribution what it believes to be the short-feature novelty hit of the year. This, it is announced, is "The Good Things of Life," a weekly single-real release, illustrating in various ways the best jokes and other comic material selected from "Life," the famous humorous weekly. Charles Dana Gibson, Coles Phillips and a score of other artists and humorists equally famous are collaborating in the creation of this novelty, which is edited by Ashley Miller, its originator.

The establishment of a department specializing in shorter features of the better type is hinted at by Wid Gunning officials in connection with the announcement that "Life" has selected the Gunning organization to distribute "The Good Things of Life." A more definite announcement is not ready at the present moment, but it is known that Wid Gunning has been in conference with numerous specialists and producers of the type of short subject featured by first-run houses. As the Gunning sales organization is equipped for one hundred per cent efficient distributing and advertising service, the evolution of a department emphasizing shorter features will be a natural one.

February 15 is set as the release date for the first issue of "The Good Things of Life." There will be one single reel a week thereafter. According to the Gunning statement, "Life," the magazine, is going to cooperate extensively in providing publicity for "The Good Things of Life" and its hundreds of thousands of readers throughout the country will have their attention constantly called to this weekly release. Arrangements are also reported under way with the newspapers in every city for the same purpose.

"The Good Things of Life" is a big little feature in every sense of the word," says a statement from the Wid Gunning organization. "Did you ever hear of a big feature with titles written by George Ade, Wallace Irwin, Walt Mason, Caroline Wells, Oliver Herford, Meredith Nicholson, Tom Masson or Don Marquis—and illustrated by Charles Dana Gibson, Coles Phillips, F. X. Leyendecker, Maxfield Parrish, H. T. Webster and all the greatest and highest paid illustrators in the world?

"Yet these are the men and women who are the bright stars of humor writing for 'The Good Things of Life.' Thousands of dollars are paid these writers and illustrators weekly for their work in 'Life.'

"Very often a short novelty release starts out like a house afire, and later suffers in quality. 'Life' has a twenty year world-wide reputation to maintain, and the artists and writers who contribute to it and to this pictorial 'Life' must hold their standards. Here, for once, is a single red novelty that can be counted on to grow better as it goes along.

"'The Good Things oof Life' is launched as a screen institution, backed by a long term contract guaranteeing its constant high quality and created by the best brains in the field devoted to amusing and entertaining the public. No other short release on the market can compare with 'The Good Things of Life' in quality, sure-fire humor and publicity values."

The comic material used in each issue of "The Good Things of Life" is illustrated in a variety of ways, instead of by mere sub-titles, as in other single-reel releases of the type. There are sections in which real actors appear in the usual moving picture fashion to snappily illustrate a joke; a section of animated cartoons; a section of plastic work or clay modeling; silhouettes, pretty girls and other means.

Lucy Fox Cast in New Hutchison Serial

Lucy Fox's personal charms an feats of physical agility and dar ing which lend so much to th sweeping success of "Hurrican Hutch," are to figure again in th Pathe serial starring Charles Hut chison which George B. Seitz wil put into production immediatel following completion of "Go Get-'Em Hutch."

Pathe announces Miss Fox's re engagement on her return fron New Orleans and other Southern cities where she made a series o personal appearances at "Hurri cane Hutch" performances. Re ferring to these appearances Southern newspapers make it quit plain that the popularity of Mis Fox, long conspicuous throughou the South, is further enhanced b the vivid manner in which she play the heroine's role in the curren Hutchison serial.

Metro Out to Beat Own Record

Entering Upon Biggest Year of Its Career, Says Atkinson

IN the face of widespread pessimism in the motion picture industry, Metro Pictures Corporation is entering upon the most successful year of its existence, according to William E. Atkinson, vice-president and general manager of the company.

Reports upon actual business done by exhibitors with the exceptional big productions distributed by Metro, as well as with the Metro Classic series of photoplays are what Mr. Atkinson bases his statement upon.

"The Rex Ingram productions of 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse' and 'The Conquering Power' have scored two of the greatest triumphs, from both artistic and commercial points of view, in the history of pictures," declares Mr. Atkinson. "It is hardly necessary to review their popularity. As a matter of fact it's not yet time to review it, for both 'The Four Horsemen' and 'The Conquering Power' are being received as heartily now as they were when first released. I mention these productions as representative of the heights to which Metro's photoplays rose within the recent past. It has not been they alone which have made for our pictures their reputation for excellence. Productions starring Bert Lytell, Viola Dana, Alice Lake, and the highly popular S-L series, starring Gareth Hughes, have, with such brilliant pictures as Nazimova's 'Camille," printed Metro in the biggest letters on the film map.

"As for this year I think the letters are going to be made even greater. We are now ready to begin distribution of what I believe constitutes the most impressive list of pictures ever made. Those scheduled for release between now and June are virtually all in the hands of the exchanges now. They all will be without exception, within three weeks; the prints and all advertising accessories.

"Consider the pictures with which we begin the year: they are indicative of the whole. We are releasing a series of brilliant Mae Murray pictures, beginning with 'Peacock Alley,' which was chosen to open the new Cameo Theatre in New York, and whose bookings to date are more numerous than any other production we have ever handled, with the exception of 'The Four Horsemen.' 'Turn to the Right,' Mr. Ingram's screen production of the John Golden play which set long-run records in New York and Chicago, is ready, and will be distributed the latter part of February. And almost coincidentally will come 'Missing Husbands,' the American title of the most signal picture production ever done in France. As 'L'Atlantide' it has been the sensation of Paris for months. Mr. Richard A. Rowland obtained it for Metro during its recent Continental trip in the interests of the company.

"I am mentioning here only the first few of our offerings, which include what we believe is the best Bert Lytell picture ever made: 'The Right That Failed,' and one of Viola Dana's brightest appearances, that in 'Glass Houses.' There is, as may be noted, variety in the Metro subjects, but none in their quality. The quality is monotonously the best. It is something we have striven for ever since the inception of the concern. It has taken years of time, and more effort than can be calculated. But we have attained supremacy—and we believe confidently that we're going to better even our own best in the season now beginning."

Alan Crosland Is Well Represented on List

Although the productions were filmed several months apart, Alan Crosland's work as a director of Selznick pictures has prominence in the first four pictures released in 1922 by the Select Distributing Corporation, three of the quartette having been directed by Crosland in Fort Lee and New York during the past several months. Three Selznick stars figure in these offerings—Elaine Hammerstein, Eugene O'Brien and Conway Tearle.

The Elaine Hammerstein vehicle is "Why Announce Your Marriage?" "The Prophet's Paradise" is the title of the Eugene O'Brien picture directed by Crosland. Mr. Crosland's third effort is represented by "Shadows of the Sea," in which Conway Tearle is starred.

Mabel and Hugo Ballin to Appear in Person

Another important New Yor theatre joined the ranks of recog nized first-run houses this wee when the management of th Sheridan theatre in Greenwich Vil lage, New York City, booked th Hugo Ballin-Hodkinson feature "Jane Eyre," for a week's engage ment beginning Sunday, Januar 21st. On the night following th opening "Jane Eyre," at the Sher idan, both Mabel Ballin, the star and Hugo Ballin, the producer wi make personal appearances befor the screen.

Pathe Announces Sales Contest

Qualifying Competition to Start January 16

ONE of the severest tests to which the Pathe sales organization has ever been subjected, will be inaugurated on January 16th (Monday), when a six weeks qualifying competition prior to the annual "Brunet Anniversary Contest," which this year will run from February 27th to March 25th, will be opened.

The six weeks preliminary contest, will be staged to determine into which of five divisions, the various branches will be classified when the final four weeks drive of "Brunet Anniversary Contest" for the big prizes offered by Pathe, will be conducted. The prizes range from $2500 down to $500, for the winning teams in each division.

Geographical lines will be wiped out in determining the classes into which each branch will be placed, inasmuch as increases in collections and new business, rated on a fifty-fifty basis, will be the deciding factor. Seven branches will make each of the first four divisions, and the remaining six exchanges will enter the fifth and last division. Branch quotas for the qualifying contest, will be exactly one half of the sales and collection figures at each branch for the three four-week periods ending December 17th.

In division one, the capital prize for which is $2500, will be placed the seven branches recording the biggest increase in collections and new business over the period specified.

In the second division will be the next seven high branches, competing for a prize of $1500. The seven succeeding branches will be in division three, wherein they will fight for a $1,000 prize, and in the fourth division come the next seven, contesting for a $750 award. The fifth and final class, will be composed of six branches, accounting for the entire thirty-four Pathe exchange offices, with the winner receiving $500.

In each instance, the prize money will be divided on the basis of forty per cent for the branch manager, and sixty per cent to be shared equally among all the winning Pathe salesmen, booker, cashier and assistant-branch-manager. Provision has been made that in any instance of a tie, the full award will go to each branch thus tieing.

Prior contests among Pathe branches, invariably have been determined on a geographical basis. The country was divided into four divisions—Eastern, Southern, Central and Western. It was to avoid just such a division, that General-Manager Pearson suggested the new method of selecting the winners. The new plan is more equitable for all concerned, it is felt. There is no doubting that in past Pathe contests there were some branches which did not get under way until the competition virtually was over. To these slow quarters, the six weeks qualifying contest will be a boom, and the speed they gather over the six weeks route, will accelerate their pace in the final four weeks contest which, after all, will decide the ultimate winners.

The quota for each branch during "Brunet Anniversary Contest" will be one-third of its total in collections and sales for the three four-week periods ending December 17th.

Contracts recorded up to midnight Saturday, February 25th, will be credited in the qualifying test. "Brunet Anniversary Contest" opening Monday, Feb. 27th, will close midnight, Saturday, March 25th.

'The Hottentot", Ince Comedy, Due Soon

"THE HOTTENTOT" is coming.

It is a Thomas H. Ince comedy special and will be released by First National. It is now in process of production at the Ince studios in Culver City, whence emanate statements that it is going to be one of the big hits of the year.

"The Hottentot" is a racing story—the "Man o'War of Comedies." It is said to be filled with hair-raising stunts and jolts of humor with a strong thread of romance intermingled.

The leading roles are played by Madge Bellamy, whose work in "Hail the Woman," another Ince special, has caused the critics to acclaim her a coming star, and Douglas MacLean. MacLean plays the part of Sam Harrington, while Miss Bellamy is Peggy Fairfax, Sam's matrimonial objective. Raymond Hatton's "Swift, the butler," is a gem of humorous characterization, it is said. And the remainder of the cast is equally good.

Larry Semon to Have Separate Studio

A separate and complete studio for Larry Semon and his company is now under course of construction at Vitagraph's Hollywood lot.

The work was started just before Albert E. Smith, Vitagraph's president, left for the East this week. Mr. Smith decided that this innovation would be desirable from a production point and the new move means that the Larry Semon company practically will possess its own studio, dressing rooms and all the appurtenances which are necessary for complete production.

Fox Celebration Gets Response

95% of Fox Exhibitors Sign for Anniversary Week, Jan. 29

EXHIBITORS throughout the United States and Canada have responded whole-heartedly to the suggestions for the celebration of Fox Anniversary Week, January 29, to February 4 inclutive, according to an announcement from the offices of Fox Film Corporation.

More than ninety-five per cent of the Fox exhibitors in the United States have booked Fox features, comedies, animated cartoons and specials for the anniversary week, according to statistics offered by the Fox contract department. The remarkable bookings which have already been contracted for have exceeded all previous records connected with special occasions, it is stated. Indications are for an entirely new mark in day-and date engagements in all large and small cities where Fox productions are regularly exhibited.

Among the productions most in demand are the series of super-specials recently released, including "Over the Hill," "Queen of Sheba," "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," "Shame," "Perjury," "A Virgin Paradise," "Thunderclap,' "Footfalls" and "The Last Trail."

"Over the Hill" has smashed all records for box-office receipts in more than eighty-five per cent of the picture houses throughout the country where it has been presented, declares the Fox office. This is an achievement unequalled in the history of filmdom. As previously announced, arrangements are now complete for distribution of "Over the Hill" and the other Fox specials in England, France, Spain, Portugal, Germany, Russia, Japan and other oriental countries.

The new year sees for Fox Film Corporation the institution of educational and industrial divisions, headed by Herbert E. Hancock with the title of Director of the Educational and Industrial Divisions. This department will operate independent of the company's other enterprises, and production of specified subjects will be on an extensive scale. For the educational division there has already been selected an assortment of subjects of inestimable value as the basis of visual instruction for the first months of this Fox enterprise.

Extension of the resources of Fox News is to be an accomplished fact during the present year. Don Hancock, director-in-chief of Fox News, recently departed for Europe, where he will institute a more complete service and correspondence in all the European countries. Although Fox News has had more than acceptable representation abroad, the service will be increased. The services of local motion-picture cameramen in every small city on the continent of Europe will be arranged for, with a view to supplying to the public the most complete news reel known to the industry.

Among the super-special productions scheduled for release in 1922 are "Nero," the J. Gordon Edwards picture made at the Rome, Italy, studios of Fox; "Monte Cristo," starring John Gilbert under the direction of Emmett J. Flynn and produced on the West Coast; a picture directed by Herbert Brenon, made in New York and starring William Farnum; and another Harry Millarde feature said to be on a par with "Over the Hill," his great success.

Pictures are planned for Shirley Mason, Tom Mix, Charles Jones, William Russell, Pearl White, Eileen Percy, Barbara Bedford, Maurice Flynn, Johnnie Walker, Edna Murphy, Dustin Farnum, William Farnum, Clyde Cook, Al St. John, and Lupino Lane—the most recent acquisition to Fox's constellation of comedy stars, who will soon be seen in his first production, made at Hollywood. These in addition to the regular output of Sunshine Comedies and Mutt and Jeff Cartoons.

Mrs. Trimble Bradley with F. P. Lasky

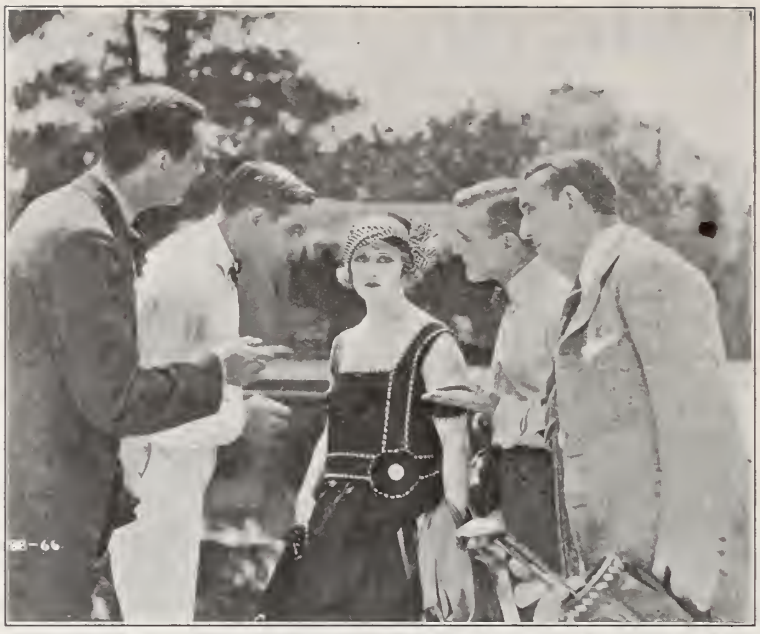
Mrs. Trimble Bradley, by arrangement with George Broadhurst for whom she is general stage director, leaves this week for California to do some special work at the West Coast Studios for the Famous Players-Lasky Co. Mrs. Bradley, will, however, return to New York in time to produce plays which Mr. Broadhurst will present next season.

Pathe Names Releases for January 29th

PATHE announces its list of releases for January 29th. Prominent on the schedule is "The Midnight Stage," starring Frank Keenan, the first of the Pathe playlets. This serial will consist of a revival of former successful features re-edited to three reels.

"She Loves Me Not" is the title of the latest re-issued one-reel comedy, starring Harold Lloyd. "Snub" Pollard and Bebe Daniels also play important roles in this comedy. "The Miller and the Donkey" is the current animated cartoon of the series of "Aesop's Film Fables."

"Years to Come" is the title of the Hal Roach comedy featuring "Snub" Pollard. The comedy is a broad satire based on a fanciful life of the future when the positions of the sexes are changed about and the masculine of the species discovers "his place is in the home."



"The Clash of the Clans" is the fifth episode of "The White Eagle," the serial starring Ruth Roland. Pathe Review No. 140 presents "The Wrath of the Sun God," an Indian legend illustrated in Pathecolor views of the Yellowstone National Park; "Roaming Along the Riviera," also in Pathecolor; "Pull or Get Splashed," a slow-motion novelty; "The Empire of Apples," a glimpse into one of the leading industries of the State of Washington; and "Golf Glims," a Capitol Travellaugh.

Secretary of War Sees "Sailor-Made Man"

"A Sailor-Made Man," Harold Lloyd's new Associated Exhibitors-Lloyd comedy, was recently shown before Secretary of War Weeks at the Ritz-Carlton in Atlantic City. According to the Philadelphia Inquirer, Jules E. Mastbaum, President of the Stanley Company of America overheard the Secretary of War remark that "he was mentally tired from work in connection with the Arms Limitation Conference, and would like to see a good screen comedy." Mr. Mastbaum telegraphed to New York, and the film, Harold Lloyd's latest release, "A Sailor-Made Man" was sent to the hotel, together with operators and a complete outfit.

Mr. Weeks was asked to invite his own guests, and the private showing aroused great interest and enthusiasm, according to word from Associated Exhibitors.

"Prodigal Judge" Pre-View

Vitagraph Special Shown in West; Prints Soon in Branch Offices

VITAGRAPH'S big special, "The Prodigal Judge," had its first Western pre-view showing last week at the Beverly Hills Hotel, the fashionable hostelry in Southern California.

Jean Paige is featured in this super-feature, which was directed by Edward Jose. Both the star and the director were in the audience, as well as Albert E. Smith, Vitagraph's president, who, incidentally, accompanied the members of "The Prodigal Judge" cast to various parts of the country when exterior scenes were being filmed for it. The event was in the nature of a gala social occasion and many notables of Southern California were present. Mr. Smith was the recipient of many sincere congratulations in causing Vaughan Kester's novel to be brought to the screen, as were its star and its director. A very few minutes after the final fade-out on the Beverly Hills screen the film was on its way back East, and after a few suggestions of Mr. Smith's are carried out the prints will be shipped to Vitagraph's various branch offices for release.

"We have a picture," said Mr. Smith, in discussing the picture this week, "which is everything that we could hope for. This was the target aimed at, but we had no means of knowing whether or not we had made a bull's-eye until the picture was actually projected. In writing the book, which was a best-seller the year that it was published, but which, unlike many best-sellers, enjoyed a wide sale for years and is doing so to-day, Vaughan Kester seemed to catch a note of whimsicality which the cast of the picture, under Mr. Jose's direction, was able to transplant to the screen. Maclyn Arbuckle's delineation of the judge is masterful. On the screen, as in the book, the judge is a living, breathing, vibrant personality, never acting as a character in a book or a ply acts. He proves himself a real human being. Sometimes it is with a friend's obstinacy that he proves his unaffected friendship, when a lack of obstinacy might prove only hypocrisy. If 'The Prodigal Judge' is not called one of the very best pictures of 1922, I will not only be disappointed but I will be very much surprised."

Trailers on "The Prodigal Judge" were recently shipped from Vitagraph's Brooklyn laboratory to its branch office. "The Prodigal Judge" will be a February release.

Strong Cast for Katherine MacDonald

B. P. Schulberg, president of Preferred Pictures, producers of the Katherine MacDonald features for Associated First National, has engaged the following well known players for Miss MacDonald's newest production, an original story by Charles Logue, which is, as yet, unnamed; Nigel Barrie, leading man, Charles Clary, Charles Gerrard, Mona Kingsley and Ethel Kay.

Chet Withey, who directed Miss MacDonald's recently completed but as yet unreleased First National offering, "Domestic Relations," has been re-engaged for the Logue story.

Two of Katherine MacDonald's last three productions have been from the typewriter of Mr. Logue. Just to prove to Mr. Schulberg that he can hit the bull's eye of the scenario target again, the author is at work upon a third story which he hopes will give him the enviable record of providing the stories for seventy-five per cent. of Miss MacDonald's last four productions.

$1,000 for Best Letter on R-C Films

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made by R.-C. pictures that it will pay an aggregate of $1,000 to the fifty persons who write the best letters to the organization, describing an R.-C. picture they have seen.

"This organization has an ideal—it seeks to make and distribute to theatres, clean, wholesome, absorbing entertainment," said Charles R. Rogers, general manager of distribution, in explanation of the announcement.

"In an effort to get the public's opinion of R.-C. productions, the company has offered $1,000 in cash for the best letters sent to the New York offices, describing these pictures.

"These letters are to be limited to 200 words each and any patron of any theatre may write as many letters about as many R.-C. pictures as he may wish.

"The letters will be judged by a committee, and to the writer of the letter adjudged to be best will be sent a check for $200; for the second best letter $150 will be paid; for the third in order of merit, $100; for the fourth, $50; for the fifth $35, and for the sixth, $25. Ten dollars each will be paid for next forty-four letters, making a total of $1,000.

"All letters will be judged on the basis of the ideas they contain—not on a basis of literary excellence. There is no condition or provision attached to the offer, save that the writers must have seen the pictures they describe.

"Many theatre managers in all parts of the country are co-operating with the organization by offering to anyone writing successful letters about any R.-C. picture the writer has seen in their theatres, a six months' pass, good for any performance at any time in that theatre.

"Many exhibitors are tying up with the letter writing competition as a part of their R.-C. Picture Week campaign, February 5 to 12, and a wide interest has already been shown in the competition."

Eugene O'Brien Popular with Detroiters

Eugene O'Brien returned to New York January 16 and radiating appreciation because the people of Detroit were so unfailingly kind to him during the full week he appeared as a special feature at John H. Kunsky's Madison Theatre. O'Brien's "Chivalrous Charley" was the screen attraction, and the star appeared three times a day for seven consecutive days before crowds that acclaimed the Selznick star at every opportunity.

Charles R. Pain, Jr., appointed assistant sales manager of the Rothacker Practical Picture Division

NewAss't Sales Manager for Rothacker

Charles E. Pain, Jr., has been made assistant sales-manager of the Rothacker practical picture division. Watterson R. Rothacker announced the appointment early in January.

Mr. Pain was formerly assistant secretary of the J. I. Case Co. and of the Shotwell Mfg. Co. He was a first lieutenant in France. After leaving the army he served for a time as an assistant on corporation finance for a large Chicago legal firm. Then he succumbed to the film fever. He started at the bottom of the ladder in the Rothacker organization —in the laboratory washroom. He worked up to his present job within a year.

"The Rosary" Plays in Frisco for 2 Weeks

The world premiere showing of "The Rosary" is being held in San Francisco. It began a two weeks run in the Golden Gate city on January 15th at the Imperial Theatre.

"The Rosary" is a Selig-Rork production, and is being released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. The action of the management of the Imperial Theatre in booking the picture for an engagement of two weeks is revolutionary, in view of the general custom of booking a production for one week, and then extending the run if the picture proves a drawing card and a box office success.

Universal Names New Cuban Manager

Beverly Griffith, whose connection with the film industry antedates the formation of the Universal, has just been appointed general manager of the Universal's Cuban exchanges and supervising director of the several theatres on the island which Universal has leased for first-run showings of its pictures there. Mr. Charles King has resigned to accept another connection.

Plans for First Nat'l Week

Feb. 18th to 25th to Mark Celebration of Second Birthday

FEBRUARY 18th to 25th has been designated as First National Week in commemoration of the second anniversary of the formation of Associated First National Pictures, Inc. A statement from the First National headquarters, announcing the plans for First National Week, follows in part:

"First National Week will be celebrated in thousands of theatres throughout the country next month. Response from the exhibitors has been spontaneous and enthusiastic, and five weeks before the opening of the period more than 2,100 theatres had booked First National productions solid for February 18th to 25th.

"An exceptionally attractive array of First National features and comedies, recently released, are available for First National Week programs, in addition to the older releases."

The First National statement lists the sixteen new releases which will form the backbone of the nation's cinema entertainment from February 18th to the 25th. This list includes the productions described as follows:

"Smilin' Through" is one of Norma Talmadge's contributions and one which is destined to create as much laudatory comment as "The Sign on the Door." Its chief feature, aside from Norma's customary powerful acting, is the pictorial beauty of the production.

"'The Wonderful Thing' is another Norma Talmadge production on the list. It was directed by Herbert Brenon and is one of the most appealing plays in which this star has appeared. Harrison Ford is Miss Talmadge's leading man, and the cast includes Mrs. Lydig Hoyt, well known society leader.

"'Penrod,' a picturization of the famous Booth Tarkington story and starring 'Freckles' Barry, is one of the two Marshall Neilan productions numbered in the sixteen. It is a delightful 'Kid' story —one that will captivate both old and young.

"'Tol'able David,' Richard Barthelmess's first starring vehicle for First National, is his offering for First National Week. Based on the story by Joseph Hergesheimer and published in the Saturday Evening Post, the picture is a powerful yet simple narrative of mountain life in West Virginia. Henry King directed it and Gladys Hulette plays opposite the popular star.

"'My Boy' is the title of the picture in which celebrants of the week will see the youngest of stars —Jackie Coogan. The story is written especially for this little idol of millions of theatre-goers. Claude Gillingwater and Mathilde Brundage are in the supporting cast. Jackie Coogan as the little homeless, friendless immigrant will not soon be forgotten.

"Red Hot Romance," written and produced by John Emerson and Anita Loos, will delight every type of picture fan, but especially those who are fond of satire. The drunken king, the inebriated courtiers and the opera-bouffe revolution are a few of the "high spots" in this picture of continuous laughter.

"Polly of the Follies," Constance Talmadge's newest production is also the work of Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos, and they have injected into it almost as many laughs as "Red Hot Romance" contains. The supporting cast is a remarkably strong one, Kenneth Harlan plays opposite.

Katherine MacDonald will be seen in two of her latest productions, "The Beautiful Liar," and "The Woman's Side." The first is a novelty in picture making—a production without a villain. Charles Meredith is her leading man, and others in the cast are Joseph J. Dowling, Kate Lester, and Wilfred Lucas. Wallace Worsley directed it.

"The Woman's Side" has a political background, with the star, as Mary Gray, daughter of the candidate for governor, being drawn into the vortex of crooked politics.

Raoul A. Walsh contributes his latest, "Kindred of the Dust," from the novel by Peter B. Kyne, which appeared serially in the Saturday Evening Post. Miriam Cooper plays the leading part, supported by Ralph Graves, Eugenie Besserer, W. J. Ferguson, Pat Rooney, Lionel Belmore, Carolyn Rankin, and others. One of the spectacular features of the production is a rescue from the midst of a log jam.

"The Song of Life," a "drama of dishes and discontent," is the offering of John M. Stahl. It is a story of pathos and tender appeal, with such actors as Gaston Glass, Georgeia Woodthorpe, Grace Darmond, Richard Headrick, Arthur Stuart Hull, Wedgewood Howell, Frank Kelsey, Claude Payton and Edward Pell.

Anita Stewart will be seen in "A Question of Honor," the scenes of which are laid in the West. The story was adapted from the popular Ruth Cross novel of the same name. In the supporting cast are Edward Hearn, Arthur Stuart Hull, Walt Whitman, Bert Sprotts, Frank Beal, Adele Farrington, Mary Land, Ed Brady and Doc Bytell.

A re-issue of "Cabiria," the great Italian masterpiece, will feature First National Week.

"The Rosary" is a Selig-Rork production. The story is an original one by Bernard McConville, and the cast includes Lewis Stone, Robert Gordon, Doro Davidson, Wallace Beery, Jane Novak, Mildred June, Eugenie Besserer, Pomeroy Cannon, Bert Woodruff and Harold Goodwin.

"Shattered Idols," produced by J. L. Frothingham, is an intense spectacle of restless, discontented India in a story throbbing with human appeal, and was filmed under the working title of "A Bride of the Gods." It is founded on I. A. R. Wylie's novel, "A Daughter of Brahma," and is enacted by Marguerite De La Motte, Ethel Grey Terry, James Morrison, William V. Mong, Frankie Lee, Harvey Clark, Josephine Crowell, Claire Windsor, Robert Littlefield and George Periolat.

There are four Buster Keaton productions in the seven comedies slated for the week, "The Paleface," "The Boat," "The Playhouse," and "The Blacksmith." Mack Sennett contributes "Be Reasonable," "By Heck," and "Bright Eyes," the latter a Ben Turpin comedy.

Free advertising accessories will be supplied by First National to exhibitors who book its pictures for First National Week. These accessories will include First National star 24 sheets; special one sheet, cuts of various sizes, slides and cloth banners.

Hyman Lauds Triart Films

Manager of Brooklyn, N. Y., Strand in Tribute to Hodkinson Releases

EDWARD L. HYMAN, managing director of the Mark Strand in Brooklyn, who has booked the Triart Great Masterpieces series distributed by Hodkinson, of which "The Beggar Maid" and "The Bashful Suitor" are the first two released, authorizes a statement this week in which he declares the Triart Productions to be among the most beautiful screen plays he has ever seen.

Mr. Hyman is particularly enthusiastic over the second picture of the series, "The Bashful Suitor," based on Josef Israels' painting of the same name which now hangs in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York.

"I will be greatly surprised," said Mr. Hyman, "if audiences throughout the country do not take favorably to these pictures. However I have no fear that they will not, because the wonderful ovation accorded "The Beggar Maid" is still fresh in my memory. Personally, I believe "The Bashful Suitor" is even more artistic than its predecessor.

"Every scene of 'The Bashful Suitor' disclosed to you on the screen seems a masterpiece in itself. For sheer beauty I hardly believe it can be excelled.

"Leading artists in their various lines of endeavor have helped make this picture a masterpiece. Herbert Blache, who has handled the megaphone behind many successful stars directed 'The Bashful Suitor,' and Lejaren à Hiller, a portrait painter of note was art director. The soft-focus work that will be seen in the production and, by the way, which was a dominant factor in "The Beggar Maid" was directed by this man. Soft focus photography tends to eliminate detail and harsh lines bringing forward the beauty and depth of expression in the scene and characters.

Ruth Roland

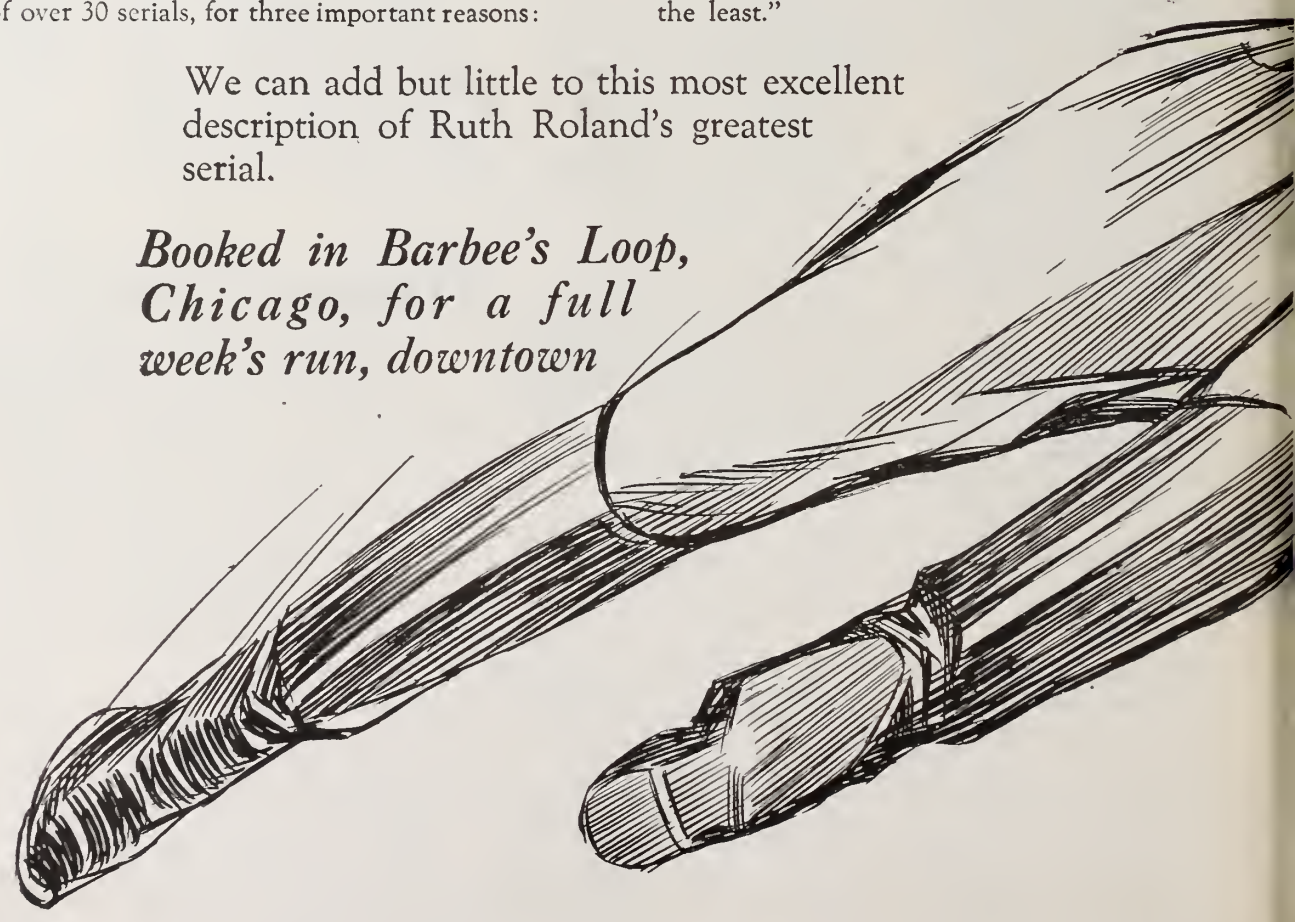
Supervised By Hal Roach

The Pick of Over 30 Serials!

The Mahaiwe Theatre of Great Barrington, Mass., is a high-class house, run in a high-class way, and catering to a high-class family patronage. The town of Great Barrington, situated as it is among the beautiful and famous Berkshire Hills, draws business not only from the very rich whose fine estates dot the countryside, but also from a typical American small town population.

The management of this successful and well run theatre has booked "White Eagle." In announcing the attraction to their patrons they speak as follows:

"'White Eagle' has been selected from a list of over 30 serials, for three important reasons:



First. Because it is the very best serial on the market.

Second. Because it is an outdoor all Western serial, a pleasant change from the usual serial story. Most all the picture has been taken in the open and the story breathes the spirit of the great West.

Third. Because mothers will not have to worry about their children picking up distorted ideas of life by viewing this chapterplay. It is entirely censor proof. There is not a foot of film in the whole picture that the most severe critic could criticise in the least."

We can add but little to this most excellent description of Ruth Roland's greatest serial.

A dramatic moment in "Foolish Wives," Eric Von Stroheim's million dollar production for Universal

"Doll's House" Due Feb. 12

Nazimova Said to Have Done Remarkable Work in Screen Version

NAZIMOVA'S first film production for United Artists Corporation, Henrik Ibsen's "A Doll's House," will be released to exhibitors February 12th next.

Charles Bryant, who directed Nazimova in this famous Ibsen classic, speaks of it as the greatest picture this celebrated screen and stage star ever has made, and calls it a masterpiece from a masterpiece.

Nazimova may be credited with really popularizing Ibsen and "A Doll's House" on the American stage and in the character of Nora, the doll-wife, gained her greatest laurels as an actress. None of the Nazimova artistry is lost, it is said, in the transference of this character from the stage to the screen, and she makes of Nora a real and pulsating human being.

Allan Hale is the leading man and plays the role of Helmer Torvald, husband of Nora. Nigel de-Brulier, who played the part of Cardinal Richelieu in "The Three Musketeers" is also in the cast of "A Doll's House," as are Elinor Oliver, Wedgwood Nowell, Clara Lee, Florence Fisher, and Phillipe De Lacy and Barbara Maier, as the two little children of Nora and Helmer.

The settings in this picture are all extremely modern, and nearly all interiors there being but one or two exterior scenes. The scenario was prepared by Peter M. Winters, with the photography by Charles Van Enger.

A one-word twenty-four sheet poster has been prepared for "A Doll's House." That one word is "Nazimova" reproduced in signature form in Nazimova's characteristic hand-writing. On the twenty-four sheet, the name extends from the lower left-hand part of the poster up and nearly across to the upper right-hand corner. In the lower right corner is the picture title. All the lettering is in white against an ultra-marine blue background with a narrow border of lighter blue.

Elaborate Press Book for "U" Serial

Universal Film has compiled a forty-two page campaign book for its new historical chapter-play production, "With Stanley in Africa." The book describes in detail the posters, heralds, cuts and other exhibitor aids prepared for the serial. There is a wealth of material in the way of useful advertising, publicity and exploitation suggestions.

Advantage is taken of the special appeal found in this serial photo-drama for children. Aids, such as wild-animal buttons, have been especially designed by Universal for the juvenile element among the exhibitor's patronage. In addition, a letter descriptive of "With Stanley in Africa," a half-sheet, and a copy of the campaign book has been addressed by Universal to 7,000 superintendents of schools in the United States and Canada.

Alice Duer Miller Photoplay Due Shortly

Goldwyn will release within a short time its first Alice Duer Miller photoplay, "The Man With Two Mothers," an original screen story by the author of "The Charm School," "Ladies Must Live," "Manslaughter," and many other popular novels.

Mary Alden appears in an appealing mother role. Cullen Landis and Sylvia Breamer play the leading parts, while others in the cast are Hallam Cooley, Fred Huntly, Mont Collins, and William Elner. Paul Bern directed the production.

Praise for Goldwyn Release

N. Y. Critics Give "The Man from Lost River" Favorable Reviews

KATHARINE NEWLIN BURT, author of "The Branding Iron" and "Snowblind," two of Goldwyn's most successful red-blooded western dramas, has added to her screen reputation with her new melodrama, "The Man from Lost River," written directly for the motion picture camera, and screened this week at the Capitol theatre, New York.

Mrs. Burt, Frank Lloyd, the director, and House Peters and Fritzi Brunette, the featured players, received much praise for their work in the film from the New York critics who reviewed the picture.

The Telegraph said: "There is no mention of Freud or modern soul surgery from start to finish. In other words, it is one of those good, clean, breezy entertainments that should rapidly add censors to the lists of the unemployed. Katharine Newlin Burt has made 'The Man from Lost River' good screen material. She has told an excellent story logically and dramatically, retaining a straight-forward simplicity that is also desirable."

Tribune: "The big outdoors is fascinating on the screen. House Peters has always been one of our favorite heroes."

Herald: "Goldwyn always has exceptional success with its forest scenes. Frank Lloyd has infused such an atmosphere of a Northern lumber camp into the picturesque 'shots' that one wants to go there and eat flapjacks. House Peters as the foreman acts in more rugged fashion than ever."

World: "If a rough and tumble scrap is what you crave, leave Madison Square Garden out of your schedule this week and go to the Capitol. Potographed in the usual fashion of the Goldwyn company. It is attractive entertainment of its kind."

News: "Direction unusually good; photography great; value ninety per cent."

Aids for "Handle with Care"

Lobby-Displays, Store Tie-Ups, and Other Stunts for Rockett Picture

PLANS for a lavish advertising and publicity campaign on the Al. and Ray Rockett production, "Handle With Care," are outlined in the campaign-book for exhibitors prepared on this Associated Exhibitor's release. Every medium for bringing returns to the exhibitor who plays "Handle With Care" is suggested. These include several novel lobby-display suggestions, the method of cooperating with stores, street ballyhoo and stage prologue. Of particular value is the idea of having throw-aways printed in the shape of tags, and with the title printed in big letters, these to be placed on packages and on everything to which the title applies.

Exhibitors who are always anxious to secure jazzy lines and catch phrases for their exploitation will find this need supplied in the campaign book, together with suggested newspaper advertisements, ranging from slug cuts to three-column displays of which mats are available. An interest-arousing advance program reader and circular letter is suggested as well as a liberal supply of press stories to be run before, on and after the showing. Several special feature stories are also included. The posters, which are reproduced on the back cover of the campaign book, reflect the high-class nature of the production, and are artistically in keeping with its appeal. In each case, the subject of the poster is tied up with the title, "Handle With Care."

January 22nd has been announced by Associated Exhibitors as the release date of this production, which presents Grace Darmond and an all-star cast, including Patsy Ruth Miller, Harry Meyers, James Morrison, William Austin and William Courtleigh. Associated Exhibitors expect that "Handle With Care" will make a distinct hit throughout the country.

"Ruling Passion" Set for February 19th

"THE RULING PASSION," second of the George Arliss photoplays to be released by United Artists Corporation, has been definitely fixed for general release on February 19, although this new feature will have a pre-release showing at the Strand theatre, New York, the week beginning Sunday, January 22.

"The Ruling Passion" is a comedy drama, based on the story "Idle Hands," by Earl Derr Biggers, and published last summer in the Saturday Evening Post.

With Mr. Arliss in the cast are Doris Kenyon, who plays the leading feminine role; Edward J. Burns, Miss Ida Darling, J. W. Johnston, Ernest Hilliard, Harold Waldrige and Brian Darley.

"The Ruling Passion" was adapted from the Earl Derr Biggers story by Forrest Halsey, and directed by Harmon Weight.

United Artists Opens Omaha Exchange

Announcement is made from the home office of United Artists Corporation of the opening of a new exchange at Omaha, Neb., and the appointment of Samuel Vorzimer as manager of this branch office. Mr. Vorzimer knows the Omaha territory very well, having covered it for a period of three years.

Extended Runs for Two First Nat'l Releases

There are not many precedents left in San Francisco motion picture theatre circles—thanks to "Molly O" and "Hail the Woman."

These two First National attractions opened simultaneously in the Golden Gate City on December 25th, each for a scheduled one week run, "Molly O" at the California theatre and "Hail the Woman" at the Tivoli.

As the week drew to a close the managements hurriedly booked their respective attractions for another week. Thus was Precedent No. 1 left prone, for never before in the history of the city has such a situation existed—two attractions of one company receiving simultaneous extensions to two weeks.

The newspapers of San Francisco shattered the second precedent in publishing practically a second review in connection with the announcement of the holdovers, and reiterating their fulsome praise of both productions.

Rush Work on Biggest Torchy Comedy

Work has been rushed by Educational on the latest of the Torchy Comedy series, "Battling Torchy," which was recently delivered to Educational by Mastodon Films after a long period of work on production. This picture, in which C. C. Burr, the producer, and Johnny Hines, the star, have striven to surpass their best previous effort, is now ready for release.

Critics who have viewed the picture declare it Johnny Hine's best comedy. As the office boy cast with a lot of "toughs" in a particularly bad section of the lower East Side, the "Torchy" of the screen is funnier than he has ever been before. With a huge street set to play about in, Hines sets forth some comedy so original and clever that it drew gales of laughter from every group of critics that have viewed it.

"The Young Painter" Released This Week

"The Young Painter," third in the series of Triart Great Masterpieces, was released by Hodkinson this week, and prints are now going forward to the Hodkinson branches. "The Young Painter," with Mary Astor in the principal role, was made under the direction of Herbert Blaché, as dramatic director, and Lejaren a Hiller as art director. "The Young Painter" is adapted from the painting of the same title by Rembrandt.

"The Grim Comedian" Booked for Capitol

Rita Weiman's first original screen story, "The Grim Comedian," produced by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, has been booked for showing at the Capitol Theatre, New York, the week beginning Sunday, January 22. Frank Lloyd directed. Phoebe Hunt, Jack Holt, Gloria Hope, John Harron, and Joseph J. Dowling are in the cast.

Many Bookings for R-C Week

February 5-12 to Find R-C Pictures in Many Theatres

R-C Week, from February 5 to 12, promises to be one of the most important events of the year for hundreds of exhibitors throughout the country, judged by the record-making number of contracts reported by Charles R. Rogers, general manager of distribution for R-C Pictures.

An imposing group of special attractions backed by a vigorous campaign of national advertising and exploitation, including a prize competition with awards aggregating $1,000 in cash for the best letters describing any R-C Picture, have combined to stir widespread interest both among exhibitors and the picture-going public with the result that practically every important city together with hundreds of smaller ones, will observe R-C Week.

Among the special attractions announced as available to exhibitors during R-C Week is: Pauline Frederick in "Two Kinds of Women," founded on the Western novel "Judith of Blue Lake Ranch," from the pen of Jackson Gregory. The story ran serially in Everybody's Magazine. It is a picture rich in exciting incident and the wholesome outdoor atmosphere of the West with Miss Frederick at her best, according to Mr. Rogers.

Sessue Hayakawa's most recent R-C starring vehicle, to be given to exhibitors during R-C Week, is "Five Days to Live," which brings new honors to Mr. Hayakawa, who, according to many critics, stands in a class by himself as a dramatic actor.

Doris May's two R-C attractions "The Foolish Age," in which she scored an impressive debut, and "Eden and Return," her most recent R-C release, are among the attractions available during R-C Week. They are both light, fast-moving vehicles in which the star employs her inimitable talents at farce to best advantage.

Wm. Christy Cabanne has rung the bell again, so to speak, with his sensational production "At the Stage Door," a picture rich in the alluring atmosphere of the stage and of life behind the scenes. Lillian "Billie" Dove, Huntly Gordon, Willie Collier Jr., Elizabeth North, Vivia Ogden, Doris Eaton and others appear in the Cabanne production.

L. J. Gasnier is represented by "Silent Years," a dramatic production founded on the novel "Mam'selle Jo" by Harriet Comstock. Among those in the cast are Rose Dione, eminent French actress; Pauline Starke, Tully Marshall, George Seigmann, George M'Daniel and others. Another notable production available during the week is "Possession," Louis Mercanton's French production based on Sir Anthony Hope's novel "Phroso" and depicting a gripping tale of romance and adventure on a mythical island in the Aegean Sea.

Then, too, there are: "The Barricade," produced by Wm Christy Cabanne and featuring a distinguished cast of players, including Kenneth Harlan and Katherine Spencer; "The Lure of Jade," in which Pauline Frederick has one of her biggest dramatic roles; "Live and Let Live," directed by William Christy Cabanne; "The First Born" with Sessue Hayakawa.

A feature of R-C Week commended by hundreds of exhibitors who appreciate the value of judicious advertising is the special drive in the fan magazines, aggregating more than 8,000,000 readers. Double and single pages have appeared in the following magazines during the last two months calling attention to R-C Week: Photoplay Magazine, Shadowland, Motion Picture Classic, Movie Weekly, Motion Picture Magazine, Motion Play, Moving Picture Stories, Picture Play Magazine, Film Fun, Film Play Journal and Photo Drama.

Other exhibitor helps have been provided for R-C Week in the shape of free accessories, and the special service of expert exploitation men who are constantly at the call of exhibitors anywhere in the country.

"Song of Life" Opens in Three Theatres

"The Song of Life," a John M. Stahl production released by First National is to have three simultaneous premiere showings the week of January 23rd.

It has been booked for that period by the managements of the Grand Opera House and Liberty Theatre in Pittsburgh, and the Victor Theatre of McKeesport, Pa.

"A drama of dishes and discontent" described the story of "The Song of Life," and the director has delineated the little tragedies which are so common in real life. In the cast are such competent players as Gaston Glass, Grace Darmond, Georgia Woodthorpe, Richard Headrick, Arthur Stuart Hull, Wedgewood Nowell, Frank Kelsey, Claude Payton and Edward Pell.

Goldwyn Has Fine Cast for Kyne Story

Goldwyn has engaged one of its brilliant all-star casts for its production on the screen of Peter B. Kyne's story, "Brothers Under Their Skins," a South Sea romance scheduled for early production at its Culver City studios under the direction of E. Mason Hopper, who but recently completed the film version of Anzia Yezierska's "Hungry Hearts."

Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix will play opposite each other again in this picture. Claire Windsor, one of the featured players in Goldwyn's "Grand Larceny," has also been engaged for a leading role. Jacqueline Logan, featured with Lon Chaney in "A Blind Bargain," and Roy Atwell, recently appearing in "Grand Larceny," complete the quintette of stars.

New Hoxie Feature Is "Desert's Crucible"

Arrow Film Corporation will shortly release an Arrow-Ben Wilson-Jack Hoxie production, entitled "Desert's Crucible," directed by Roy Clements.

Jack Hoxie has as his leading woman in this picture a very beautiful and cultivated actress, Andree Tourneur, and the other familiar and capable supporters of Jack are also seen in the picture. It is a Western story but it is said to be somewhat different inasmuch as it full of favorite Western action and the plot is of a particularly subtle character.

Vignola Production Is Ready for Release

Robert G. Vignola's latest Cosmopolitan production, "Beauty's Worth," has been completed and will soon be released through Paramount. This is Mr. Vignola's first production since "Enchantment," his current release, which has been breaking records all over the country.

Beautiful Marion Davies, who starred in "Enchantment," is starred in "Beauty's Worth," and it is the consensus of opinion of those who have seen this production privately that it is a far better production in every respect than "Enchantment." Miss Davies' work in this production establishes her definitely as one of the brightest stars of the screen, and Mr. Vignola's direction of the production is flawless, as usual.

"Beauty's Worth" was written by Sophie Kerr and put into scenario form by Luther Reed. Most of this production was made in California, where the unusually beautiful scenery offered the proper background. The interiors were designed by and executed under the supervision of Joseph Urban.

Silas Seadler Resigns from Kane Pictures

Silas F. Seadler, Director of Publicity and Advertising for the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation since the inception of that company two years ago, has handed in his resignation, to take effect at the end of the month. Mr. Seadler has not yet announced his future affiliation.

Starting in the motion picture business as publicity agent for Alice Joyce, Gladys Leslie, Rod La Rocque and several other Eastern film personalities, Mr. Seadler transferred his activities to the new Realart organization when that company began its career and was on the advertising and publicity staff that put Realart on the picture map within a few months. When Arthur S. Kane resigned from Realart, joined hands with Charles Ray and formed his present company he selected Mr. Seadler as his press representative.

"Peacock Alley" Scores at New B'way House

"Peacock Alley," Mae Murray's gorgeously costumed picture of the white lights of New York and Paris, with which the new B. S. Moss theatre opened, "has proved its popularity in unmistakable fashion and, on its third week as the feature attraction in the beautiful new playhouse, is setting enviable records for the new house to live up to," declares a statement from the Metro home office.

McGovern and Egler Change Release Title

McGovern & Egler, distributors of the Shorty Hamilton series, announces the change of title of their fifth release from "Sand" to "Grit," owing to the fact that there already has been a western bearing that name.

Arrange Big Tie-Up for "Ashamed of Parents"

The Warner Brothers production, "Ashamed of Parents," containing a cast of especially chosen players is said to have played to capacity business during its week run at William Fox's Terminal theatre, Newark. The feature has been booked for the entire chain of Fox houses, and numerous other first run theatres throughout the country.

One of the features that brought about capacity business for the Terminal theatre was a full page commercial cooperative tie-up with the prominent merchants in Newark. The stores, in order to link up with the picture, advertised their product stating that the young folks would never be ashamed of their parents if they took the old folks to their establishments. This tie-up, combined with considerable newspaper publicity, street ballyhoos and an attractive lobby display is declared to have caused hundreds of people to line up in front of the theatre.

Plan Advance Publicity for "Lady Godiva"

The screen version of Lord Alfred Tennyson's "Lady Godiva," a Wistaria Production special, is to be released by Associated Exhibitors in March. Its first presentation will be preceded by an extensive publicity campaign of nation-wide scope, which will include syndicated articles, rotogravure lay-outs and special feature stories, in many newspapers, declares a statement from Associated Exhibitors.

Press Book for Irene Castle Film Ready

The exhibitor's press book on "French Heels," the first of a series of four Hollywood-Hodkinson productions, starring Irene Castle, left the press this week. In reality the book is a catalogue of Irene Castle's versatility, and in artistic merit, practical value and all-around usefulness, the book is said to establish a new point in perfection in the preparation and marketing of an exhibitor's aid.

'Foolish Wives" to Be Cut to Ten Reels

"FOOLISH WIVES," the Universal spectacle, which opened in New York on January 11, in fifteen reels, will eventually be shown in ten reels, announces Universal. Already three reels have been cut since the opening, and it is planned to further reduce the footage to ten reels. The cutting was done only after the advice of critics, exhibitors and patrons had been considered, and after the effect on the audiences had been noted.

Mr. Von Stroheim originally cut his picture to 30 reels, and this was eventually reduced to 15 reels for the New York premiere.

Elmo Lincoln on Personal Appearance Tour

Ben Amsterdam, of Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia, distributing "Adventures of Tarzan" in Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey has arranged for Elmo Lincoln to begin his personal appearance tour in Philadelphia on Monday, January 16th. Elaborate preparations have been made by Amsterdam's exploitation department to herald Lincoln's appearance.

Eugene O'Brien Vehicle Released February 10

The third picture in this season's Eugene O'Brien series, "The Prophet's Paradise," is set for distribution February 10, with Sigrid Holmquist, the "Swedish Mary Pickford," furnishing principal support to the Selznick star in a production directed by Alan Crosland. Lewis Allen Browne's scenario was based on a Red Book story by C. S. Montagne that furnishes a colorful vista of Turkish life, with brisk adventures centering in Constantinople. Sigfrid Holmquist is O'Brien's leading woman.

Foreign Field Reported Improving

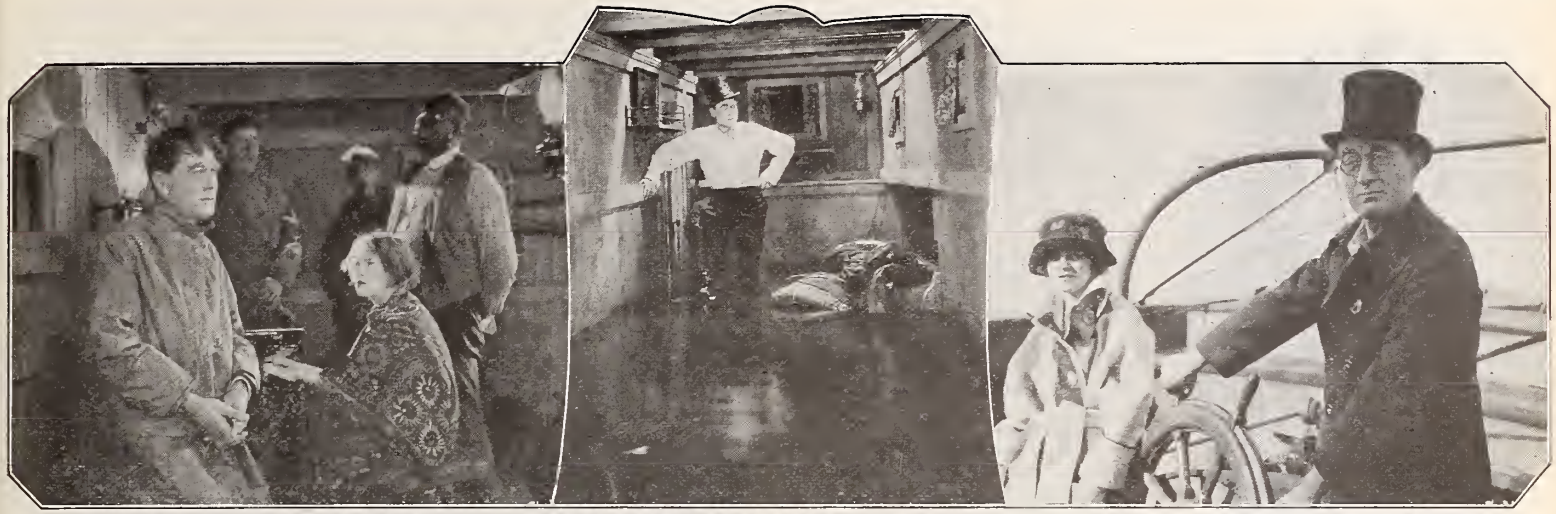
Although the Export & Import Film Co., Inc., is in the height of its campaign on Col. Selig's "The Jungle Goddess" serial which they are state-righting, the foreign end of their business is not being neglected, it is said, but is being pushed with the vigor which has made this company one of the leaders in this particular field.

An official of the company reports that the outlook in the foreign field is very promising. A gradual improvement in conditions is manifesting itself in steadily increasing sales, insofar as this company is concerned. Conditions in Spain and Portugal and in France, where the market was especially depressed due to unfavorable rates of exchange, are particularly brighter.

The Export & Import Film Company reports brisk foreign business during the past week. In addition to the sale of "The Jungle Goddess" serial for the entire far east, the rights for Col. Selig's new serial were also disposed of for Mexico and Porto Rico. Forty comedies were sold for the far east; eighteen features for Argentine; twenty features and twenty comedies for Mexico, and two serials for Spain. Several other large contracts are practically ready for closing.

Emil Chautard Joins R-C Pictures Staff

R-C Pictures announces that it has signed Emile Chautard, noted French director, to supervise the first production of the 1922 series of Pauline Frederick pictures. Mr. Chautard has long been known as one of the foremost producers in the motion picture industry and has to his credit a formidable list of important subjects such as "The Black Panther's Cub"; "His Parisian Wife" starring Elsie Ferguson and a number of big productions for Pauline Frederick. This will mark his first effort at direction for R-C Pictures, however.



Mr. Chautard left for Hollywood last week and will begin work with Miss Frederick in the early future.

"White Eagle" Showing at Barbee's Loop

ANOTHER precedent has been upset by the newest Pathe serial, "White Eagle," starring Ruth Roland.

Beginning January 7th, this continued story opened at Barbee's Loop, in downtown Chicago, for a full week's run—or rather, a fifteen-weeks' run inasmuch as it will be on the daily program for that length of time.

The Chicago Pathe Office is engaged in a strong exploitation campaign in connection with the showing of the new Ruth Roland serial. Favorable reports of the serial's reception in other parts of the country are also being received at the Pathe home-office.

Three scenes from the forthcoming Selznick special which will feature Owen Moore. This will be Moore's biggest comedy. It is as yet untitled.

Pathe Acquires Celebrated French Picture

PATHE announces this week the acquisition of one of the most celebrated of recent European motion-picture productions, "Mathias Sandorf," from the Jules Verne romance bearing the same title. This is the Louis Nalpas production which enjoyed a first run at 54 Paris theatres, with second, third and fourth runs crowding more than double that number of houses, and which is now in the third month of a highly profitable engagement at Cirque D'Hiver, where, according to the Pathe home-office, it fills 2,000 seats at each performance.

Mr. Nalpas arrived from Paris last week and signed contracts with Paul Brunet conveying to Pathe Exchange, Inc., distributing rights of "Mathias Sandorf" in this country.

Century Film Names February Releases

The February releases of the Century Film Corporation will include "The Touchdown," Lee Moran's comedy of college life; "Horse Sense," Harry Sweet's comedy on an ocean liner; "Little Miss Mischief," the story of a naughty little girl, starring Baby Peggy.

Julius Stern announces that he has engaged Tom Buckingham to direct Harry Sweet. He has also given little Jackie Morgan a contract to play with Brownie, the Century Wonder dog in his next picture. Baby Peggie, Brownie's usual starring partner, is engaged in making comedies at the head of her own company of grown-ups.

Alpine Setting in New Gloria Swanson Film

An Alpine hotel, perfect in every detail, has been constructed for "Beyond the Rocks," Elinor Glyn's story which Jack Cunningham has translated to the screen as a Paramount picture starring Gloria Swanson.

2 More Talmadge Revivals

Selznick Announces "Good Night Paul" and "By Right of Purchase"

THE announcement comes from Lewis J. Selznick that he is ready with another brace of Talmadge revivals for early showings—"Good-Night Paul," with Constance Talmadge the star, and "By Right of Purchase," starring Norma. These revivals will be issued in January and February, "Good-Night Paul" being the first to be released.

Showmen have found that "fans" are anxious to see the Talmadge girls in everything they have done, as much to exercise their expression of favoritism as to compare the present work of these stars with their earlier successes, declares a statement from the Selznick offices. It is a matter of record that in a majority of localities the revivals are accepted with as much enthusiasm and with as fulsome box-office results as are the newer works of these engaging young ladies, declares the Selznick statement.

"Good-Night Paul" was a stage work of Roland Oliver and Charles Dickson before Selznick screened the adaptation Julia Crawford Ivers provided. Harrison Ford is leading man for Constance in the revival, with Norman Kerry, John Steppling, Beatrice Van and Rosita Marstini in prominent supporting roles. "Good-Night Paul" was one of the last works the late Walter Edwards contributed to the screen as a director.

"By Right of Purchase" will be hailed with particular delight by fans who recall the days when Eugene O'Brien and Norma Talmadge were making their way to fame under the Selznick management. They are here in this Margery Land May story, doing some of the best work that has been credited to them as star and leading man. Showmen will find an unusual billing opportunity in combining the names of Eugene O'Brien and Norma Talmadge in their advertising and publicity announcements—for two-star combinations come seldom in these days of individual advancement.

Charles Miller directed "By Right of Purchase." William Courtleigh, Jr., Charles Wellsley, Ida Darling and Florence Billings are leaders in the support. As in the case of every Selznick reissue, "Good-Night Paul" and "By Right of Purchase" have been revised and re-edited and printed on new stock, thus carrying every hallmark of productions but lately made.

"The Prodigal Judge"

Harmon Weight Directs "The Ruling Passion"

Harmon Weight, director of the new George Arliss photoplay, "The Ruling Passion," which is being released by United Artists on February 19th, is one of the youngest directors in the film industry, but possesses the authority of much experience in the directorial field.

Mr. Weight was born in Salt Lake City, and began a stage career when just a boy. Before he was twenty-two years old he had a stock company in the Utah city and soon extended his activities to Portland, Seattle and Tacoma. As an actor he essayed a variety of roles and as a producer he staged many big successes.

"Peacock Alley" Sets Record for Metro

MAE MURRAY'S newest motion picture, "Peacock Alley," has been booked more heavily than any production ever released by Metro Pictures Corporation, with the one exception of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," declares a statement just received from the Metro home office.

Although there was from the first, according to General Manager William E. Atkinson, promise that "Peacock Alley," would be a sensational box-office offering, It hardly had been anticipated that at this time it should have outstripped the record of every picture except "The Four Horsemen." One early indication of the instant attractive power of Miss Murray's picture was its choice as an opening feature at B. S. Moss's new Cameo theatre in New York, where it ran before capacity houses for three weeks.

"Over the Hill" Breaking Records in South

New glory is daily added to the record of "Over the Hill," the Fox special which enjoyed a solid year's run on Broadway, New York, before it began to sweep through East and West on its triumphant tour. Its reception by exhibitors throughout the South, where it is now making its way, is most enthusiastic, according to a statement from Fox Film Corporation.

Record runs have been established, for example, by every theatre in the key cities of Texas where the production has been shown, the statement declares. Theatres which heretofore have considered a three-day engagement as unusual have played "Over the Hill" for a week. Exhibitors who feared to hold a picture more than a week found that the Fox special continued to attract capacity houses after the second and third week.

Four Century Stars Begin New Films

LEE MORAN has just finished "Upper and Lower," in which he impersonates a Pullman porter. He is now working on "The Janitor," written by himself and directed by Alf Goulding. It is the woeful tale of a married man with too large a family who has to become a janitor in order to put a roof over his head.

Harry Sweet having finished "A One Horse Town," in which he is the general utility man of a burlesque company, has started production on an entirely different part. "One of the Four Hundred," on which his company is now working, gives Sweet the part of a dandy with spats, monocle and all. Buckingham, who is back with Century, is directing the film.

Baby Peggy, who has just finished "Circus Clowns," in which she acts the part of a little circus waif, is now being directed by Fred Hibbard in "Little Miss Mischief," the story of a mischievous tot who caused her parents to have prematurely white hairs.

"Muts," featuring Brownie the Wonder Dog, has just been finished. All the parts in this subject ars played by dogs. A new picture with Brownie in the principal role has been started. It is tentatively titled. "Dog Days."

Alice Calhoun Starred in "Angelface"

Alice Calhoun will again be seen as an old-fashioned girl in her forthcoming production, "Angleface," which is being directed by David Smith at Vitagraph's West Coast studios.

The young star of "The Little Minister" appears in some of the scenes in the midst of all the picturesque surroundings of the square-dance age. The story, however, has mainly a modern setting, the big barn dance scene giving it a colorful touch of atmosphere and variety.

Buyers Interested in Carnival Comedies

Responses are coming in from all parts of the States Right field and inquiries have been received from almost every important buyer in the territory regarding Carnival Comedies—the new series of two-reel laugh-makers which the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation has secured for States Right Distribution, states that company. In addition to the sales already made on these comedies, which feature Polly Moran, the famous Mack Sennett comedienne, and "Smiling" Bill Jones and his beautiful girls, another sale was made this week to the Federated Film Exchange of Baltimore, whereby the comedies will be seen in the territory including Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, and Virginia.

The name of the first comedy which features Polly Moran has been changed from "Polly's Busted Romance" to "Nell's Busted Romance." The Carnival Comedies will be released at the rate of one every two weeks.

Carey Contemplates New Affiliation

For the first time in seven years Harry Carey, former western star of Jewel Productions with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, is in his home town—New York.

Carey admits he has no definite plans for picture affiliation, since cutting loose from Universal, but he has a lot of ideas about what he is going to do in the way of production as soon as he settles down to work.

"The first rumor I want to set at rest," says the picture star, "is the one that I am about to make my own productions for states rights release. I have no intention of producing my own pictures because I think too many actors and actresses have tried to manage their companies and direct themselves—and failed. Because an actor is a success on the screen is no reason to believe that he is a good executive. I am still quite willing to entrust my fate to men who have proved they are good production managers and directors."

Pathe Serial Is Titled "Go-Get-'Em Hutch"

"Go-Get-'Em Hutch" is the title finally selected for Charles Hutchison's new "thrill-a-minute" serial to be released by Pathe. The Pathe headquarters declares that "both in vigor and intensity of the action and the wealth and startling character of the stunts" the new chapter-picture will surpass Hutchison's last production, "Hurricane Hutch." April 9th has been set as the release date.

Marguerite Clayton appears opposite the star and, according to the Pathe report, Miss Clayton in the role of the heroine carries out her share of hazardous work with a daring that emphasize the dramatic value of Hutchison's own feats.

"Bride's Play" and "Nancy from Nowhere" to Be Released Jan. 22

THE Cosmopolitan Production for Paramount, "The Bride's Play," starring Marion Davies, and Bebe Daniels in the Realart picture, "Nancy from Nowhere," are the features scheduled for release by Famous Players-Lasky on January 22.

Donn Byrne is the author of the story, "The Bride's Play," which appeared serially in Hearst's Magazine. Mildred Considine, author of more than a hundred successful adaptations, wrote the scenario and George Terwilliger directed.

Miss Davies plays the part of a prankish Irish girl, bubbling over with good humor but always ready to listen to the troubles of the villagers and to help them solve their difficulties. Framed in a setting of ancient legend, romance and folklore, the production is said to be rich in magnificence of background, pageantry and color.

Associated with Miss Davies in this unique picture are Wyndham Standing, Carlton Miller, Richard Cummings, Jack O'Brien, Frank Shannon, Eleanor Middleton, Thea Talbot and Julia Hurley.

Bebe Daniels appears in the most appealing role of her career in "Nancy From Nowhere." Here, it is said, is young love in an idyllic setting, tears and laughter, a beautifully sympathetic character, and Bebe Daniels to make it all-convincing.

The story of "Nancy From Nowhere" was written by Grace Drew and Kathrene Pinkerton. The combination of Douglas Doty, scenarist, Chester M. Franklin, director, and Bebe Daniels, star, is said to have resulted in a cinematic gem.

Edward Sutherland, remembered for his work in the juvenile role in "The Witching Hour," is Miss Daniels' leading man, and the supporting cast also includes Myrtle Stedman, Vera Lewis, James Gordon, Edward Martindel, Helen Holley and Dorothy Hagen.

"U" Has Genuine Novelty

"Leather Pushers" Series Strikes New Note in Screen Entertainment

NOW that the prints of the first two rounds of "The Leather Pushers" series are in the hands of the exchanges, Universal is receiving daily confirmation of its first estimate of the H. C. Witwer stories, which appeared in Collier's. The idea of the stories themselves and the way in which they have been carried out is so unusual and novel that Mr. Laemmle immediately put them on the exclusive Jewel basis and they will be released to exhibitors as the Universal-Jewel-Collier's Series.

"We have had a great variety of series of pictures," said H. M. Berman in discussing the releasing arrangements for "The Leather Pushers." "Many of the subjects are still popular; some are worn out. 'The Leather Pushers,' however, strikes an entirely new note in subject matter for moving pictures. If anyone had told me even a year ago that it was possible to maintain a continued interest in a series of pictures dealing wtih boxing and the prize fight ring, I would have laughed at them. In faet, if I had not seen several episodes of 'The Leather Pushers' series with my own eyes I would undoubtedly be laughing now. H. C. Witwer, the author, and Harry Pollard, the director, have evolved a combination of the prize fight ring, society and romance which not only are unique but which are little giants of story value and whirlwinds of aetion."

Naval Film at War College

Educational's "Battle of Jutland" Requested for Showing

FOLLOWING the special showing of the three-reel speeial "The Battle of Jutland" at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis and at the Marine Barracks in Washington, Rear Admiral William S. Sims, famous hero of the World War and now president of the Naval War College at Newport, Rhode Island, has requested a showing of this historical subject at the War College.

Admiral Sims requested a report from officers at Annapolis following the presentation of the film before the officers and students there, and after receiving the report, wrote requesting a showing before the War College class.

"I have received reports from officers who have seen the film that it would be highly desirable to arrange for an exhibition of it before the present class," said the Admiral. "We would be delighted to have the privilege of viewing this most interesting subject."

Work on the prints of the picture is being rushed to completion at the laboratories of the Coronet Films Corporation at Providenee, Rhode Island. Much tedious work had to be done on the prints, such as the painting by hand of every frame in 200 feet of the picture, requiring an unusually long time and a great amount of labor by a large force to prepare the pieture for distribution. All prints are expected to be shipped to the exchanges within a few days, however, so that one of the two English prints from which much of the work was done, will be available. One of these will be sent to the Naval War College so that the class, consisting of a large number of naval officers, can see the picture as it was originally made.

"The Battle of Jutland" is the first special subject to be released by Educational Film Exchanges in 1922. It is generally recognized as the finest example yet produced of the splendid work that motion pictures can be made to do in the recording of history. It has been commented upon editorially by many newspapers throughout the country.

Ince's Survey Progressing

Editors All Over Country Respond to Questionnaire on Public Taste

FROM Maine to Florida and from New York to California, editors are evincing a wholesome interest in the world survey instituted by Thomas H. Ince as a means to ascertain just what the public really wants in the way of motion pictures.

The flood of questionnaires whieh recently poured out of the Thomas H. Ince studios to editors in the United States, Europe, South America, Australia, Canada, Mexieo and the American insular possessions, to gather pulse beats wherever motion pictures are shown, have already started on their return journey with answers which bear the stamp of sincerity.

Questionnaires are being returned in every mail from all parts of the United States, and the first results from other lands are being anxiously awaited by the staff of experts which is to tabulate and digest all answers. While answers to some of the questions exhibit a wide variance in the opinions expressed, others are united in support or denunciation of traditions or methods of the motion-picture industry. And from the averages in the great mass of answers; from percentages, carefully computed, will the vital guides to what the public really wants be drawn.

It was the editors of the world to which the questionnaires were addressed, because their training and ability, their keen judgment and daily contact with the public, makes them experts in the art of deducing from the back-wash of conflicting opinions, the true currents of public sentiment.

In their desire to cooperate, scores of editors have referred the questions to their readers and through the columns of their publications have solicited answers.

"If Mr. Ince draws the proper conclusions from the answers he is sure to receive, the motion-picture industry may get a distinct twist, for he has always been a pioneer."

This is the comment of an important newspaper in one of the large Eastern cities and seems to reflect the opinion of hundreds of

Two Exceptional Stars on Stage Tours

Two of the stars of Exeeptional Pictures Corporation are at present filling contraets on the speaking stage. Charles (Chic) Sale is headlining in the Keith vaudeville houses, and Otis Skinner is touring the larger cities of the country with his new play "Blood and Sand." Starting December 26th, Christmas Week, Mr. Sale is playing at the Colonial Theatre in New York City, while Otis Skinner is spending the week in Baltimore, Md.

In each city in which they appear the dramatic critics have played up the fact that both of these stars are to make new pictures immediately after the close of their present tours. Mr. Skinner's picture will be a film version of "Mister Antonio," the Booth Tarkington play which Mr. Skinner played for three seasons. While the title of "Chic" Sale's new picture has not been announced, it is definitely known that he will again portray his interesting rural characters, which probably means that his second Exceptional pieture will have a small-town background.

'White Hands" Is Well Received on Coast

WHEN "White Hands," the Graf production, starring Hobart Bosworth, was given a pre-release showing at the new Ganada theatre, in San Francisco, it was given glowing reception according to local newspapers which have reached the home office of Wid Gunning, Inc., the releasing organization.

Bosworth, the star, made a number of personal appearances during the run of the production at the Granada, telling interestingly how some of the "punch" scenes of "White Hands" were made.

"There is no questioning Hobart Bosworth's ability as an actor," read the review of "White Hands" in the San Francisco Call and Post. "He stands without equal in the particular field to which he has almost entirely devoted his screen efforts. As a portrayer of 'brute' roles, hard hearted and harder fisted, leering and sneering at God and His fairest creation, woman, Bosworth exerts a compelling mastery that attracts while it repels and certainly calls for unstinted praise."

The San Francisco Examiner said, in part:

"'White Hands' is well made, with a strong, direct story, conveying much dramatic power. In the strong, virile production, there is little to merit adverse criticism.

"The Bosworth character is a big rough one, played in a big way. Robert McKim's villainy, entirely out of the line of this polished film villain's accustomed work, shows superb acting."

Jack Boyle Lauds Fannie Hurst Photoplay

One author's tribute to the photoplay of another author is about as fine a compliment as can be paid. Jack Boyle, author of "Boomerang Bill," a Cosmopolitan-Paramount picture soon to be released, saw "Back Pay," a Fannie Hurst story, in Cosmopolitan's projection room. He was so moved by the picture that he sat down and wrote a commendatory review of it. He says in part:

"Every girl in America should see 'Back Pay.' Every man will be better for having seen it. As screened by Cosmopolitan Productions, Fannie Hurst's story is much more than an irresistibly absorbing protoplay. It is a true drama taken with scrupulous fidelity from life itself; it is a sermon told with such convincing truth that it sinks into the heart there to remain as a warning signpost against the dangers of discontent when life temptingly contrasts conscience-clean poverty with conscienceless luxury."

"Jungle Goddess" Serial Has Unusual Script

One of the points of interest in the making of Col. Selig's fifteen episode wild animal serial, "The Jungle Goddess," which the Export & Import Film Co., Inc., is state righting, is the fact that Selig engaged two of the best known writers on the coast to prepare the story and scenario for the chapter-picture.

Agnes Christine Johnston and Frank Dazey, who are responsible for the script of "The Jungle Goddess" have many successful features to their credit. They collaborated on "Alarm Clock Andy" and three other Charles Ray successes, "Manhattan Madness" for Douglas Fairbanks, and wrote the scenarios for "Daddy Longlegs" for Mary Pickford, "Twenty-three and a Half Hours Leave," "Polly of the Storm Country" and many others which won public praise.

Lupino Lane at Work on Fox Comedy

Lupino Lane, the famous English comedian and pantomimist who was recently signed to a contract by William Fox, has begun his first two-reel special comedy at the West Coast Studios under the direction of Jack Blystone. The title of the picture is "The Broker," and the story is said to provide many extremely humorous situations suitable for the art of the mirth-making artist.

Explorer Amundsen at Fox Film Studio

Capt. Roaul Amundsen, famous arctic and antarctic explorer and discoverer of the South Pole, visited the Fox studios and laboratories at West 55th street, New York City, last week, prior to his departure on an American tour which in June will reach its conclusion at Seattle, Wash., whence he will set sail on an attempted trip to the North Pole.

Julian Johnson Resigns from Cosmopolitan

JULIAN JOHNSON has resigned as title editor of Cosmopolitan Productions and is going to the Pacific Coast for a vacation, the first he has had in three years.

Mr. Johnson—formerly editor of Photoplay Magazine and associate editor of the International Magazine Corporation—has been offered the editorship of a new film magazine which will be issued in the Pacific Coast, starting in the spring. He is going to Los Angeles the latter part of January to consider this proposition.

Gunning Representative Completes Tour

Harry McDonald, of the Wid Gunning organization, returning from a trip covering most of the key cities as far West as Minneapolis, states his belief, founded on his observations throughout his travels and talks with exhibitors and salesmen, that better times are already here for discriminating showmen.

"Where exhibitors are putting their shoulders to the wheel and concentrating their efforts on pictures worth while money is being made and optimism prevails," said Mr. McDonald. "I found exhibitors anxious to compare our products with that of other distributing organizations, and it was a source of great satisfaction to hear theatre owners whose judgment in securing big pictures has given them national prominence, give the releases of Wid Gunning, Inc., the endorsements which I have brought back with me."

Sam Flax Buys Serial

Sam Flax, head of the Liberty Film Renting Company, of Washington, D. C., has purchased the rights to the serial, "Adventures of Tarzan," starring Elmo Lincoln, for the District of Columbia, Maryland, Delaware and Virginia. Mr. Flax will release the serial on February 15th.

Leah Baird Production for February Release

"DON'T DOUBT YOUR WIFE," made by Leah Baird Productions, will be a February release of Associated Exhibitors, according to a statement from that organization. Edward Peil, Emery Johnson, Mathilde Brundage and Catherine Lewis are the principal people who support Leah Baird. The production was directed by James W. Horne under the supervision of Arthur F. Beck.

Woven into a drama of heart throbs are declared to be many touches of humor, in addition to several melodramatic thrills. "Don't Doubt Your Wife" is the first of a series of features which will be presented by Leah Baird Productions, dealing with domestic problems.

Important Bookings for "His Nibs"

L. L. Hiller, president of "His Nibs" Syndicate, Inc., has notified A. S. Kirkpatrick, the Vice-President and General Manager of the Exceptional Pictures Corporation, that "His Nibs," the first motion picture in which Charles (Chic) Sale is starred, is being very enthusiastically received by both exhibitors and the public through the Middle and Far West. The picture has recently been given first runs in Denver, Colorado, and in Salt Lake City, Utah, and delighted both the critics and the audiences. It will be shown for two weeks at the Doric Theatre, Kansas City, starting January 22nd, and is booked for a run at the Rialto Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, starting the latter part of February.

Metro Picture Titled "Missing Husbands"

"Missing Husbands" is the title Metro has chosen for the sensational French production of "L'Atlantide," bought recently in Paris by Richard A. Rowland for American and Canadian distribution.

The print of the picture has been in the hands of cutters and editors at the Metro home offices in New York for several weeks now, undergoing adaptation for the American market. It is hoped to have it ready for distribution within six or eight weeks.

Pathe Playlet Subjects Are Changed

Pathe, in order to strengthen its "Pathe Playlets" series of fifteen re-edited pictures, has made two changes in the subjects since its original announcement.

"The Angel Factory," starring Helene Chadwick, has been substituted for "The Closing Net" set for issuance on March 26th. "The Mysterious Client," starring Irene Castle, will substitute for "The First Law," scheduled for release on April 23rd.

Pollard "Comes Back" with New Series

Harry A. Pollard, director of "The Leather Pushers" caused much favorable comment along Broadway last week when his screen versions of the popular H. C. Witwer society-prize fight stories were shown to reviewers for the trade journals.

Pollard, who has been away from screenland for two years, has come back with a "wallop in each hand". The first "three rounds" or episodes of "The Leather Pushers" are said to contain many masterful touches of comedy, drama and heart interest which combine to give these two-reel subjects a feature flavor.

Universal, which is releasing the society-prizefight picture is so enthused with the high class work turned out by Pollard that it has decided to release the series as Universal-Jewel-Collier's specials.

In every "round" of "The Leather Pushers," which will run into a series of twelve, Pollard's genius registers vividly in the form of situations which grip the interest, appeal to the emotions and tickle the risibilities. In his direction Pollard has avoided slap-stick comedy and has given a tone to these stories of the ring which will appeal to men and women alike. There is a love story in each episode and a chuckle in almost every scene.

Films fans throughout the country who remember the "Pollard touch" will rejoice that this resourceful director has returned to filmland.

Big Response to "U" Offer

Laemmle is Swamped With Letters in Praise of Reduced-Rental Plan

THE Universal home-office reports that Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Film, has been virtually swamped with letters from exhibitors, since his offer to reduce rentals to all theatre-owners who can prove they are operating at a loss was announced in the January 7th issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

"Exhibitors are writing me by the hundreds," said Mr. Laemmle in his office in 1600 Broadway, telling me what they think of Universal's offer. Many of them think there is some catch in it somewhere,—it is so unlike the proposals they are constantly receiving from producers. But the great majority are full of thankfulness that one producer can be relied upon to meet exhibitors half way.

"The first letter came from William Brandt, president of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, who wrote, among other things:

"'I want to congratulate you upon taking the initiative to help the exhibitor who is doing poor business. Some producers and distributors seem to think that the war is still on, and the fact that you have the guts to blaze the trail toward lower film rentals will be fully appreciated by every exhibitor.'

"That was one of the finest New Year's greetings I ever received.

"The first telegram came from Ralph W. Crocker, owner and manager of the Star theatre of Elgin, Ill., who wired:

"'Congratulate you on bomb shell in trade papers. Most timely and courageous. As a one hundred per cent Universal exhibitor I send three cheers and my support of your wallop straight from the shoulder!'

"And after that, they poured in, personal calls, telephone calls, telegrams and letters.

"As for producers—and you will remember I expressed the hope that they would join the Universal in helping to prevent any exhibitors from bankruptcy—I have heard from only one and he was peeved. He didn't think I should offer to help exhibitors who are losing money without first consulting other producers!

"If all prdoucers would get down to brass tacks all the time, as I have tried to do for the past dozen years, and would realize that exhibitors have problems which must be solved—if producers would do this instead of issuing flowery press agent stories telling how they love and adore the exhibitor—if producers would do something instead of saying something, we'd have a more prosperous industry than we've got today.

"Well, I repeat my offer. If other producers won't follow my lead, this offer is good for their customers anyhow."

Big R-C Specials to be Issued in February

An imposing array of special productions are ready for release by R-C Pictures during the month of February including R-C Week, February 5 to 12th, according to Charles R. Rogers, general manager of distribution for that organization.

Among them are L. J. Gasnier's spectacular production "The Call of Home," containing some of the greatest flood scenes ever flashed upon the screen; "Beyond the Rainbow," William Christy Cabanne's epic drama with one of the biggest all-star casts of the year and "Why Men Forget," featuring Milton Rosmer and a brilliant group of players.

The foregoing productions, according to Mr. Rogers, have been designed for definite box office appeal in the shape of scenic thrills and big dramatic moments that lend themselves readily to exploitation and newspaper advertising. The Gasnier production, for instance, is by all odds the most spectacular ever produced by the noted French director with the exception of "Kismet," with Otis Skinner.

While "The Call of Home" lacks the lavish backgrounds and costumes of "Kismet," it rivals the Skinner vehicle in the tremendous drama. Mr. Gasnier gets into the flood scenes which are reputed to be about the last word in scenic thrills.

ALBANY

At a meeting of the Film Board of Trade of Albany, N. Y., heretofore known as the F. I. L. M. Club, C. R. Halligan, manager of the Universal exchange in that city, was elected president, succeeding Bert Moran, who has just been transferred to Pathe's Pittsburgh office. Other officers elected were: vice-president, Earl Kramer of the Select exchange; treasurer, Marvin Kampner of Famous Players; secretary, Miss Marie Wheeler of Merit.

From now on the board will meet every Monday morning at 11 o'clock at the Pathe exchange, while the grievance committee will meet at 2 o'clock on the same day. This latter committee includes Mr. Kramer as chairman, Mr. Kempner, Bert Gibbons, J. M. Loughborough, with William Kupper as alternate.

INDIANAPOLIS

Both film versions of "The Little Minister" were in town the week of January 8, the Ohio showing the Paramount and the Crystal the Vitagraph. The scrap was hot, the Crystal hiring the street car, frequently used by local exhibitors, to patrol downtown streets.

The W. C. T. U. and church federation are making plans to call upon Mayor Samuel Lewis Shank to enforce the blue laws in Indianapolis. The movement is not expected to get anywhere, the mayor being of decidedly liberal views.

The last of South Bend's three legitimate theatres has succumbed. The Orpheum circuit has taken over the new Palace for vaudeville while the Blackstone and Oliver, both million dollar houses, are running pictures. It is the first time South Bend has been without legitimate attractions for almost fifty years.

The Nellesen Amusement Company of Ft. Wayne, Ind., has filed application for incorporation with the secretary of state at Indianapolis. Purpose is set forth as operation of picture houses. Directors are T. H., F. T. and Marie Nellesen.

KANSAS CITY

Following the initiative of the Apollo theatre, Kansas City, three other motion picture houses in Kansas City have reduced their admission prices to 15 cents for adults and 10 cents for children, war tax included. The theatres are the Linwood, the Gillham and the Ellsworth theatres.

Several changes have been made in the personnel of the Kansas City First National branch during the last few days. H. G. Gill has been appointed as manager of the newly created publicity department. L. J. McCarthy, formerly with Associated First National in Iowa and Nebraska, has joined the Kansas City force and will cover all keytowns in the Kansas City territory, handling the product distributed through First National on the open market basis.

William D. Scoville, pioneer sportsman in the Middle West and for the last few years manager and owner of the Idle Hour theatre, Kansas City, died at Kansas City on Sunday of last week, following an illness of several months. Funeral services were held on Tuesday.

A party de luxe was given to the entire force of the Goldwyn Kansas City branch last week by W. E. Truog, branch manager. Mr. Truog, dressed as Lew Dockstader, was the central figure of mirth, while other members of the force participated in the entertainment, which temporarily caused Mr. Truog's home to resemble back-stage.

The Empress theatre, Kansas City, which formerly housed a stock company, has taken its place among the combination motion picture-vaudeville houses, following improvements costing $10,000. The seating capacity has been increased to 1,500. This makes the fifth combination first-run house in the down town district of Kansas City.

Harry Graham, manager of the Kansas City Pathe branch, who has been confined to his home for several weeks because of illness, is much improved and now is able to make occasional visits to his office.

FLORIDA

C. D. Cooley, general manager of the Consolidated Amusement Co. of Tampa, Fla., showed his ability as a showman, the way he put over the engagement of "The Four Horsemen" at the Victory theatre.

The Victory seats 1,600, and with prices up to $1.50, he packed the house for six performances and actually turned away great crowds at every show.

Dozier & Prendergast have opened a house for colored folks at Dade City, Fla. The house is called the "Queen." They report capacity business since the opening and state they will open another theatre for white patrons in Bushnell, Fla.

C. E. Lindall drove down to Florida from Bar Harbor, Maine and has established a circuit in a number of small towns. He will buy his shows by the week and make the route each week in his car.

MINNEAPOLIS

Wid Gunning's "The Old Oaken Bucket" has been booked for a week's run at the Pantages theatre, Minneapolis, starting January 29, according to E. A. Wescott, local exchange manager. The Pantages is a vaudeville house and also runs first-run films.

Taking the form of a Christmas celebration the newly organized Minneapolis "Paramount Pep" club held their first get-together party during the holidays. The party celebrated the purchase of a new phonograph by the club, which comprises the entire personnel of the local Paramount exchange.

Merriment was provided by Phil Reisman, district manager for Paramount, Joe Freidman and others. A midnight luncheon was served after an evening of dancing.

The Grand theatre at Superior, Wis., which has been playing musical tabloid and feature pictures and which is controlled by Finkelstein and Ruben Enterprises has been closed because of lack of patronage. No date has been set for re-opening the house but it is understood that no attempt to operate it will be made before late spring.

One of the biggest first-run film deals Minneapolis has ever seen was closed the past month by T. J. MacEvoy, United Artists' local manager, and Manager Jack Quinlan of the Pantages theatre. Contracts were signed for a Pantages presentation of "Disraeli," "The Iron Trail" and "Carnival." In addition to these "The Three Musketeers," "Way Down East" and "Little Lord Fauntleroy" were booked as second run pictures at this theatre.

G. E. Wingreene and A. J. Withnell have purchased the Rex theatre at Bismark, S. D. The house, which they have renamed the Rialto, has been remodeled and is said to be modern in every respect. Five nights each week will be devoted to photoplays while Junior Orpheum Circuit vaudeville will be featured the remaining two days. Messrs. Withnell and Wingreene will operate the Rialto in addition to the New Capitol which is to be opened soon at Bismark.

WESTERN NEW YORK

The Shea Amusement Company will terminate its arrangement with the Elmwood Theatre Company, under which the Shea interests have been operating the Elmwood, on January 21. At this time the house will return to its old policy of second run, double feature bills, with three changes a week. Under the Shea direction the Elmwood was showing first run pictures simultaneously with the Hippodrome and North Park, with two changes a week.

There have been several changes along Buffalo's Film Row. H. C. Bissell has resigned from Vitagraph to join Wid Gunning. Harry Dixon, former manager of the Central Park and Star theatres succeeds Mr. Bissell at Vitagraph. Billie West succeeds Mr. Dixon at the Central Park. G. M. Farley and Tom Geraty have come to Buffalo from the home Hodkinson office to assist Sales Manager T. W. Brady in a drive through the territory. Phil Smith, representing Universal in Syracuse, has resigned to accept the management of the Sesonski house in Oswego. E. B. McCaffrey, of Fox has returned to New York and has been succeeded by F. Brooks, who will cover the Rochester district. Mell R. Edwards formerly withh First National and Nu Art, has been engaged by N. I. Filkin at Merit as a salesman.

The Buffalo office of Screen Attractions, Inc., of which Charles P. Saunders was manager, has been closed.

E. M. Saunders, Metro sales manager was in Buffalo for a conference with Henry W. Kahn, branch manager and his salesmen, last week. There was a dinner in the Hotel Lafayette. The Buffalo exchange won second prize for Metro Week. Kahn Week will be observed March 26-April 1.

Syracuse exhibitors have a dinner in the Hotel Onondaga in honor of B. M. Moran, who has been transferred from the Albany to the Pittsburgh Pathe exchange. Among those present were Edgar Weill, Francis P. Martin, Earl L. Crabb, Al Robins, Mitchel and Ben Fitzer, Myron T. Bloom, George Smith and George Blackmon.

Allan S. Moritz, manager of the Buffalo F. P.-L. exchange, is making big plans for Tenth Anniversary Week in March. He will take page ads in all the leading newspapers of the territory.

George Roberts will soon reopen the Lyceum in Elmira and has booked Harold Lloyd comedies and Pathe short subjects as additional attractions to the "Tab" program.

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

Beyfuss Sells Entire Foreign Rights

ALEXANDER BEYFUSS, President of Exceptional Pictures Corporation, has completed negotiations with Bobby North, General Manager, whereby the Apollo Trading Corporation acquires the entire foreign rights to the first two Exceptional Pictures, Charles (Chic) Sale in "His Nibs," and Martin Johnson's "Jungle Adventures."

In "His Nibs" the foreign market has acquired a production which will bring to them a play that is more purely American than any other ever offered. As such, it is destined to be widely appreciated and acclaimed. Martin Johnson is not new to the markets of the world. His first motion pictures were successful in the highest degree. Very few American pictures have ever been as well received in Great Britain as Martin Johnson's features.

"Prejudice" Booking Throughout Country

"Prejudice," the Arista Film Corporation release, which is enjoying extended booking throughout the neighborhood houses in Greater New York, is now being launched on the state right market for bookings on all territories. According to Mr. Picker, president of Arista Film Corporation, "Prejudice" has been held over for extended runs three times in the past two weeks.

Exceptional Compiles Handsome Brochure

A handsome brochure consisting of two elaborate campaign books prepared for Martin Johnson's "Jungle Adventures" and Charles (Chic) Sales' starring vehicle, "His Nibs," was issued this week to members of the trade by the Exceptional Pictures Corporation.

The press books represent a distinct achievement as artistic compilations of useful advertising, publicity and exploitation suggestions to be applied by the exhibitor in putting over these two Exceptional releases. The campaign books also contain insert "Newspaper Publicity Sections" so arranged as to permit the ready extraction of any items for use in the local dailies. Another feature of the press books is the attractively colored cuts of posters and of scenes taken from the productions.

Carewe to Make Features

First to Be Story of Northwest; Series for State Right Market

EDWIN CAREWE, one of the best known and most popular picture directors, left on Saturday in company with B. F. Fineman, Benny Zeidman and Raymond Schrock for California, where they will produce a series of feature films under the name of "The Edwin Carewe Pictures Corporation." This corporation is incorporated under the State Laws of New York and will make its productions in Los Angeles. The first production scheduled is a story of the great Northwest, featuring a blizzard. It will contain an exceptionally large cast, made up of only the best people in the film world. The story is from one of our best known writers and the scenario is being prepared on the way out to Los Angeles by Raymond L. Schrock, who is responsible for "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," featuring Johnny Hines.

"The Edwin Carewe Pictures Corporation" is an Independent concern, having as its officers B. F. Fineman, president; Benny Zeidman, vice-president; Charles C. Burr, secretary, and William Lackey treasurer. Its purpose is to produce only high-class films, to be made specially for State Right Buyers. This will follow out the policy of Mr. Burr inaugurated with "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," which is contrary to the method of only state righting pictures that have been rejected by national distributors, rather than making pictures specially for the independent exchanges.

In securing the services of Mr. Carewe and giving the corporation his name, which is so well known to the motion picture world, the officers of the company feel they have greatly added to the name and strength of Independent producers. Mr. Carewe needs no introduction in the picture world. His reputation as a producer of First National and Metro productions is well known.

What the Week Brought Forth

By Matthew A. Taylor

NEW YORKERS who have followed with interest the progress made by Arrow's "Ten Nights in a Barroom" will find this eye-opener of "Doc" Shallenberger lodged in the Halsey theatre in Newark for a week beginning to-day, January 21st. Perhaps the Halsey lobby will look like 729 Seventh. Anyway, there is going to be a crowd of the boys tube-ing their way to see this special, which unassumingly entered Providence, R. I., not long ago, and made its exit a week later after playing to one of every sixth person in the city. Last week it repeated in Reading, Pa. The showing in Newark will give the New York trade their first opportunity to see this state right phenomenon. J. Charles Davis, 2nd—he who convinced Providence that there is nothing like the old-time melodramas—will be in charge of the exploitation and advertising in Newark.

Last week in his editorial William A. Johnston commented upon the success which greeted "Ten Nights." He cited it as an example of the public's protest against "too much star." And this week comes the announcement of another state right feature which falls into the same category. It is "Where is My Wandering Boy To-Night," which has just been acquired by Equity Pictures and will be distributed by them. Joe Schnitzer keeps quiet until he is ready to do big things in a big way. "My Wandering Boy" is one of his big things, and just watch the way Schnitzer and Nat Rothstein are going to put it over!

Franklin Backer continues to tear up the independent market with his Amalgamated Pictures franchise. Sol. Lesser is the latest to succumb, which means that G. M. Anderson's twelve co-star productions will reach a goodly number of theatres in the wild-and-wooly.

Estimate "Ten Nights" Will Gross $3,000,000

CONSERVATIVE estimates of experienced picture men or exhibitors, although only released within the past few weeks and registering record successes wherever shown; those competent to judge have already arrived at estimates of the probable gross that will occur to the Arrow sensation "Ten Nights in a Barroom" in the United States in the present year—to say nothing of future years or of its reception in parts of the world outside North America.

One of those who is skilled in picture values and who is also in exploitation gives his deliberate opinion that this year "Ten Nights in a Barroom" may at least gross $3,000,000 in theatres in the United States.

The success of "Ten Nights in a Barroom" is in line with the Arrow policy reiterating during the past year of cordial co-operation between producer, distributor and exhibitor—the ideal condition of success in the motion picture field.

Interest Continues on "The Love Slave"

That Lucy Doraine, star of "The Love Slave," presented by the Herz Film Corporation and now being released in the independent field by the Russell Clark Syndicate, Inc., made a good impression in her first picture "Good and Evil," another Herz presentation, is evidenced by the interest aroused by the second feature. Either that, according to Mr. Clark, or the present demand for Eastern subjects which followed the success of "Good and Evil," "One Arabian Night," "Kismet," and "The Sheik," has centered interest in his release of "The Love Slave."

With the consciousness that Lucy Doraine is not only a very beautiful woman but a brilliant emotional actress as well, Mr. Clark says he feels more inclined to let star and subject divide the glory, being well satisfied himself with the numerous inquiries that reach him daily.

Balshofer in New York

Fred J. Balshofer, producer of "The Three Buckeroos," is in New York City from the Coast and will be in town for some time. He is making his headquarters at the Direct Film Corp., whose offices are at 147 West 47th street.

Equity Offers "Where Is My Wandering Boy"

J. I. Schnitzer

ANNOUNCEMENT is made this week of one of the most important transactions in the independent field this season, in the statement of J. I. Schnitzer, president of Equity Pictures Corp., that his company has acquired the B. F. Ziedman production, "Where Is My Wandering Boy To-Night?" It is stated that half a dozen of the largest and most prominent distributors and producers have been trying to obtain this picture. Experts, both film men and theatrical, have voiced their opinions that it is one of the big four outstanding productions of the past year and one that is destined to become one of the most talked-about pictures of the industry because of its box office value.

"And it is all the more sensational," states Equity, "because of its appearance at a time when heart-throb pictures have the tightest grip they have ever had since the inception of the film industry. Everyone knows that two of the largest producers and distributors have each had a winner in pictures exactly of the style of 'Where Is My Wandering Boy To-Night' and everyone knows that the biggest box-office receipts registered this season have been identified with these two productions."

"Where Is My Wandering Boy To-Night" is said to possess greater dramatic punches than either of these two big winners in question. Its greater intensity of power and its gripping story alone account for this fact and the truth of such a statement will be definitely determined when comparative box-office receipts are known after this production has played the prominent theatres throughout the country.

This deal was closed by Messrs. B. F. Zeidman and B. Fineman for the producers and by J. I. Schnitzer for Equity Pictures Corporation, after negotiations lasting for more than three weeks.

Tentative plans for the presentation of this production in the East call for advertising expenditures on bill-boards and in newspapers, together with other forms of highly specialized exploitation, totaling a greater sum than has ever before been spent on any independent picture in this or in any other market, states Equity. Plans are also being laid for a film trade paper campaign that will be a paragon for future pictures released on the independent basis. A questionnaire was sent by Equity to some of the biggest Independent distributors and to about thirty of the representative theatres throughout the country, asking opinions on the value of the title, and in every case, the reply brought not only commendation as to the value of this title at the box-office but enthusiasm because of receipts derived in the past from pictures similar in theme and somewhat similar in the meaning of the title.

To all inquiries from representative film men previous to this first public announcement by Equity, J. I. Schnitzer has answered that Equity has greater faith in the Independent Market now than at any time since the inception of this business, and influenced by this unshaken faith and by the bigness of the coming season, Equity has procured for the independent market this new picture which measures up to the biggest ever released along these lines, convinced that the independent market can handle such pictures with as much ease and as much success as the regular producing and distributing organizations.

Commenting on this phase of the business, Mr. Schnitzer stated that if given genuinely big productions, the kind with which independent distributors can compete with the biggest in the business, the independent field will flourish and grow to meet any competition, no matter how powerful.

"Heretofore," continued Mr. Schnitzer, "when an independent producer turned out a really great picture, he took it to the regular distributing organizations who pawed over it until it was a case of 'take my price or keep your picture.' But here is a direct contrast to this former situation. In this instance, Messrs. Zeidman and Fineman brought their product direct to Equity who has given the necessary co-operation to the producers, to convince them that the Independent market can and will foster and absorb really big productions."

Tentative plans for the premiere of "Where Is My Wandering Boy To-Night" call for an extended run at a Broadway theatre.

An unusual showing on the billboards will be made with a wide newspaper campaign to back up the billboard showing.

Many novel and unusual suggestions have already been offered for a prologue that will be entirely and distinctly different. As outlined the showing on the billboards call for a 60-day period with several changes of paper.

City wide exploitation is now being planned on an elaborate scale and all in all if the present plans are carried into effect New York will see something new in the presentation of a picture that is said to be one of big outstanding pictures for the year 1922.

No distribution plans have yet been made. Such plans will be announced by Equity when all arrangements for the release of the picture have been completed.

More Wesley Barry Pictures

HARRY M. WARNER, of Warner Brothers, has perfected new arrangements with Marshall Neilan for Wesley Barry's services in two new productions to be produced by Harry Rapf and directed by William Nigh, both of whom are responsible for "Why Girls Leave Home," and "School Days," featuring Wesley, according to a recent announcement.

The two productions to be made by the Warner organization are "From Rags to Riches," the famous melodrama in which Joe Santley starred for Al. H. Woods, and "Little Heroes of the Street," written by Lem Parker, another well known "meller." Both of these stage plays are said to have been very popular with playgoers, and it is expected that their value as screen productions will surpass the vogue they attained before the footlights.

Production on the first story will be started by Messrs. Rapf and Nigh on or about May 1. The popularity of the freckled faced star, and the opportunities he will be offered in the two forthcoming features are calculated to more than surpass the interest and the nation wide approval that has been accorded Barry's latest starring vehicle, Gus Edwards' "School Days."

The Gus Edwards classic is declared to have been booked by scores of first run theatres throughout the country. It is said to be shattering house records wherever it has been shown, and during the week run at the Allen theatre, Cleveland, it virtually took the city's newspaper critics and motion picture enthusiasts by storm. Such first run theatres as the Metropolitan theatre, Washington, D. C., the Beacon, Park and Modern theatres, Boston; Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo; Balaban & Katz, Chicago; in the theatres of Springfield; Holyoke, Portland, Lawrence, and Rialto, Milwaukee in addition to scores of others are now running or have planned to show "School Days."

Warners Sign Juvenile Star for Two More Features

The success that is following in the wake of all screenings of the Warner production was again demonstrated at the premiere presentation in Pennsylvania on January 9th. The inital showing was held at the Third Street theatre, Easton, Pa., to one of the largest and most enthusiastic audience that has ever been within the confines of the cinema palace, according to Harry Rapf, and Harry M. Warner, both of whom with Eddie Bonns, attended the presentation.

The Third Street theatre is controlled by Harlan E. Woehrle. Luther B. Anthony, a dramatic editor, staged a School Day revue made up of twelve local school children. Mrs. Woehrle was rehearsed to play the part of the school teacher, and it is said she gave a capable characterization of her part. Prior to the showing, Mr. Woehrle, accepting the Warner slogan to "Advertise With Music," had the school orchestras play the famous Gus Edwards song, secured window display tieups with numerous merchants and installed a Magna Vox, a sound transmitter, in his theatre, thereby transmitting the entire school day music to thousands of people in Easton. Mr. Woehrle wired the Warner organization as follows: "Your picture 'School Days' in conjunction with my home talent School Day prologue a riot. Broke opening day record. Heartiest congratulations."

New England Exhibitors See "School Days"

Many prominent New England exhibitors attended the trade showing of Warner Brothers production, Gus Edwards' "School Days," featuring Wesley Barry, at the Copley Plaza Hotel, Boston, on Tuesday evening, January 3. The showing was followed by a dinner and dancing, and it was presented by Sam Grand, president of the Federated Film Exchange of Boston.

One of the entertaining features of the evening was the presentation of a "School Days" revue made up of a number of Mr. Grand's employees. All the assistants, bookers, stenographers and salesmen were rehearsed, and an amateur school room act was successfully put over much to the astonishment of the large audience.

Offer Rights to Indian Rebellion Film

A. W. Smith & Co., of Bangalore, are offering the United States and Canadian rights of a very unusual film showing the Malabar Rebellion in India The pictures were directed by Major E. L. Robinson, of the 75th Carnatic Infantry, and are the official records for the Government of India. The photography was by E. H. Doveton, Bangalore.

Some remarkable scenes of the rebellion have been obtained, according to reports. After introducing the audience to the character of the rebel country, there are shown scenes of the refugees, and burning villages and destroyed bungalows.

These pictures were produced especially for the Government of India, and constitute one of the most remarkable historical descriptive films of recent date. Inquiries in regard to this film should be addressed to A. W. Smith & Co., Imperial Theatre, Bangalore, South India.

Amalgamated Franchise for Sol Lesser

THAT Sol Lessor has secured the franchise for Amalgamated Pictures, and will handle the twelve co-star productions supervised by G. M. Anderson and distributed by East Coast Productions, Inc., during the coming year through Independent exchanges is announced by Franklyn E. Backer, president of the latter company. The closing of the Lessor-Backer deal means that the first Amalgamated picture, "Ashes," starring William Courtleigh, Myrtle Steadman, and several other favorite players will become available to the exhibitors of California, Arizona and Nevada immediately, and that prints of the second release, "Any Night," in which Robert Edeson, Tully Marshall, Lysle Leslee and William Courtleigh are co-starred, will go forth to the coast exchange centres on schedule.

Zierler Closes Drive for "Tarzan" Serial

Samuel Zierler, president of Commonwealth Film Corporation, distributing "Adventures of Tarzan" in greater New York and upper New York state, has recently brought to a close a sales drive inaugurated in behalf of this production. This drive began on December 12th and was brought to a close on December 31st of last year. During this period it is stated that the Zierler organization in greater New York alone wrote bookings to the amount of $9,009.50 for the serial starring Elmo Lincoln.

Among the theatres contracting for the serial during the period mentioned, were the following: The Garden Arcade, Washington, Tivoli, Greenpoint Star, Crawford, Eagle, National, East End, Lincoln, Decatur, Princess, Yorkville, Hippodrome, Manhattan, Harrison, Strand, Star, Empire, Royal, Gaiety, Victory, etc. It is stated that Commonwealth has exceeded all previous bookings for a chapter film play in their handling of "Adventures of Tarzan" since September of last year.

"The Prodigal Judge"

Trade Awaits Novel Series

"Visual Symphonies" Announcement Creates Considerable Interest in Trade

THE enthusiastic reception awaiting an original motion-picture idea which has economic as well as artistic value was never more fully demonstrated than by the interest aroused by the announcement made exclusively in the Motion Picture News of last week of the series of "Visual Symphonies," shortly to be presented by Claude Macgowan, general manager of Visual Symphony Productions, Inc., of which Dudley Murphy, who is directing the series, is president.

Launched at a time when exhibitors everywhere are wearying of the expensive burden of prologues, presentations and pseudo vaudeville as program openers, the character of the forthcoming "Visual Symphonies" was quickly appreciated. An examination of their qualities proves them to be ideal attraction substitutes, and as such are bound to save exhibitors vast sums of money now spent on something which many believe has no place in a motion picture theatre. Each "Visual Symphony" is a short subject of from 1,000 to 1,500 feet, featuring one or more of the great stars of the operatic and kindred fields of the drama, music and pantomime, and at the same time providing from the works of the world's greatest composers an overture that can be adequately presented by any form of theatre music from player piano to symphony orchestra.

"The thing to show in a motion picture theatre is a motion picture," Mr. Murphy said, while enjoying a brief rest from the cutting of the first release which includes the celebrated Adolph Bolm, star of the Russian Ballet; Ruth Page, the dancing and pantomimic star, and Olin Howland, Broadway's featured eccentric dancer, in Saint-Saens' "Dans Macabre," which will be released as "The Dance of Death."

"No motion picture manager can hope to compete in stage presentations with the regular vaudeville houses. The big first-run houses on Broadway cannot hope to rival the high-salaried acts of the playhouses, and if they cannot, what can the manager do who is a thousand miles or more from the player's headquarters?"

David G. Fischer Organizes New Independent Distributing Body

"EXHIBITORS, producers and distributors, in general seem to be of the opinion that the coming year will see the film industry back to a state of normalcy. Everybody appears to feel the same way, but not everybody is making an effort to bring about the needed readjustment," says Mr. Fischer, who has been connected with motion pictures for the past seventeen years, has taken the "bull by the horns" and organized the Regal-Fischer Corporation.

The purpose of the Regal-Fischer Corporation will be to distribute only pictures of proven merit. Each and every picture before being released to the public will have to prove its value. In other words the pictures will be tried out on the "dog", and if such pictures do not meet with the approval of all concerned then they will not be forced on the pubilc.

Mr. Fischer will act as vice president and general manager of the Regal-Fischer Corporation, which is a closed corporation and not a stock floating proposition. The corporation at the present time will deal only in finished pictures and will not enter the production field, unless at a later date, this proves necessary.

"It is my opinion", quotes Mr. Fischer, "that the distribution of features has been sadly neglected in the independent field. No serious concentration has been given this department. Previous to this time the independent field has been more or less of a "get rich quick" proposition. It is now time to stabilize this most important branch, to deal only in pictures that have a public value, and release these pictures on a fair and equitable basis."

"There has been a tremendous waste in the past and it is the purpose of the Regal-Fischer Corporation to try and solve the most difficult problem of distributing pictures through the independent market. I am sure that we have worked out a basis, that while not absolutely new will prove an innovation. We have been working quietly for the past four months, and I feel confident that the plans and methods that have been formulated will meet with the approval of the most exacting."

Mr. Fischer's time in the past two months has been occupied with the first production, which is finished and now appears in seven reels. Those who have previewed this feature acclaim it to be one of the most stupendous spectacles ever shown on the screen.

At the present time there are three productions in the vaults of the Regal-Fischer Corporation with more to follow, having been contracted for through some of the leading organizations.

Arrow Representative Sees Improvement

J. S. Jossey, special representative of the Arrow Film Corporation, returned from an extended trip through the South and middle-west last week and reported conditions very much improved in the Independent field.

Mr. Jossey states that Independent exchanges are in a healthier condition than they have been for some time past and are enjoying excellent business. He reports conditions generally rapidly approaching normal.

Preparing for Third Arrow-Curwood

ARROW FILM CORPORATION announces that preparations are afoot for the production of a successor to the successful Curwood-Pine Tree Production, "The Girl From Porcupine," which has created such a favorable impression all over the country.

The story is being selected and in due time detailed announcement will be made of the director, cast, etc. Arrow Film Corporation is in receipt of press, newspapers, exchange and exhibitors' reports from all over the United States and Canada, expressing their admiration of "God's Country and the Law," and "The Girl From Porcupine" with the publicity campaign inaugurated by Arrow.

Sunburst Pictures Organized in Mass.

Sunburst Pictures Corporation recently organized in Massachussetts today opened their main offices in Springfield at 360 Worthington street. The office force is composed of seven people for the present and they are under the management of Albert W. Plummer, director of productions and president of the company. Clarence Phinney formally with Universal on the coast is assistant director. Maurice B. Townsend is treasurer of the corporation.

The first picture to be produced by the company will be "Sands of Humanity" on which work will be started as soon as possible. The company plans to build a studio in Springfield on a large scale.

Unique Wireless Message Wins Publicity

William Alexander, of the Alexander Film Corporation, is bringing back from London with him, an order for a compilation of a "boom stunt," encyclopaedia to be used for suggestions for exhibitors and exploiters abroad. This compilation will include all the worth while things done by manufacturers and publicity experts in this country during the past several years.

Before leaving London, Mr. Alexander further publicized the Sherwhich his company will release in lock Holmes detective pictures, America. A wireless message was sent from London, reading "Fage Dr. Watson." No further information was sparked. In the time specified, wireless replies piled back into the Marconi station from all parts of the world. A message from Japan read: "Watson's present address care Sherlock Holmes, London." From the Arctic came: "Thought Watson died with Sherlock some years back." Ninety per cent of the 907 replies that came in, showed that the senders were familiar with the Sherlock Holmes detective stories. The stunt was afforded considerable publicity.

Adventure Film's Release

American Releasing Corp. to Distribute Exceptional Production

EXCEPTIONAL Pictures Corporation has completed negotiations, which have been under way for some time, with Walter Greene, President, and F. B. Warren, Vice-President, of the newly organized American Releasing Corporation, for the immediate national distribution of the Exceptional feature picture Martin Johnson's "Jungle Adventures."

Alexander Beyfuss, President, and A. S. Kirkpatrick, Vice-President and General Manager, consumated the arrangement on behalf of Exceptional, confident that the American Releasing Corporation, in view, not only of the known and proven ability of its officers, and the high calibre of its organization, but also because of the enthusiasm and optimism with which they are unfolding their plans, was the logical outlet for a production of the unusual type and appearance of Martin Johnson's "Jungle Adventures."

Its power at the box office was amply demonstrated during the pre-release engagement at the Capitol Theatre, New York City, recently, where its remarkable exploitation possibilities were taken advantage of to the fullest degree by S. L. Rothapfel. The capacity attendance proved, not only that it is an audience picture, but also that its exploitation opportunities, when acted upon, will meet with ready response from the public.

The Capitol Theatre presentation, the first public showing of Martin Johnson's "Jungle Adventures," afforded conclusive evidence on another point, namely, its reception by critics, in a manner rarely experienced by a motion picture. Twenty-three critics who attended this showing were absolute and unqualified in their unanimous opinion that "Jungle Adventures" is one of the most worthy and unusual motion pictures the screen has ever offered. There was not a single exception to this decision, among the critics being those from every daily newspaper in New York City, every trade journal, six national weekly publications, and the majority of the motion picture fan magazines. "Photoplay" listed it as one of the six best photoplays of the month, and the National Board of Review issued a special glowing report and included it in its list of "Exceptional photoplays."

Unusual Thrills in Serial

Continuous Censorproof Action Dominate in "The Jungle Goddess"

SELIG'S efforts to make "The Jungle Goddess," his new fifteen episode, wild-animal serial, of universal appeal has resulted in an unending succession of "thrillers" which dominate the action and at the same time offer clean, censor-proof entertainment, according to Export & Import Film Co., Inc., world distributors of this chapter-picture.

"Sacrificed to the Lions" is the title of the first episode, in which a thrilling balloon flight is the basis for the opening of the story. Vonda Phelps, the child prodigy discovered by Sid Grauman, who used her in a special act at his million dollar theatre, is cast in the role of "Betty," who is the heroine of the flight and later is adopted by a jungle tribe and grows up to become "The Jungle Goddess." Elinor Field later assumes the role of the grown-up goddess.

Episode Two of "The Jungle Goddess" is titled "The City of Blind Waters" and takes Truman Van Dyke and Elinor Field to a mystic South African City where a poisoned stream has put a curse on the surrounding country.

In this episode Selig has employed all the "mystery" angles which go to make his serials the favorites of all chapter-picture fans. By an ingenious method he has painted men with scales, calling them "Fish Men." They are supposed to live under water and Selig has taken advantage of the pretty photographic effects the story made possible.

The big thrill in this episode takes place when Elinor Field, who has been set adrift in a frail canoe, is whirled into the rapids of the stream and drawn toward a hundred-foot waterfall. "Mike," the chimpanzee, makes a perilous rescue of the girl as the boat goes over the falls.

The third episode of "The Jungle Goddess" is titled "Saved by the Great Ape." This is punctuated by a chase in which a veritable army of Selig lions take part and a duel to the death between a leopard and a giant ape.

"The Love Slave" Sold for N. Y. Territory

Russell Clark, vice president and general manager of the Russell Clark Syndicate, Inc., announces that the New York State and Greater New York rights to "The Love Slave," starring beautiful Lucy Doraine, a Sascha production, presented by the Herz Film Corporation, have been sold to First National Exchange, Inc., which is preparing to make a special drive on the picture in the territory mentioned.

"School Days" to Run at New York Strand

THE first New York presentation of Gus Edwards' "School Days," featuring Wesley Barry, will be given at the Strand theatre, New York, during the week of January 29th, according to an announcement by Warner Brothers, distributors of the production.

According to Harry Rapf, the producer of "School Days," no time or expense will be spared to make the presentation a notable one.

Kineto Films at Exposition

Program Entirely of Kineto Subjects at Brooklyn, N. Y., Exhibit

AT the Brooklyn Manufacturers Industrial Exposition which is being held this week at the 23rd Regiment Armory in Brooklyn, all motion picture activities are under the direction of the Kineto Company of America, Inc., with J. L. Barnard, Industrial Director for Kineto, in charge.

A theatre seating more than 800 persons is part of the Exposition and it has had capacity crowds all week. Industrial and educational pictures make up the motion picture program.

The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce under the leadership of William Brandt, president, cooperated wonderfully with the management of the Exposition in preparing the public for it. For several weeks more than 200 theatres in Brooklyn have been showing motion pictures of prominent Brooklyn industries and commercial institutions; and will continue to show them until the entire first series has been shown throughout the borough.

Among the establishments of which motion pictures are being shown are the George W. Baker Shoe Company, Doehler Die-Casting Co., Adriance Machine Works, Inc., J. H. Williams & Co., Potdevin Machine Co., A. Schrader's & Sons, Mergenthaler Linotype Co., Intertype Corporation, Abraham & Strauss, Balch Price & Co., Frederick Loeser & Co., and A. I. Namm & Son.

All of these pictures are also being shown at the Exposition. All of them were produced by the Kineto Company of America under the personal direction of Mr. Barnard. James Goebel headed the photographic staff.

Jans Planning Bigger 1922

Will Add New York Branch to Jans' Film Service of Jersey

HERMAN F. JANS, President of Jans Productions, Inc., Jans Film Service, Inc. and Jans Pictures, Inc., as well as the director of large motion picture interests in Jersey, states that he has in view some big things for the New Year, and these two of the activities proposed for his corporations will be of exceptional interest to the trade; as, if consummated, they will open new outlets for those exhibitors who have not heretofore been supplied.

Mr. Jans, while not ready to announce both of the proposed undertakings has, however, released the information that he has decided to add a New York branch to the Jans Film Service which has operated in Jersey practically since the inception of the motion-picture industry, and which has built up for itself a clientele that is the envy of Jersey exchanges. Mr. Jans, accordingly, expects to be an active contestant for the best productions released by the Independents, both for greater New York and New Jersey, and he feels that success will surely be his, as he intends to apply the same methods in this new territory which have brought him success in New Jersey.

Lowell and Ivy Ward in New Picture Soon

Blaized Trail Productions are contemplating another picture, work on which will be started at Gloversville in the near future; that is to say as soon as the demand of time and attention of John Lowell and Baby Ivy Ward from their public appearances can be relaxed, but at present it does not seem that either the star, John Lowell or the child, Baby Ivy Ward can exhaust the enormous popularity which Arrow's "Ten Nights in a Barroom" has brought them.

Feature Subjects of Short Length

"The Leather Pushers"

(Universal—Jewel—Collier's)

UNIVERSAL FILM introduces "The Leather Pushers" with three "rounds" of the fastest action we have seen in some time. A "round," as used here, means a single subject consisting of two reels. Each "round" is so constructed as to make a fairly complete subject in itself. There will be twelve "rounds" to the series, one "round" being released each month.

"The Leather Pushers," based on H. C. Witwer's stories published in Collier's, reveals the trials of a gentleman pugilist fighting his way from the "bimbo" ranks to the light heavyweight championship of the world. And, boy, he does fight, taking his share of punishment from such well-known "pugs" as Sam McVey, Bob Armstrong, and Frank Burns. Reginald Denny plays the role of the "comer," Kane Halliday, alias "Kid" Roberts.

The "Kid" does not win the coveted crown in the first few rounds—not by a long shot. He must run the entire gamut of tricky managers, financial set-backs, and the disasters resultant from ill training. The feature bouts, of course, are the main punches of each picture, but some of the sidelights of the prize-ring and the training quarters are almost as interesting. Atmospheric "shots" of the sidelines, quips from the spectators packed in appropriate titles, and the antics of the trainers and managers in their corners during exciting moments of the ring battle are sure to get a laugh.

Of course, there is a girl, who breaks her engagement with Kane because of his pugilistic career; and there is Kane's father, whose financial misfortune is the direct cause of the boy's abandonment of college and his entrance into the prize-ring. Dad needs the money to be reestablished in Wall Street, and Kane is out to get it for him. Mr. Denny is a handsome figure in evening clothes, and each "round" gives him a chance at the social whirl.

The types in the pictures also deserve a word. Hayden Stevenson as "Joe" Murphy and Sam J. Ryan as "Dummy" Carney—both rival "pork-and-bean" fight managers—and Charlie Ascott as "Tin Ear" Fagin, a trainer, fit their roles admirably.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Battling Torchy"

(Produced by Mastadon Films—Released Through Educational Exchanges, Inc.)

HERE'S a winner. It is not only one of the most enjoyable of the "Torchy" comedies, but it is a worthy competitor of any comedy on the market. C. C. Burr has continually offered consistent laugh-getters, but Johnny Hines was never seen to better advantage than in "Battling Torchy." The story is a good one in the first place, the titles are funny without punning, and there are high class gags following one another in rapid fire order. Few prize fight scenes have been done more realistically or amusingly than that which occupies the later half of the second reel of "Battling Torchy." Johnny Hines bubbles over with pep in his every scene and gets the utmost out of the fight sequence.

Torchy's girl is fascinated by an East Side pug, who has rescued her. Johnny, to discredit his rival, goes to the Tenderloin in search of someone who will defeat the pugilist and allow him (Johnny) to take the credit. In the underworld, babies play with revolvers, and dogs eat iron chains from the fire hydrants. It is a tough place, and Johnny is just as tough. He finds a substitute, who is to fight as "the masked marvel," but he is injured at the last moment, and Johnny must fight himself. The two go at it in all realism, until Johnny manages to squirt some ether in his rival's face. The rest is easy.

"A Rambling Romeo"

(Christie Comedy—Two Reels—Released Through Educational Exchanges, Inc.)

ALTHOUGH there is plenty of action in "A Rambling Romeo," more, perhaps, than in a great many of these comedies, it cannot be classed as above the standard of this company. It is based upon a mixed foursome, matrimonially speaking. Two young men are about to ask the great question of two girls, but one of these men is too bashful. When his friend is to propose for him, a la John Alden, he finds himself misunderstood, and in the peculiar predicament of being engaged to two girls at the same time.

He is invited by both families to take dinner with them on the same evening, and as they live one above the other, he manages to be the guest of both, taking the soup course with one, and sliding down the dumb waiter to enjoy the fish with the other. These complications supply considerable hokum and many chase scenes before everything is explained and the foursome straightened out.

"Grandfather's Clock"

(Kineto Review—One Reel)

BACK in the '50s and '60s (we speak from hearsay) "Grandfather's Clock" was whistled and sung in every city and hamlet in the country. It has become endeared to the old folks—one of those melodious and lyrically simple ballads which have survived the years. James A. Fitz-Patrick has made, from its sentimental tale, a one-reel subject, which is appealing if for no other reason than its very novelty. The ancient tall clock was bought, according to the song writer, the day the old man was born. We see the little boy scampering about its base, we see it ticking away as he brings his bride to his new home, and we see him, an old man, climbing to bed as it strikes the hour. When he dies it "stops short—never to go again." The song is followed very closely.

With a vocal, or at least an orchestral rendition of the song during the screening, it should make a most pleasant number. All the old folks will take all the young folks to prove that the old songs were better than the new.

Movie Chat No. 70

(Kineto Company of America—One Reel)

THIS Movie Chat concentrates largely in Scotland. We see the large cantilever bridge over the Firth of Forth; some pastoral scenes; and a few views of Edinburgh. Then a viperine, a harmless cousin of the tru viper, makes its bow, and strikes at an ex tended hand in a most vicious fashion.

In New Orleans there is a cemetery with th dead buried above ground, in tombs or i corridor vaults. This is because of the un drained condition of the subsoil. Salmon fish ing in Oregon is shown, and the methods o putting out the nets and dragging prove in teresting. We next see the puppies of th Dingo, the Australian wild dog, which do no in the least resemble the parents.

This diversified and intimate reel is as worth as its predecessors.

"Neighbor Nelly"

(Prizma)

HERE is a quaint little study of neighborl affection which, because of its song o love and the many human touches revealed, i certainly entitled to a conspicuous place o every exhibitor's program. The spectator, afte witnessing it, will sigh for a touch of youth an springtime, provided he has neglected both i the pursuit of material things. It is an adapta tion of a famous poem—this "Neighbo Nelly." Here is a suburban home with a littl girl of nine or ten summers presiding over it Next door is a house that harbors a man o fifty years. He wanders over to find happines in the company of his little neighbor. Th years have rested lightly on his shoulders be cause of his youthful spirit.

The two disciples of April and Novembe form a lasting friendship. A parting comes bringing with it a rich expression of pathos The Prizma effects are finely executed an with Madge Evans, who will be remembere from her old feature plays, portraying th child, the spectator is given a treat in natura expression. "Neighbor Nelly?" Why th very title is quaint with charm and color. Sh is the type of girl you might expect to fin Out At Old Aunt Mary's. Length 1 Reel.— LAURENCE REID.

"From Dawn to Dusk in Egypt"

(World Wanderings Series—One Reel—Released Through Educational Exchanges, Inc.)

AN exceptionally interesting quarter of a hour can be spent watching "From Daw to Dusk in Egypt." We have never seen an scenic that presents such a number of nove views in rapid succession. Films which hav in the past offered views of ruins, proved some times to be as dead as their subjects, but th ruins of the splendid temples of Egypt—ruin so massive and stately that the splendor of dea centuries is solemnly impressed—these mak film views of almost piquant interest.

We see the lazy Nile, with its queer craf and queerer fishermen. The pyramids are out lined against the sky. The skeleton remains o a gigantic temple rise from the overflowing Nil like huge granite trees. The graceful palms, a though growing in mid-ocean, are contraste with the ruins.

"From Dawn to Dusk in Egypt," appro priately staged, is an artistic piece, and one a the same time so easily appreciated, that i should be universally well received.—MAT THEW A. TAYLOR.

"THE MAN FROM LOST RIVER"
(Goldwyn)

Fine Backgrounds, Atmosphere and Clever Acting Make This An Agreeable Offering

THIS is a lumberjack story framed in a background entirely consistent with the characters and plot. It does not present anything unusual in theme, the idea being a sort of triangle with the sting taken out. In fact it is a quiet story and the lack of rushing action so characteristic of its type may disappoint those who are expecting smashing scenes and climaxes. Katherine Newlin Burt, the author of "The Branding Iron," has written a plausible tale which relies almost entirely on a sentimental appeal for its interest. She has drawn an interesting figure in the hero—a man who is able to conquer men, but who is afraid of himself in the presence of women.

But the romantic glamour of the story is frequently lost in the truly picturesque backgrounds, the director taking the company to some forest reservation and seeing to it that realistic vistas are caught. The primitive love and jealousy—the little crude mannerisms of the lumberjacks—these seem in perfect harmony with the setting. The hero is somewhat of a brute who loses his character under the refining influence of the girl. She (a lonely creature) has responded to the only gentleman in the camp—an Eastener who is unable to adapt himself to the rough life of the timber workers. He marries her, but the hero warns him to play square. When the city youth attempts to flee, the powerful foreman gives him a severe punishment. It is then that the man from Lost River takes it upon himself to be her protector. She calls him a timber wolf, but he answers that he is only a watch-dog.

The action revolves around cutting down trees and building the romantic element, the emphasis being placed on the confusion of the hero to express his passion in adequate terms. He is a compelling figure—one that registers as keenly alive, sensitive, proud and defiant in the hands of House Peters, a real trouper. This actor never poses. His poise and restraint should be studied by considerable of our leading men. No better selection could have been made than this player as the chief lumberjack. Miss Burt has drawn his opposite as a contemptible weakling who is allowed to perish from a plague when he interferes in the true course of romance. The heroine, played by Fritzi Brunette, is brought forth with considerable appeal, the actress emphasizing the pathos of the situation in an able manner. The director has added some good touches, the scene of the hero falling asleep after hours of ministering to the stricken girl carrying first rate drama and sentiment. While the picture doesn't develop any real action, it serves its purpose as far as backgrounds, atmosphere and acting are concerned.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The latest Goldwyn production from the pen of Katherine Newlin Burt, who made a spontaneous success with her two previous stories, "The Branding Iron" and "Snowblind," is "The Man From Lost River." Like her previous tales, Mrs. Burt's latest photoplay has the far West for its setting. The story tells of the triumph of a strong foreman in a lumber camp over a weak but charming character who settles in the community. The heroine is at first dazzled over the glibness of the new arrival. And until a time of crisis, she is unaware of the sterling qualities that exist beneath the stern exterior of the man who can control men, but is helpless in the presence of women.

House Peters, as the foreman, powerful in physique and firm of character, plays the leading role; the girl in the story is well impersonated by Fritzi Brunette. Most of the scenes were taken on a government forest reservation. As the title indicates, it is a story of strong men and their work; of rushing waters, great timber, and red-shirted lumberjacks. The backgrounds are highly picturesque. Frank Lloyd directed.

PROGRAM READER

A thrilling and romantic tale of love and loyalty, cowardice and courage from the big timber country is Katherine Newlin Burt's vital story, "The Man From Lost River," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. It unfolds swift and compelling action, characters primitive and elemental in their loves and hates, and releases a red-blooded reality which is bound to grip the spectator. It pulsates with human emotions and its backgrounds of the big open spaces are certain to lend a picturesque atmosphere that will charm the patron. In this vivid drama are such capable and charming players as House Peters, Fritzi Brunette and Allan Forrest. A classic of the North Woods. That is "The Man From Lost River."

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have an author, a director and a player who are leaders in their respective lines. Mrs. Burt is the wife of Maxwell Struthers Burt, who is also a famous author and the winner of an O. Henry prize. Frank Lloyd has directed scores of fine photoplays and Mr. Peters is unusually gifted as an exponent of realistic acting. The story may be featured as a classic of the North Woods. The vital drama, the big open country, the primitive loves and hates, the colorful characters—these should all be exploited. Goldwyn has issued a snappy press book which may be utilized in various ways. Your lobby may be suggestive of the atmosphere of the story. A prologue can be put on which would stimulate charming appeal.

"FOOLISH WIVES"
(Stroheim-Jewel-Universal)

Stroheim's Master Picture Lives Up to the Superlatives

THE praises have been sung about Universal's million dollar picture, "Foolish Wives," the creation of Erich von Stroheim, with fitting superlatives. All the data concerning this sumptuous production has been verified when one has appreciated the thousand and one highlights which establish this as a milestone in film entertainment. Taking his time to produce something that will live—that will vibrate with color and soar with true dramatic effects, Stroheim has accomplished his mission because he was given free rein to reach his ideal. It's a daring theme exposed here—one that places in bold relief that type of man known as a moral leper. He is a victim of his own passion—his only desire to play at love with lovely women as the stakes. If he cannot conquer the unapproachable, he will satisfy his lust with those who are below his station of life.

This is the theme. Against it, revolving in dazzling colors is the fascinating background of Monaco with Monte Carlo as the pivotal center of activities. Here is Stroheim supreme. The visual appeal is undeniably rich and spectacular. The world's playground has been caught in all its dazzling atmosphere. Here are the Casino, the Promenade, the various cafes, the night life, the ocean which washes its cliffs. It is a kaleidoscope of color and passion, pleasure and play. Detail is prominent everywhere. Accuracy marks every scene. So much for the spectacular appeal. As you marvel over the astonishing effects, you are being made acquainted with Stroheim as an actor. He is the strutting puppet, sure of himself, skilled in the social graces, a conceited devil with passion ever dominant in his thoughts and postures. His game is woman and incidentally her wealth. But passion comes first.

The character is revolting yet ever fascinating. His immediate prey is the wife of an American envoy, and the color of Monte Carlo, the bizarre uniforms of the foreign officers—and the distinctly different appeal of the hero-villain—all these quite go to her silly head and she becomes a victim. Stroheim emphasises delicate touches time and again which stamp him as a born dramatist. His wading through the water, the scene of the Trappist monk who stops him temporarily, the vivid execution of the fire scene which carries truly tense moments—these are but eloquent incidents in this compelling production. One must bear in mind that Stroheim is constantly striving to make this figure repellant—to fashion him in such colors that a moral will be achieved. It is a character study; but it is also a dramatic composition. It contains intimate details which cannot be revealed by the written word. There is plot and counterplot—all of which is covered by atmosphere of the most fascinating kind. He reveals the soul of the character he interprets. You watch this drama which soars easily and effectively to its climax when the central figure suffers an ignominious death. Bold strokes are everywhere. He has dared to do the impossible by showing a character unredeemed.

The cast assembled here is efficient. Each player has caught some of the inspiration, notably Rudolph Christians as the husband; Maude George and Mae Busch as the two adventuresses, and Dale Fuller as one of the victims of lust. The photography is remarkably clear—the settings superb. "Foolish Wives," as first presented, was fifteen reels. It has been trimmed of its extraneous detail. Some of the scenes which interfered with logical conclusions have been eliminated, thus making a drama, as it stands at present, one that cannot be criticized. It is to be cut to ten reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Universal's million dollar production, "Foolish Wives," the creation of Erich von Stroheim, will appear at the ———— theatre next ————. This is a superb achievement which has taken a year in the making and another year to assemble it in shape for picture presentation. Erich von Stroheim has surpassed himself in the artistic standards which he sets himself here. He not only wrote the story and directed the play but creates the leading role—that of an arch-villain whose object in life is to prey upon the feminine heart. Pictorially the feature depicts the Island of Monaco and its capital, Monte Carlo, with the surging life of that gay center richly suggested in a kaleidoscope of color and action. The drama depicts the puppet whose sole motive is to conquer women triumphing for a brief moment before he succumbs to his own weaknesses. Superb are the settings, eloquent the acting, vital and vivid the drama. "Foolish Wives" is a magnificently spectacular drama.

"THE LAW AND THE WOMAN"
(Paramount)

Clyde Fitch Play Adapted With Good Success

ANY play which the late Clyde Fitch wrote had plot and dramatic climaxes and "The Woman in the Case," or as it is called in photoplay form, "The Law and the Woman," is no exception. However, more words than a really big picture should contain are required to unfold the plot and caption the climaxes and in consequence opinions of the feature may vary. Some will find it an absorbing and well constructed drama. Others may complain that it is a long time getting to the real action.

The picture is notable, however, from a number of angles. It is the third of the Penrhyn Stanlaws productions and is exceedingly well done considered from the standpoint of individual program and offers better acting opportunities than she has had since "The Miracle Man." It marks the return of Cleo Ridgely, erstwhile star to the screen, as a heavy woman and demonstrates that she has lost none of her finesse as an actress. It presents an exceedingly strong dramatic climax in the last reel, one that carries suspense and action, even though it is all rather theatrical and melodramatic.

The story of "The Law and the Woman" concerns the efforts of a young wife to save her husband from being electrocuted for a murder he did not commit, the plan being for the wife to impersonate a woman of the streets in order to force a confession from the lips of the real culprit.

The early reels are purely incidental to the plot with titles to explain concerning the murder and the efforts made to save the condemned man through ordinary legal steps all of which fail. Then comes the big punch of the picture, practically the last act of Mr. Fitch's stage drama transferred to the screen. All in all, it is a picture that will probably please the most of the fans and add to the star's laurels as an actress of talent.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Margaret Rolfe.....Betty Compson
Julian Rolfe.....William T. Carleton
Clara Foster.....Cleo Ridgely
Phil Long.....Casson Ferguson
Judge Thompson.....Henry Barrows
Aunt Lucy.....Helen Dunbar
Bates.....Clarence Burton
Detective.....J. S. Stembridge

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Betty Compson, who achieved a triumph in "At the End of the World," and "The Little Minister," is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in "The Law and the Woman." This photoplay has been selected as a a perfect medium for the expression of Miss Compson's charms and talent. It is an adaptation of Clyde Fitch's popular success "The Woman in the Case." The role assumed by the star enables her to prove that she is rapidly forging to the front as a gifted emotional actress.

The plot concerns the faithful wife of Julian Rolfe who saves him from the death penalty on his conviction of the murder of his ward, Phil Long, in the apartment of Clara Foster, a professional adventuress, of which crime he is innocent. By assuming the character of a woman of the underworld, the wife succeeds in wringing a confession from Clara, who proves to be the real criminal. Will Carleton is the leading man and Cleo Ridgely returns to the screen as the adventuress. Casson Ferguson is the victim. The picture has been staged artistically by Penryhn Stanlaws.

PROGRAM READER

Betty Compson, the beautiful and talented young Paramount star, is certain to be received with genuine enthusiasm in her latest picture, "The Law and the Woman," which will be presented at the ———— theatre next ————. This is an intensely interesting story based on Clyde Fitch's celebrated play, "The Woman in the Case." As the heroine Miss Compson is seen to fine advantage, while others who contribute noteworthy performances are William T. Carleton, Cleo Ridgely, Helen Dunbar, Casson Ferguson and Clarence Burton. It is a tale of miscarried "justice" that beauty and daring put right. See the heroine slip into the habits and haunts of the wasters she despises! See her play their reckless game and win!

SUGGESTIONS

This is Betty Compson's newest picture, an adaptation of Clyde Fitch's play, "The Woman in the Case." You can feature it as a splendid story for the exhibition of the star's talent and beauty. Bring forth that it offers a daring theme which unfolds a tense drama and plenty of romance. Feature it as a story that shows how far a wife will go to help the man she loves. It is a story filled with good incident. Upon the stage the play stirred thousands because of its courageous theme. Bring forth that it is a society drama featuring the conflict, the class and dash of high life. Play up Miss Compson who is rapidly forging her way to the front rank of emotional actresses.

CATCH LINES

Beginning next ———— "The Law and the Woman" will be presented at the ———— theatre. Come and see a daring play, faultlessly staged and acted. See Betty Compson in her latest triumph.

Appearing in an adaptation of Clyde Fitch's vital drama, "The Woman in the Case," now known as "The Law and the Woman," Betty Compson creates a distinctive impression. See this vital photoplay.

"TOO MUCH WIFE"
(Realart)

A Satisfying Light Comedy, Bordering on Satire

IT is difficult to say why "Too Much Wife" is not more amusing than it really is. It is probable that the story does not allow for much rapid-fire hokum. As it stands it is a satisfactory comedy which borders on satire. It will give an audience some chuckles and appreciative smiles. And Wanda Hawley will delight her admirers and T. Ray Barnes his. It is light entertainment which can be classed as worth while, but not laughable.

Mr. Heffron takes a newlywed couple, and shows the bride work out her own system for supplying happiness for her husband. She has seen her father's abject surrender to her tyrannical mother, and decides that she will be different. Instead of forcing hubby to share her amusements, she goes to share his. The result is inevitable and not hard to foresee. When he wants to play golf with his friends, she accompanies him. The limit is reached when she lays down the doctrine that a wife should be able to share her husband's work as well as his play. She discharges his stenographer and takes the job herself. But the man rebels when she threatened to come along on a hunting trip. He fakes a telegram and says he is going away on business.

The climax does not arise from the previous action. It is a practically distinct line of action, with only a slight thread to bind it to what has gone before. The man is believed to be drowned when an overturned rowboat is found after the storm. But he has been washed up on an island, where his pretty stenographer is camping. His wife is told that he is dead, and the scenes which follow are not comedy material. The party, in mourning, strew flowers on the waves, and then discover the "dead" man on the island with the girl. After he proves his innocence all is well, and the bride becomes convinced that her husband never did care about other women, but that he simply wanted to enjoy his recreation with men in a man's way.

The story calls for several types, such as the henpecked father, and the shrewish mother. Mr. Barnes' performance is very creditable, and his personality is a valuable asset to the picture. The star's role is nothing very distinct, but she is entirely satisfactory as the young bride. The idea of the story, while a good one for the screen, is one that does not contain sufficient strength for a feature. And the hokum which fills it out is not in itself particularly zestful.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Wanda Hawley is the star of "Too Much Wife," the Realart picture which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. This pretty star is afforded one of the most interesting comedy stories of the season in this new offering. She plays the part of a young bride who decides that the solution of the marriage problem lies in the wife being able to enjoy her husband's pleasures. She plays golf with him; she wants to go on a camping trip with him. It is a case of too much wife.

But Wanda did not know. She had been told that a wife should not expect her husband to enjoy the things that she enjoyed. But she carried the readjustment of her own life a little too far. Her husband loved her, but he wanted to enjoy his sports in his own way and by himself. But Wanda learns her lesson in time, though the experience is bitter. It is bad enough to be too authoritative, but worse still to be too agreeable.

In the cast with the star in this production is T. Roy Barnes, one of the screen's most popular leading men. The story is from the pen of Lorna Moon, who is also the author of "Don't Tell Everything." The picture was directed by Thomas N. Heffron, who is responsible for many of Miss Hawley's previous successes.

PROGRAM READER

The sad lament of the henpecked—Too Much Wife! A wife who wants to be such a helpmate that she seeks to share her husband's business and his pleasures. Pretty Myra Morgan, newlywed, was sure that her husband would be happy. She would never henpeck him; never force him to share her pleasures which would be only boring to him. She would even go further; she would share his pleasures. She played golf with him; she wanted to go on a camping trip with him. But hubby rebelled. And at last she was convinced that in trying to be the most liberal of wives, she was really the most shrewish. "Too Much Wife" is the title of the photoplay which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. Wanda Hawley is the star, and she was never given a more satisfactory role. T. Roy Barnes plays her husband, and together they make a pair of screen comedians who would be hard to equal. The story is by Lorna Moon, and the direction by Thomas Heffron.

If you are in search of a cheerful evening, an evening crammed with fun and laughs, you belong at the ———— theatre on ———— to see "Too Much Wife."

CATCH LINES

Pretty newlywed Myra was going to make her husband happy! She was sure of that; she had a system all her own. Instead of making him share her pleasures, she would share his. Did she make him happy? She did; after she learned that a man would rather play golf and fish and hunt with men only. Wanda Hawley never had a more amusing comedy than "Too Much Wife."

The story of a young bride who put a new system to work to make her husband happy. But it had the opposite effect. Wanda Hawley, supported by T. Roy Barnes, are the leads in "Too Much Wife."

"NO DEFENSE"
(Vitagraph)

Adventurous Melodrama Carries Snappy Action

THERE are enough interesting qualities about "No Defense" to make it a satisfying offering for the average spectator. Even though it contains an arbitrary development there is presented sufficient action of a melodramatic value to please most every type of patron except the one suffering from dyspepsia. William Duncan possesses such a vigorous personality that he cannot help incorporating a vigorous quality to any subject he directs. "No Defense" is a type of story which gives him plenty of opportunity to inject vivid scenes, thrills, and that element known as suspense.

It treats of a man who woos and weds a girl secretly because her mother has ambitions to sell her to the highest bidder. The man makes a hasty departure for the West and becomes a hunted victim of the law. His partner, an Eastern gambler, has murdered a guide and stolen the wealth produced from the mine. The Mounted Police surprise the innocent man and arrest him, taking for granted, that their informer is telling the truth. It is a sympathetic role which Duncan portrays. He makes his escape in thrilling fashion and bobs up again in the East, to discover that his bride has married again, the girl believing that he has perished at sea, according to the newspaper accounts. The actor-director does not wait to build his action. He believes in thrilling incident. The first to occur is a rescue scene of the guide after he has tumbled over the cliff. The discovery of gold is well established, it being purely accidental and easy to believe.

Once back East, the hero is determined to bring the culprit to justice. He steals into his rival's home—the partner having become a successful shyster lawyer—and discovers that the villain has compromised his bride, now the wife of the district attorney. The latter, knowing the shady character of the lawyer's practise, is determined to punish him. Hence the intrigue. A quarrel ensues and the result is death for the culprit. The scene is well executed and builds a fine vein of suspense. It is melodramatic to the core. The woman's identity is carefully hidden from the authorities—so much so—that the husband is unable to establish her identity. Yet the hero refuses to tell, although his doom is sealed. The prosecutor unearths the mystery and learns that the victim is her husband. He is elected governor and promises his wife that he will grant a pardon in due time. It is only when she declares that she will tell the world of his innocence and shoot herself in the bargain that the executive grants a last-minute pardon to the doomed man. The scene would ring more genuine if the eleventh-hour reprieve had been awarded earlier. He indicates that a separation will occur in due time when the affair has blown over. There is much human interest in this picture, considerable pathos and no end of action. It is well acted. Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Directed by William Duncan.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"No Defense," which will be shown at the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— is based on an original story by J. Raleigh Davies, and is a Western production in which William Duncan and Edith Johnson are co-starred. Some of the familiar Duncan rough-riding is seen in this feature. The story gives the star opportunity to play the business and society man, as well as the rugged Westerner, the type of role with which he is usually associated. Miss Johnson as the society debutante around whom revolves a story fraught with tense moments wins favor with an appealing performance.

There is plenty of action in the story. It is one that holds the suspense from the first flash and carries several stirring and spectacular scenes. A leap over a cliff on horseback, a perilous trip down a precipice on a rope and several thrilling fights make this production one of unusual interest. The hero is secretly married and goes West to seek his fortune. There an unfortunate circumstance makes him an outcast, hunted by men, and his return to civilization leads to an exciting denoument.

PROGRAM READER

He leaped through the window to get justice! Accused by his partner, with no chance to vindicate himself, this man was forced to go to extremes and fight his way back to civilization and society. Just as he was on the homeward stretch an incident occurred that blasted his hopes. He was condemned to die; but a brave woman who knew his secret saved him in a most unusual manner. This is the climax of William Duncan's stirring drama, "No Defense," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Edith Johnson as the leading woman. It is a picture with a punch—a picture of mystery and suspense, with intrigue, love, honor and adventure in happy combination.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a typical William Duncan picture. Any exhibitor who has played the serials which featured him and which he directed will remember that he stresses action and thrills. So play up the adventurous angle of this picture, telling that it is replete with thrills, carries strong dramatic action and suspense and is colorfully staged and acted by a cast of favorites. The title can be worked out in several ways to stimulate patronage. Describe it as a story with a punch. Play up the climax outlined in the Program Reader. This will be giving an inkling to the plot without giving it entirely away.

"THE LAST PAYMENT"
(Paramount)

Pola Negri Not So Successful in Modern Story

IT will come as a surprise to many to discover Pola Negri in a modern story. She has flashed her personality and talent in such brilliant fashion in historical romances or costume plays that she seems almost like a stranger here. "The Last Payment" reveals the Germans attempting to approach the American ideas. They have much to accomplish in this direction. However, being able workmen and persevering in any line of endeavor which they undertake, it would not be surprising to find them equalling the Americans in time. The selection here has not been an inspired one. The vampire or adventuress type of story has been relegated to the background on this side of the water. It has outlived its usefulness. It has lost its appeal.

"The Last Payment" is a photoplay which features the gifted star in the type of role made famous by Theda Bara. That she is able to demonstrate her exceptional talent for expression in the modern setting proves that her work in the costume dramas was no mere flash in the pan. The shortcomings of the feature need not rest on her shoulders, but rather upon the weak story and the director who has not caught the spontaneity of the American producer. It takes a considerable long time to tell this simple tale of a woman's amours. She does not reveal her true character until the action has passed into the third reel, the forepart of the story revolving around her life in a desolate spot of South America where she is the wife of a rich and brutal planter. Being a Parisienne she longs for the boulevards and when a wealthy French buyer visits her home, the husband is conveniently killed by his peons in order that she may continue her romantic adventures.

The Paris life centers around the home of her young admirer where she is a guest and in the Bohemian atmosphere of the cafes. One scene shows her posing on a tiger rug in true Elinor Glyn fashion as exposed in "Three Weeks." Yet so vibrant is the star's personality, so vital and vivid her style of acting that she makes the role fascinating enough—which, of course, overcomes to a degree the weakness of the plot. The director guides her through various amours with young men. Her chief admirer is acquainted with her character by a divorced husband. She refuses to entertain his advances, preferring his father on account of his wealth. The youth eventually commits suicide. Thus she is brought up sharp with realities. The director has cluttered up the sets with mobs, especially in the cafe scenes, the people bringing a semblance of confusion because they seem to lack leadership. There are no tense situations and little drama is exposed. The photography is not clear and the settings lack artistic design. Pola Negri's assistants play their parts with good persuasion. The titles are well written and do much in lifting the story over the weak spots.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Lola.....Pola Negri
Pedro Maurez, South American cattle man.....Leopold von Ledebour
Henri Durand, cattle king.....Albert Patry
Paul Durand, his son.....Henry Liedtke
Jules Lambert.....Reinhold Schunzel

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The incomparable Pola Negri, the brilliant European screen star who created so great a sensation in such film achievements as "Passion," and "One Arabian Night," is seen to excellent advantage in "The Last Payment," a latest picture to be shown at the ———— theatre next ————. The story deals with a frivolous woman whose beauty brings tragedy into several lives and ultimate tragedy in her own. Miss Negri appears as Lola, the pretty wife of a South American cattle dealer. She meets a young Parisian and when her husband is slain by vengeful vacqueros, she accompanies the young man to Paris.

It develops that Lola has been previously married and driven her husband to ruin, but when she again enters his life, he recognizes and exposes her to the man who vainly loves her. Tragedy then enters into the lives of those concerned and the subsequent developments are as thrilling as they are dramatic and appealing. Pola Negri vests the role of Lola with exquisite art and in her support appear some of the best known screen players in Europe. There are several big scenes in the picture all of which have been splendidly handled by the director.

PROGRAM READER

In life's great whirl she danced to the music of folly! Through "Passion," "Gypsy Blood" and "One Arabian Night"—all tales of a bygone day. Until—here in "The Last Payment," she flashes into the present! This is the screen adventure of the incomparable Pola Negri in "The Last Payment"—a picture of Paris and its night life now! A picture glowing with gorgeous color, vivid with drama, sparkling with beautiful women. Miss Negri will charm you as the daring, dancing darling of Paris, who makes her favorites fools. You will marvel over her exquisite art. You will be charmed over the riotous masque ball and its swift, astounding ending! You will see scores of other dazzling scenes. So come to the ———— and see "The Last Payment."

SUGGESTIONS

You have Pola Negri's popularity to campaign here. Everyone who attends the picture theatre has heard of her. Tell that she appears in her first modern story. Make a big spread telling that she achieved fame in "Passion," "Gypsy Blood" and "One Arabian Night." She is your drawing card here—nothing else. It is a German picture and modern. And Miss Negri is your best bet for exploitation. Feature stories of her—also stills of her in various roles would stimulate patronage. Bring forth that she is the leading film actress of Europe. Tell that she has no equal on the screen in the interpretation of colorful roles. Calling attention to the fact that she was the star in "Passion" will bring people to the theatre.

CATCH LINES

Europe's greatest screen actress, the incomparable Pola Negri, will appear at the ———— theatre next ————.

"THE POWER WITHIN"
(Achievement-Pathe)

Thoroughly Satisfactory as a Program Offering

THE human interest note is a dominant factor toward making this offering a satisfying one for the average spectator. It treats of a modern Job (in fact the central figure bears the character name of Job Armstrong) who places too much importance in his own faith in himself, forgetting, until disaster threatens him, that a higher faith exists. He is a self-made man, is this Job Armstrong. Naturally he judges everyone by his own standards. He climbs to a commanding position in his industry—that of ship building, heedless of the biblical precedent established by the ancient Job. With the theme and characterization carefully planted the picture swings into its dramatic structure and reveals the figure caught in a maelstrom of disasters.

His daughter has contracted a bad marriage with a foreign nobleman who, acting for selfish interests, plots to gain control of the shipyards. The daughter dies and the son is killed. And yet Job, confident of his own strength, does not stop to seek spiritual comfort. There is a ray of sunshine which bursts forth when the son's wife, a French girl, comes to America bringing with her a little child. She recognizes the nobleman as the arch-plotter of her unhappiess. And when he is exposed the erstwhile magnate recovers his health and happiness. He is made to realize that he has been looking at life without guessing its meaning. Thus the dawn of new light brings him spiritual comfort for the first time. The material issues thenceforth are tempered with a real faith.

The picture, notwithstanding its theme and the suggestion of the title, is never preachy. It tells its little story with good emphasis placed upon its values. The notes of heart interest, pathos and sentiment, are well balanced. However, the villain is so obvious in his machinations that a shrewd business man as Job is represented to be, would certainly penetrate his character and safeguard his own interests. Robert Bentley is not entirely successful in portraying the nobleman, since he stresses the villainy in much the style of old school theatricals. "The Power Within" being a likely story of a man's fight against big odds and his groping in the dark for the light is sure to be appreciated as a story worth while. Thus it carries a moral. Pauline Garon contributes an effective performance as the French girl, lending to the part a fragrant and wistful personality which enhances the appealing quality of the role. But the conspicuous work is furnished by William H. Tooker as the modern Job. "The Power Within" is adequately staged.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A vivid drama of the disasters which may befall a man when he sacrifices everything for his own gain is revealed in "The Power Within," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. It is a story of a wealthy shipbuilder who is too wrapped up in his own importance to realize that his daughter has contracted a bad marriage. Her husband is a nobleman who plots to secure title to the shipyards. Soon after the marriage the magnate sends the Count and his son, Bob, on a wheat ship to Europe. The disasters come rapidly thereafter for the daughter dies and he loses his own health. However, he has enough faith in himself to operate the yards even though his business has lost something of its valuation The sinister forces of the Count bring the former wealthy man to the brink of ruin. Then from France comes Pauline, the peasant girl, the son had married and her little cbild. She tells of her marriage and Bob's death. When the magnate's cup is overflowing with bitterness, the girl recognizes the Count as the assassin of her husband. The result is the disasters cease and happiness is the old man's reward. The picture is told with increasing suspense through a line of action which carries strong dramatic situations. A well balanced cast interprets "The Power Within."

PROGRAM READER

What is the power withiin? Is it love? Is it force of will? Is it brain energy? Two hearts triumphed over misfortune by the strength of this power. What is it? What is the great inner force of human beings? How do you overcome misfortune? If you have faith in yourself, can you accomplish miracles? Can a man rise, fall, and rise again by the power of courage? These questions are vitally answered in the compelling and interesting drama of a man who fought against overwhelming odds and won—a drama entitled "The Power Within." It is a drama which contains romance and pathos, action and heart interest. It will interest everyone. It is a picture which is sweeping in its appeal. "The Power Within" will appear at the ———— theatre next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

The letter campaign would be a good angle of exploitation for this feature. Asking your patrons whether they know their own power or the secret of happiness or if they know how to rebuild their courage and fortunes, would start things off merrily here. The title is not suggestive of anything in particular—although it does indicate a something which pertains to the soul. Feature the picture as a stirring drama of the inner forces of man. Play up that the picture contains fine acting, contributed by William H. Tooker and Pauline Garon. Tell that it is a drama of a soul in anguish. Tell that it is the story of the secret of personal happiness.

"FLOWER OF THE NORTH"
(Vitagraph)

Picturesque Adventure Story of the North; Replete with Thrills

WHEN you see a picture which carries a charming romance balanced by conflicts engendered by primitive hates and jealousies, and told against a background of impressive scenes which take in mountains, turbulent torrents, forests and other vistas of the big outdoors—when you see such a picture which relies upon spectacular thrills, battles, colorful incident, you are certain to vote it a good entertainment. "Flower of the North," a Vitagraph special, is a typical Curwood story. It contains the qualities which one looks upon as synonymous with the author's name. Action, conflict, thrills and romance—these are ever dominant here. Anyone in search of good adventure need look no further than this picturesque photoplay.

One may not be looking at life, but more at romance. And it provides enough interest to cast a spell of illusion for the hour. The director has staged this story of conflict and romance against a background of rugged scenery. The atmosphere harmonizes perfectly with the intensity of the plot. You see an Easterner taking charge of an enterprise in the North country—a man who is determined to bring order out of chaos. That the culmination of his ambition is of no consequence does not matter. What does matter is the rapid development of incident which follows his appearance north of "53." The romantic note is charmingly introduced and when the hero rescues the girl from the turbulent stream — you catch the thrill. You admire the photography and the pluck of the characters. The heroine is in a paddleless canoe and the current of the stream is driving it toward the falls. She plunges in the river and the hero saves her. Thus is cemented a friendship which eventually leads to the altar.

Meanwhile there is revealed a crisp line of action having to do with the decent members of the camp triumphing over the lawless element. It is primitive melodrama here, a little old-fashioned, you will say, but thrilling, withal.. The vicious forces are determined to secure control of the district and embarrass the Easterner. The Indians nearby have suffered at their hands. In order to cast suspicion on them the villains disguise themselves as redskins and swoop down on the community store. Here is the occasion to add a healthy punch, before the heroine lights the signal fire which brings the real Indians to the rescue. There is so much incident that the spectator need not feel any lack of variety in the story. One element balances the other, thus effectig a good continuity of sequences. Henery B. Walthall plays the hero with his customary poise and repression. He is capably assisted by Pauline Starke, Jack Curtis and other players of good type and talent. .Length, seven reels.—Laurence Reid.

By James Oliver Curwood.
Directed by David Smith.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Flower of the North," the Vitagraph super-feature, which will be shown at the ———— theatre next ———— is an adaptation of James Oliver Curwood's vital story of the Northwest. It tells a story of the advance of civilization with Philip (played by Henry B. Walthall) in the vanguard breaking the trail. Sinister and powerful forces are surrounding him and retarding his work. Then the situation is complicated when he falls in love with a child of the old regime, Jeanne of Fort O' God, a daughter of French cavaliers.

There is a charming love story shrouded in an atmosphere of struggle, mystery and foul play. And the climax comes in the terrific night battle when the Indians wipe out their white enemies. It is a picture of the great outdoors. Stately forest, rushing mountain streams and rugged hill country make up the backgrounds against which the players enact their adventurous roles. It is a typical Curwood story, filled with scenes of tense action which unfold a rich vein of suspense. Mr. Walthall is assisted by Pauline Starke and others of talent.

PROGRAM READER

James Oliver Curwood's vital and picturesque story, "Flower of the North," has found its way to the screen and comes as a super-feature next ————. The story has been made into one of the most stirring and spectacular photoplays of the day. It is a picture of the Canadian Northwest in summer. It carries tense action, mystery, spectacular rescues, thrills, suspense and a charming love interest. The spectator will witness a wealth of action including Indian fights, night charges of enraged redskins, and a helpless girl whirling in the rapids as her canoe rushes on paddleless. It is a typical Curwood story, filled with those qualities which have made his contributions exceptionally interesting. Henry B. Walthall and Pauline Starke head a notable cast of players. Come and be entertained.

SUGGESTIONS

Bill this as a super-feature, adapted from Curwood's story of the same name. Play up that it affords the spectator a genuine treat in spectacular melodrama. Tell that it reveals a charming love story, that it is charged with thrills, mystery, the greatness of the big outdoors, rescue scenes, physical encounters, and every element which composes an interesting, exciting story. Feature Henry B. Walthall and Pauline Starke. Your crowd is familiar with their work. Get out the paper on this one and bill it like a circus. Your lobby can be dressed with appropriate atmosphere suggestive of the big outdoors. Play up the author. Use all the cuts and mats you can obtain from Vitagraph exchanges. Picture it as a big, vital and vivid photoplay.

"THE CALL OF HOME"
(R-C Pictures)

Well-Sustained Drama, with Excellent Flood Scenes

L. J. GASNIER has produced a well balanced drama in "The Call of Home." His theme starts with the eternal triangle situation in a conventional manner, but his story has good incident and holds the suspense up to the final moment. For a climax there are flood scenes which will compare favorably with anything that has reached the screen. If there are any miniature shots, they are exceptionally well done. The entire impression is vivid and thrilling. The waters creep forward to the camera, carrying everything movable with them. And long shots, cleverly cut in, complete the impression.

"The Call of Home" is enacted by an all-star cast, and even "the bits" are admirably executed. Irene Rich plays the leading female role, and Leon Barry and Ramsey Wallace are the two male leads. The story opens in an orthodox manner, when the husband, occupied with business, sees his wife continually in the company of their mutual friend. After a quarrel between husband and wife, the woman prepares to run away with the third party. She repents, however, at the last moment, but her husband is led to believe that she has executed her intention, and hies himself on a tramp steamer to South America. In an aimless fashion he wanders about the southern continent, and Mr. Gasnier, in a short time, does very well in establishing the "dolce far niente" atmosphere of the tropics. The man's trust in his wife is utterly destroyed when a letter from the home wrecker tells of an intended divorce. So he buries himself deeper in the wilds, and is rescued from drowning by a native girl. Her friendship turns to love, and the man, in gratitude, marries her. Here is an improbability, for there is no proof to offer the priest that the man is free. The flood scenes come in at the end and remove this second wife, the obstacle for a happy ending.

The principals do good work and there are some nice characterizations by Jobyna Ralston, Sidney Franklin and Harry Lonsdale. There is no danger of an audience losing interest, for there is plenty of suspense until the end. It should prove a perfectly satisfactory dramatic offering. The flood scenes are worth while. The dam breaks and the man goes whirling down the angry waters.

It is a sincerely produced picture, with no artificial note to mar it. And such a quality is greatly appreciated by an audience. Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Call of Home" which the ———— theatre is offering on ———— as the feature attraction, has been hailed by critics as a strong dramatic story of the longing for home which fills the breast of every lonesome wanderer in the world. It has an all star cast, including Leon Barry, Irene Rich and Ramsey Wallace, all of whom have a host of admirers among the patrons of the ————. Louis J. Gasnier directed, and the story is by George Agnew Chamberlain.

This is a picture which should be seen by all those who feel the lure of the wanderlust—a desire to break the monotony of home life, sever the ties that bind them to routine, and wander about the fairy spots of the world. In a tiny hut in the South American cattle lands live three men—men who have left home. Theirs is the loneliness that knows no comfort and no conciliation. But to one comes the call of home, and the possibility of realizing it. The man who had wronged him finds him in his loneliness to ask his forgiveness. The wife whom he believed unfaithful is waiting for him with a baby he has never seen.

In the final scenes of "The Call of Home" there are flood scenes which are probably the most remarkable ever filmed. Only infinite patience and great expense made these scenes possible for the screen, and the result is one of the most thrilling scenes ever pictured.

PROGRAM READER

"The Call of Home" which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— is a picture containing all the pathos and heart interest that its name indicates. It is an all star production, directed by Louis Gasnier. Mr. Gasnier has produced a picture that tugs at the heart strings. It is as different from the old time movie plays of a few years ago as the latest stage production in New York is different from the "one night stand" stock company. The screen has advanced in more ways than in mere technical perfection. A story is now able to be so human, so sincere, so moving, that it is able to thrill and impress as not even the spoken drama can.

"The Call of Home" is such a story. It has been produced with infinite attention to detail. The cast includes such players as Leon Barry, Irene Rich and Ramsey Wallace. The scenes are laid in New York, in a New England village and in the depths of Peru, where the wanderers gather in utter loneliness. It is a picture you will not want to miss.

CATCH LINES

A story of the greatest force, the most universal force, in the world—the call of the home. You will not want to miss this latest production of Louis Gasnier, "The Call of Home," a powerful drama enacted by an all star cast.

"AT THE SIGN OF THE JACK O' LANTERN"
(Hodkinson)

Original Idea Developed Into Very Good Entertainment

"AT the Sign of the Jack o' Lantern" is an interesting and amusing concoction of incident, half mystery and half farce comedy, relating the experience of a bride and groom who fall heirs to a house and lot and six hundred dollars in cash and incidentally become hosts to a house full of the deceased uncle's wife's relatives.

With an original idea, possessing decidedly humorous possibilities and requiring the services of a nicely balanced cast of characters, Director Lloyd Ingraham has developed his story with a fine regard for tempo and builded considerable suspense, not perhaps on the final outcome of the story but concerning what each episode is to bring forth. The wise fans will figure that the eccentric old man who has connived with his lawyer in several ways to embarrass his relatives is not really dead, and then be pleased to find that they have been fooled. Likewise they will probably guess that the whole thing has been framed as a revenge on the parasiting relations and be equally pleased in this instance to find that they are correct.

In producing the picture, particular attention has been paid to the selection of types with no one character so developed as to be able to run away with the show. Besides the newlyweds, there is a nut poet, a youthful cousin of the age of 96, another who has three very much spoiled youngsters, a widow with saw-tooth disposition, an eccentric cook and two young people who enter the household not unwelcomed and who finally benefit by the will of the eccentric gentleman of the "Sign of the Jack o' Lantern" house. The whole thing is ingenious and a welcome change from the cut and dried formula stuff. Possibly some may wonder whether it is to be taken seriously and question the advisability of making a picture that is neither farce comedy nor drama in its construction, but most people are going to call it a first class evening's entertainment in which a lot of clever players grab off acting honors for themselves and furnish an occasional real haw-haw and many a smile. Length 5,193 feet.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"At the Sign of the Jack O' Lantern," a mystery farce of unusual merit is the photoplay feature at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' showing beginning ————.

The story told concerns the experiences of a bride and groom who inherit a home and six hundred dollars and incidentally are forced to entertain a whole army of the donor's relatives before matters are finally settled and they are allowed to live happily ever after.

The picture was produced by Lloyd Ingraham with an all star cast in which Betty Ross Clark and Earl Schenck have the role of the newlyweds and such other players as Wade Boteler, Victor Potel, Clara Ward, Monty Collins and Zella Ingraham have important parts.

The picture is entertaining and has one of the most original plots ever conceived. It screens in six reels, every foot of which holds the attention. The production was made by the Renco Film Co. and is released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corp.

PROGRAM READER

The feature photoplay offered at the ———— theatre for the next ———— days is "At the Sign of the Jack O' Lantern," an original and entertaining mystery story by Myrtle Reed adapted for the screen by Lloyd Ingraham and David Kirkland.

"At the Sign of the Jack O' Lantern" tells the experiences of a bride and groom who inherit a house and plot and six hundred dollars from a deceased uncle whom they have never seen. They move in and soon after a whole house full of the dead man's relatives show up. Things go from bad to worse for the newlyweds and there comes a time when the parasites can be endured no longer. It is here that the original twist in the plot finishes the picture with a laugh and a live happy ever after ending.

The picture was produced by the Renco Film Co. with Lloyd Ingraham as director and is distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corp. In the cast which has no featured player are such favorites as Betty Ross Clark, Earl Schenck, Wade Boteler, Victor Potel, Clara Clark Ward and others of equal popularity with the fans.

The picture screens in six reels and is offered as one of the best evening's entertainment of the season.

SUGGESTIONS

Bill as good clean entertainment and play up the comedy angles with reference to the general idea on which the story is founded. Give the cast a good boost and explain the characters played in jazzy language. Tell your patrons that you have a picture with an original plot but do not explain what it is. The opening shots of the "Jack O' Lanters" house offers a first class lobby display idea.

CATCH LINES

Explaining pictorially what happened when the handsome young groom and the pretty little bride were forced to board a dozen of their near cousins for a whole summer and what came to pass when they finally revolted.

"LUCKY CARSON"

Earle Williams Will Please His Admirers Here

THIS latest vehicle for Earle Williams cannot be called much more than simply orthodox screen entertainment, which, while it offers little that is very startling in the way of drama, at least affords the star a role in which he will prove perfectly satisfactory to his followers. Mr. Williams can now count these in no small numbers. There are thousands who want to see him in just such a role as he has here. The picture starts him off as a down-and-out race track follower who is just about ready to call quits with the world and commit suicide. It ends with him in Wall street, manipulating cotton, and in the interim he has had his share of romance and adventure. His personality is as impressive here as ever, for there are well handled scenes which give him an opportunity to impress.

The story concerns a gambler who comes to America from England to begin life all over again. The United States proves to be the land of opportunity for him. He makes good at the races and later in Wall street stock dealings. The climax develops when one of the characters of the London sequence is reintroduced. This man has been indiscreet in his correspondence and "Lucky" Carson helps them in getting them back. When Carson's attentions to the woman are misunderstood, there is a conflict between the two men, with final understanding and clearing of the atmosphere.

The picture can well be sold to the public on the strength of Earl Williams' name. He is forceful in his acting here, as always. Supporting him are Betty Ross Clark, and Earl Schenck, and Gertrude Astor. Miss Clark makes an attractive leading lady, fulfilling all requirements. Earl Schenck is well up to the mark in his performance as "Kluck," the man whom the star first wrongs and finally assists. Gertrude Astor is the adventuress.

The long arm of coincidence is in evidence in the development of the story, a fact which may not be noticed by all, but will surely not escape the most discriminating. But as a program feature, especially where Earl Williams has a goodly number of admirers, the feature will be most welcome. The photography is up to the average, and Director Wilfred North has been able to establish the atmosphere to good advantage —Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

By Aquila Kempster.
Scenario by Bradley J. Smollen.
Directed by Wilfrid North.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Lucky Carson" is the name of the Earle Williams picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. It is an adaptation of a widely read novel entitled "Salvage," by Aquila Kempster and furnishes the star with a role in which he rises to new heights of dramatic ability. It is a role of contrasts. Mr. Williams is first shown as a down-and-outer, ready to end his life in the black water of the river Thames. Then a happy accident for him changes his whole career and he sails for America, where he corners cotton and becomes a millionaire, after making several hundred thousand dollars on the race-track. A man whom he has wronged while down-and-out follows him to America to secure revenge after the hero has made attempts to recompense the man for the wrongs he had done.

A charming love story is woven into the plot which permits Betty Ross Clark to present her charming personality in the opposite role. Others who contribute sterling performances are Gertrude Astor, Earl Schenck, James Butler, Coletta Forbes and Loyal Underwood. The story of "Lucky Carson" furnishes Mr. Williams with an unusual plot and a character in which he has opportunity to display his versatility. Wilfrid North directed.

PROGRAM READER

A tale of mystery, love, suspense and dramatic action—that is "Lucky Carson," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Earle Williams as the star. The Vitagraph actor is first seen as a down-and-outer and later as a king of finance. A man who is willing to pay his debts a thousandfold. He is even willing to sacrifice his sweetheart in order to right a wrong. The star takes the role of this social outcast reduced to his last penny and by taking advantage of fate, climbs back into Fortune's lap, a multi-millionaire. The picture is full of tense dramatic incidents, and is capably acted by a cast that includes Earl Schenck and Betty Ross Clarke.

SUGGESTIONS

You can best exploit this feature by describing it as a colorful melodrama which permits the star ample opportunity to flash his talent. A teaser and catch line exploitation would put it over with the public. Play up the catch lines such as "Can a man ever be considered lucky who has become down and out?" "Some men are born lucky no matter how many difficulties beset their path—what about Earle Williams?" Bill it as a love story, filled with crackling action and suspense. Play up the leading woman, Betty Ross Clarke. Play up that it is an adventure story filled with mystery and the human interest element.

CATCH LINES

A pleasing love tale interwoven with dramatic incidents that take place on two continents. See "Lucky Carson."

How may an unlucky accident be turned into a lucky adventure? See Earle Williams, the Vitagraph favorite in "Lucky Carson."

If your luck is with you—then you can face the world with a smile. See "Lucky Carson" with Earle Williams.

"THE SEA LION"
(First National)

Interesting Story of Heart-Hardened Seaman—Artistically Picturized

FOR diversion, a story such as "The Sea Lion," with the briny deep its locale, is refreshing. There are no automobile accidents, no luxuriously appointed drawing rooms, but there is the sea, and some more sea, with a tale incorporating how one man who spent his wrecked life on the waves of the deep, was the victim of a wretched plot, rather than an unfaithful wife, as he lived on through the years, believing.

It is about a sea captain, a hard master, revengeful, malicious and merciless. He is feared by all of his men. He finds it difficult to keep them for more than one voyage.

In the beginning the good ship is seen returning from a whale catch. Docking at San Francisco, the Captain prepares to sail again. He will not wait while one of his crew goes to take a look at a newcomer in his home, nor while another goes to his family for a short visit. Instead, the Captain issues orders to his first mate, to get two new men.

While docked, however, a scene in another world takes place. An extravagant son is "in bad" with a wealthy father because said son has been the dupe of a designing woman. The father lectures him, and practically disowns him, telling him he will have to depend upon himself, for support. The younger man, realizing his utter uselessness, in desperation seeks to be taken aboard the Captain's boat. He his laughed at, but guarantees to obey orders and work hard, so he is accepted.

While far at sea, first mate discovers what he believes a leak. It develops to be waste from the fresh water tank. Captain then corrals all the drinking water and refuses crew a swallow. Mutiny is under way, but the crew have no chance against the strength of the brute superior officer. Land is sighted. On the island they find an old man and a very young girl, who have been isolated thereon for sixteen years. In the end, a romance between the rich young man and the girl enrages the sea Captain, until, in the midst of a terrific storm, and facing death, he finds she is his own daughter, that her mother was spirited away. Everyone is saved and the hardened Captain becomes more or less human. This action involves some of the greatest fight scenes imaginable and there is a plot sufficiently complicated to hold an intense interest, throughout. It is bound to please the average audience and will find unusual commendation from men.

The cast is decidedly good, Hobart Bosworth giving the usual splendid performance. Direction is in line for favorable mention—the photography very good.—Length, 6 reels.—Lillian R. Gale.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

At the ———— theatre on ————, the attraction will be of double interest in that Hobart Bosworth, that sterling actor, master of his particular interpretation of characters requiring great physical strength and endurance (especially stories woven around romances of the great briny deep), will appear in "The Sea Lion." Determined to justify the reputation he has acquired for making sea characters live, on the screen, the star agreed to play the title role in the stirring sea film the action of which revolves around a domineering captain of a whaling schooner. Those who remember him in "Behind the Door," "Below the Surface" and "Blind Hearts" will be gratified with his performance in "The Sea Lion," said to be one of the most realistic films ever presented. It comes with the recommendation of a "First National Production."

PROGRAM READER

Life as it is actually lived on the Arctic and Behring Seas is shown in Hobart Bosworth's production of the "Sea Lion," which will be the attraction at this theatre on ————.

For this very realistic presentation, it was necessary to charter a boat, and with members of the cast, voyaged for four months through the northern ice-bound waters in order to secure the necessary realism and scenes required for the unusual story. It is stirring, thrilling and apart from similar productions, with a basic theme of what happenss among the people who live on sea instead of on land.

CATCH LINES

"All hands on deck" to see "The Sea Lion."

"A lion of the sea" is Hobart Bosworth in "The Sea Lion."

Irish Character Sketch Mostly Subtitles

THERE is an Irish background to this picture, the characters with one exception being Irish-Americans. And with such a title as adorns the story one expects that the plot and the protagonist would live up to it. But the punch is confined to the climax, the early scenes and the intermediate portion relying entirely upon planting of the figures and considerable dialogue. The title writer has not maintained a consistent flavor with his chatter. He would have the leading characters converse in "shanty" Irish of a blarney nature, except when they become argumentative—at which time they revert to good English. The psychology of all people who talk in dialect is well known to everyone. When they become emotional their dialect is so thick you could cut it with a knife. The title editor forgets this point repeatedly.

Herbert Rawlinson portrays the role of the hero and it is a role which does not permit him to show any action until the climax. His time is devoted in paying romantic attention to a fair colleen and erecting a skyscraper, his profession being that of a construction engineer. The plot is mostly of a blarneying character with the hero taking his rebuffs good-naturedly ,and since there is no incident, padding is resorted to in several instances to keep it at feature length. The star is allowed to pose considerably, which of course, is necessary owing to the shortcomings of the story which carries little action. When an interloper would embarrass him he engages in a hefty battle with his henchman and punishes him after a gruelling contest.

With this scene over the picture terminates with the hero vindicated. He has shown that he is a true Irishman, handy with his fists and a compelling lover. The director had brought out a good touch when the colleen refuses to entertain his advances after she has been kidnapped. As her temper subsides she allows herself to be conquered. Another good point is the appearance of the hero well bandaged after his fight. There have been too many occasions in the past when the leading figure always emerged with nary a sign of distress. It is a picture which did not cost a great deal of money, the scenes being divided between an interior of a home, a workshop and the exterior of the skyscraper. Only two of the players are well cast—Edward Jobson and Walter Perry. Had the titles been less flavored with "ould sod" dialect the other characters would appear more adaptable to their roles.—Length, 4,491 feet.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

This is a picture of a fighting Irish youth, who graduating from college and given to wearing a wrist watch, takes up the profession of construction engineer. The fact that he keeps his time upon his wrist is enough to make him subject to ridicule to the older workmen of his race. They cannot conceive that a true Irishman would cultivate such social graces. But the hero goes ahead with his plans—a song or a smile upon his lips and romance in his heart. He makes love in easy fashion—with a bit of blarney so to speak.

When a time comes that he is unable to stand the taunts of his enemies—well, he does what any good, red-blooded Irishman would do—he pitches in and fights to the drop of the hat. He emerges badly bruised but the conquering hero. Thus his sweetheart's father is reconciled to his courtship. It is a picture which is filled with Irish color and contains first rate character sketches. Herbert Rawlinson is the star of "The Scrapper" which will appear at the ———— theatre next ————. Others in the cast are Gertrude Olmsted, Frankie Lee, the juvenile actor, Edward Jobson and Fred Kohler.

PROGRAM READER

It has never been disputed that an Irishman loves to fight. It is second nature with him. Even when he has gone through college and had some of his instinctive qualities cultivated, he is liable to assert his personality with fire in his eye and a wallop in his fist. Take Herbert Rawlinson for instance. He graduated from college wearing a wrist watch. The old-timers were against him—they thought him a "kid-glove" specimen of Irishman. But he showed them that he could fight. Oh boy! You should see him in "The Scrapper" which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. It is a picture of Irish love and blarney and two-fisted action. Gertrude Olmsted, the beauty prize-winner, plays opposite. And what a lovely colleen.

SUGGESTIONS

This is an Irish character sketch which does not carry much action until the climax. But it does contain a vein of romance and sentiment. So play it up as a fragrant story of Irish love and temperament. Feature the fact that all good Irishmen are born scrappers. Get out the crowd. Play Irish airs in your orchestra. Decorate your lobby in green effects, artificial flowers suggesting the shamrock, etc., these will help in putting this offering over. Play up Rawlinson and his leading woman, Gertrude Olmsted. She won a beauty prize in a screen contest. So feature her personality in stills. An Irish folk-dance with Irish pipers and the usual atmosphere would make a fitting prologue. Bill it as an appealing drama of Irish love and action.

CATCH LINES

They called him the scrapper after he had whipped the Swede. Oh Boy! How that Irishman could fight! See Herbert Rawlinson in "The Scrapper."

"FIRST LOVE"
(Realart)

Entertaining Love Story—Novel Angle

DEVIATING from the ordinary, "First Love" is an entertaining photoplay, depicting everyday people in everyday life. It gets completely away from the "society drama," is refreshing in its simplicity and tells of the happenings in the comfortable home of Tad O'Donnell, a plain working man, the wife a natural mother and their daughter who works in a factory.

The principal characters are these parents, their affectionate daughter, ably played by Constance Binney, suffering with an infatuation for a worthless conceited young rotter—the cause of family difficulty. The object of daughter's initial infatuation is the type of good looking, spineless fellow, who preys upon the sympathies of women, tells every girl who loans him money, she is the only one he ever loved and delights in breaking hearts.

There is also a manly youth who owns the factory where the pretty daughter works and a whole-hearted woman of experience. She is a waitress, but her psychology of how to discourage a hopeless love affair by showing a deceived girl evidence of a man's duplicity, instead of adding fuel to the fire with useless words, would credit a Cassar graduate.

The story, founded upon an original by Sonya Levien, is thoroughly clean. It embodies many human touches, exceedingly well directed and exceptionally artistic in photography. "First Love" may also boast of a well selected and entirely competent cast. It is an attraction of general appeal, sufficiently forceful in plot, not "gushy" in love-interest and a production upon which an exhibitor may depend as pleasing value.—Length, 5 reels.—Lillian R. Gale.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"First Love," in which Constance Binney will be presented by Realart next ———— at the ———— theatre, is a story of everyday working people, to whom Dad's night at the lodge and daughter's first beau are important events in the routine of the work.

Several screen favorites will be seen in the supporting cast with Constance Binney in the stellar role. Warner Baxter is leading man, and other players are George Webb, Fannie Midgely, George Hernandez, Agnes Adams, Maxine Elliott Hicks and Dorothy Gordon. Major Maurice Campbell, who has directed seven Bebe Daniels pictures for Realart, directed this production.

PROGRAM READER

"First Love," the story of a working girl, sweet, wholesome and innocent, who falls madly and blindly in love with her first "beau," and refuses to believe what her father tells her he knows about the handsome bounder, is the photoplay booked on ———— at the ———— theatre. It takes estrangement from home, and months of the man's deceit to convince her at last that her first love was blind and that a worthier love awaits her. She fell in love with his eyes and her own were blinded to his selfish egotism and flabby character.

CATCH LINE

Mature love has its eyes open, but first love is stone blind.

This week and every week hereafter one or more pages of action stills from the pictures reviewed, will be presented.

Adapting Colored Light to the Motion Picture Theatre

Colored Light Can Be Used in Many Striking Manners

By A. L. POWELL, Edison Lamp Works

The progressive theatre manager takes advantage of every opportunity for making his house more attractive, in order that he may draw and retain a high class clientele. The creation of novel effects is one of his best advertising media. Novelty makes people talk. Talk is advertising. Colored lighting can be used in many striking manners.

There are three distinct applications of colored, tinted, toned or modified light in the theatre, viz:

A—Purely decorative effects
B—Used in connection with music
C—Used on the stage during the prologue

Each of these demands is different, although the general principles governing them are similar.

This series of articles will discuss, first, the methods of obtaining colored light; second, the effect of colored light, and finally, the ways of using it in each of the three applications outlined.

One may well base an analysis on the assumption that Mazda lamps are used, for they find application in practically all types of interior lighting. Their high efficiency, reliability, simplicity of operation, compactness and dependability are factors which have led to their universal adoption.

The light emitted by the Mazda lamp has a continuous spectrum, in other words, all the colors of the rainbow are present. Hence, since all colors are available in the "raw or unmodified," we have a fortunate condition for obtaining any effect.

Suppose we want red light, then we "subtract" or screen out the orange, yellow, green, blue and violet rays. If we want blue-green light, we remove the red, orange and yellow. If we want to obtain the effect of orange, we screen out the green, blue and violet portion. To remove any of these rays is a comparatively simple matter. It is only necessary to pass the light through some media which will absorb the particular part or parts we desire to lose.

A piece of red glass or gelatin, for example, absorbs orange, yellow, green, blue and violet light, transmitting red light. A green screen may absorb red, orange, blue and violet rays, giving a yellowish-green light.

From the above analysis, it is apparent that it is impossible to add anything to the light emitted by the lamp filament and all that can be done is to get rid of some portion that is not desired. Hence, all color changes of this character involve a loss of light, the exact amount depending on the color obtained. This means that to obtain the same illumination with colored light, two, three or even fifty times the wattage must be used in comparison with that used for unmodified, often called white, light. The following table gives some approximate figures on the absorption or loss of light necessary to obtain various colors of light from the Mazda lamp. These values are subject to considerable variation, depending on the purity of color secured and other factors.

Ordinary designation	Absorption	Transmission	Wattage to produce same illumination as with unmodified (white) light
Red	85 - 75%	15 - 25%	400 to 600%
Orange	70 - 50%	30 - 50%	200 to 300%
Yellow	40 - 20%	60 - 80%	125 to 150%
Green	80 - 90%	10 - 20%	500 to 1000%
Blue	95 - 90%	5 - 10%	1000 to 2000%
Purple	98 - 95%	2 - 5%	2000 to 5000%

Fortunately, as will be pointed out later, we rarely require a high level of colored lighting.

The next question is that of the mechanical means of obtaining colored light. There are several methods which possess certain advantages and disadvantages which will be analyzed.

A—Superficially colored, sprayed or dipped bulbs.
B—Natural colored glass bulbs.
C—Colored glass caps fitted around and clipping on the lamp or socket.
D—Colored glass plates across the mouths of reflectors.
E—Gelatin color screens.
F—Colored fabric, parchment or paper screens.

A—Dipped lamps are inexpensive and effective. If the bulb becomes broken, the lamp is useless but the color effect is not marred. It is a rather unpleasant task to apply the dip and breakage of lamps during the process is likely to be rather high. Very few of the superficial colorings are permanent, fading from the heat of the lamp and requiring new coatings at frequent intervals. Where lamps are located in inaccessible places this is an expensive proposition. Small relatively inefficient lamps must be used, for none of the standard dyes will stand up under the higher temperature of the gas filled or Mazda C lamp.

B—Natural colored lamps possess all the advantages outlined above and in addition are permanent, are available in any size, but of relatively high first cost.

C—Glass caps possess the advantages of colored bulbs, are much lower in cost, but where lamps are exposed to view, somewhat unsightly. To date, caps have

Opportunity

Very rarely, indeed, is it the good fortune of the exhibitor, art or musical director, to have presented to them the theory and recommended practice of the little known subject of colored light and the connection of light and music, there is a series of especially prepared articles by a most eminent authority along these lines. "Adapting Colored Light to the Motion Picture Theatre" is the first of this series, which also will include "Colored Light on Colored Objects;" "Decorative Colored Lighting;" "The Connection of Music and Light," and "Stage Lighting."

Mr. Powell has endeavored in his first article to emphasize the necessity of increasing the lamp wattage when employing colored lighting, although it is not desirous to employ the same high intensity as used with ordinary lighting. Mr. Powell also points out the various ways of securing colored illumination, explaining their advantages and disadvantages.

Again we wish to strongly recommend that every one connected with the motion picture theatre give these articles his close attention—Tech. Ed.

The Accuracy of Projection Apparatus

An article that recently appeared in the educational section of a western newspaper reads:

"Increased use of motion pictures in the educational field is reported from many sections of the United States but the increase would be even more rapid if better projection could be obtained, according to the statements of many men prominent in educational circles. Especially is this statement emphasized in the scientific field, where the motion picture is a peculiarly apt medium for depicting studies in plant and animal life, chemistry and physics.

"The great problem to be met in adapting the film to the educational field line of work," says a report from an eastern college professor, "is that of projection. In scientific work, accuracy is essential, and the film will become better suited to the needs of education when means are found for correcting distortion and improving still further on illumination and projection."

However, does it not seem remarkable the accuracy with which our standard projection apparatus is made? A picture when seen on the screen with a linear dimensions of 16 ft. presents a magnification of 256 times a linear dimension of the film. Thus is any part of the mechanism controlling the movement of the film should permit the film a loose motion of even so much as four one thousandths of an inch, the projected picture would jump more than an inch on the screen. This would be considered impossible projection. A variation in the sprocket holes in the film would produce the same result.

The large standard projection machine has been developed to a high degree of accuracy and efficiency and is a commendable example of mechanical engineering.

The small projectors used in the schools, homes, etc., are sadly lacking in the fine points of the standard machines.

The projector of to-day is not perfection in itself and improvements are to be expected. Nevertheless, if the proper installation and care of operation is given the apparatus, the projector itself can hardly be considered as a detriment to the growth of visual education.

American theatre recently remodeled at a cost of $150,000

Salt Lake House Is Redecorated

The American Theatre of Salt Lake City, Utah, owned by the Swanson Theatre Co., has literally followed the injunction, "give work to the people when hard times are on the land," and they have expended upward of $150,000 in remodeling and redecorating their immense theatre during this fall and winter. The building was already one of the finest in the west, with seating capacity of 3,000, the auditorium being ninety by one hundred thirty feet, with large stage, the finest organ in the west (excepting the Big Mormon tabernacle organ), and an ample balcony.

The pictures accompanying this article show the changes made in the front of the building, but do not tell even a small percentage of the improvements made. The vestibule has been wainscoted in marble, and has a new onyx ticket booth; the lobby and foyer have been redecorated and indirect lighting installed, elegantly furnished with lounges, and trimmed with palms and flowers. All the 130 feet of vestibule, lobby and foyer has been lavishly handled and are beautifully new. The promenade, with its ninety feet of gentle curves, ornate with pilastered panels, has been completely covered with murals, painted by the best artists in the west: Paintings of Zions Canyon, Royal Gorge, City Creek Canyon, Sunset on the great Salt Lake, Castle in Spain, scenes of Bird Island in the Great Salt Lake, with gulls and cranes, at great expense, and not yet completed.

The added attractions are the immense ballroom on the second floor (over the vestibule and lobby) 60 by a 165 feet, decorated in the highest manner, a place of entertainment which can only be described by superlatives. The basement, of the same size, will contain a complete billiard and pool room, with smoking and lounging rooms for the men, including barber shop. When finished the American will be the amusement center of Salt Lake City.

H. F. Jans Leases New Rivoli

It has been announced that Herman F. Jans, proprietor of the Goodwin Theatre, Newark, and interested in numerous other motion picture enterprises of note, has leased the new Rivoli Theatre which was recently completed and run for some time by Aaron Shusterman at New Brunswick, N. J. The Rivoli is one of the finest play houses in the state, and Mr. Shusterman feels very much gratified in being able to lease this magnificent motion picture palace to a man of Mr. Jans' standing and ability as a showman.

Mr. Shusterman, who has been identified prominently in New Brunswick as the owner of the Strand and Empire Theatres as well as the Rivoli, feels compelled to take a much needed rest, which is his reason for leasing this new theatre.
